SEVENTY-FOURTH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Tuesday, March 10, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 514) authorizing the completion of certain records and operations resulting from the administration of the Kerr Tobacco Act, the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, and the Potato Act of 1935 (repealed), and making funds available for those and other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] is necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

REPORT OF BELLEAU WOOD MEMORIAL ASSOCIATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the honorary president of the Belleau Wood Memorial Association, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the association for the year ended December 31, 1935, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the Kentucky Bar Association and the board of governors of the Oregon State Bar, favoring the enactment of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 237) for the establishment of a trust fund to be known as the Oliver Wendell Holmes Memorial Fund, which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Cumberland, Md., protesting against war and favoring immediate reduction of arms, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Private William H. Rotan Post, No. 219, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against the removal of Maj. Gen. Johnson Hagood from command of the Eighth Corps Area of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WALSH presented a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts, protesting against legislation that interferes with absolute neutrality or which might restrict trade with warring nations beyond embargoes on arms, ammunitions, and implements of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 5th instant, p. 3410, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

He also presented a resolution adopted in New York City by the executive committee of the Technical Association of the Pulp and Paper Industry, favoring an increase of $1,000,000 in the appropriation for forest-products research as authorized in the Forest Research Act of 1928, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Business and Professional Club of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of House bill 5051, to amend the Civil Service Act relating to termination of services of married persons in the Government service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented the memorial of Immaculate Conception, No. 294, Catholic Daughters of America, of Roslindale, Mass., remonstrating against ratification of the so-called proposed child-labor amendment to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of members of Local Union No. 1929, of Holyoke, and Carpet Workers' Local Union, No. 4232, of Worcester, both of the United Textile Workers of America, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of the so-called Ellenbogen bill relating to the textile industry, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the school committee of Ayer, Mass., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 2190) to provide public educational facilities for certain children where adequate educational facilities are lacking, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from the Worcester Laundry Owners Association, Good Will Laundry, Muir's Laundry, People's Laundry, Worcester Wet Wash, Home Service, and A-1 Laundry, all of Worcester, and the superintendent of Webster District Hospital, of Webster, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of legislation to repeal the excise tax on coconut oil used for soap-making purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Business and Professional Women's Club of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of the so-called Kerr bill, relating to the deportation of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Washington Council No. 14, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Allston, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 2969, relating to the deportation of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented petitions of the Parent-Teacher Group of Hingham, Mass., and Mr. and Mrs. E. Talmadge Root, of Somerville, Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation to abolish compulsory block-booking and blind buying of motion pictures, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from the Boston (Mass.) Chamber of Commerce, protesting against the enactment of Senate bill 3363, to provide for Federal incorporation of companies engaged in interstate or foreign business, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented letters in the nature of memorials from Hamilton-Menham Grange, No. 297, of Hamilton; Millers River Grange, No. 176, of Orange; Quaboab Pomona Grange, No. 15, of Leicester; Rochester Grange, No. 257, of Rochester; and Guiding Star Grange, No. 1, of Greenfield, all of the Patrons of Husbandry, in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the enactment of the bill (S. 1632) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by providing for the regulation of the transportation of passengers and property by water carriers operating in interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from the Alice A. Clarke Auxiliary, No. 28, United Spanish War Veterans, of Attleboro, Mass., praying for the enactment of the bill (S. 3545) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after the ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented letters in the nature of petitions from Local No. 47, International Brotherhood of Firemen and Oilers, of Brockton, and Local Union No. 141, International Union of United Brewery, Flour, Cereal, and Soft Drink Workers of America, of Chicopee, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the enactment of the so-called Black-Connery 30-hour-workweek bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 3870) granting a leave of absence to settlers of homestead lands during the year 1936, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1679) thereon.

Mr. NEELY, from the Committee on Rules, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3044) to amend the act of May 29, 1930 (46 Stat. 349), for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service and in certain positions in the legislative branch of the Government, to include all other employees in the legislative branch, reported it with amendments.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6544) to conserve the water resources and to encourage reforestation of the watersheds of Santa Barbara County, Calif., by the withdrawal of certain public land, included within the Santa Barbara National Forest, Calif., from location and entry under the mining laws, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1680) thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the bill (S. 4135) for the relief of Helen Curtis, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1681) thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on March 10, 1936, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 1837. An act for the relief of W. W. Cook; and

S. 2889. An act for the relief of the Bend Garage Co. and the First National Bank of Chicago.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4245) granting a pension to Dennis Moran (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MINTON:

A bill (S. 4246) to provide for the reconstruction of the George Rogers Clark Home and the erection of a memorial at Clarksville, Ind., as a memorial to Gen. George Rogers Clark at his home place, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4247) granting an increase of pension to Clara Y. Corben (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BAILEY:

A bill (S. 4248) for the relief of Clark F. Potts and Charles H. Barker; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCHWELLENBACH:

A bill (S. 4249) to provide for the appointment of First Lt. Wayne W. C. Sims, Medical Corps Reserve, as a first lieutenant, Medical Corps, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON:

A bill (S. 4250) to create an executive department of the Government to be known as the Department of Territories and Insular Affairs; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 4251) granting a pension to Mary Roode (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERTON:

A bill (S. 4252) to provide for the modification of the contract of lease entered into on June 12, 1922, between the United States and the Board of Commissioners of the Port of New Orleans; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FRAZIER:

A bill (S. 4253) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to enroll on the tribal rolls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations all Choctaw and Chickasaw claimants whose names appear in the citizenship cases hereinafter mentioned and who were duly and legally enrolled by the Federal court, and the heirs now living of all such claimants, born prior to the closing of said tribal rolls by an act of Congress; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 228) to enable the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Library.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 514) authorizing the completion of certain records and operations resulting from the administration of the Kerr Tobacco Act, the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, and the Potato Act of 1935 (repealed), and making funds available for those and other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill for reference to the Committee on Appropriations. I also ask that there may be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred, in connection with the submission of the amendment, a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States.

There being no objection, the amendment submitted by Mr. ROBINSON intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11691, the legislative appropriation bill, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill to insert the following:

"The appropriations for salaries and mileage to Senators and for clerical assistance to Senators as made in the act of May 30, 1934 (48 Stat. 817 and 819), shall be construed as available, respectively, for the salary of Senator RUSH D. HOLT, for the period from January 3 to June 21, 1935, and for the compensation of his authorized clerical help for services rendered during said period."

The letter presented by Mr. ROBINSON was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, January 4, 1936.

HON. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: In line with your recent request that a provision be suggested for insertion in early legislation that will allay doubt as to the legality of salary payments heretofore made to Senator RUSH D. HOLT and for his clerical help during the period from January 3 to June 21, 1935, permit me to suggest the following provision for inclusion in the next legislative branch appropriation bill, possibly as a paragraph at the close of the provisions relating to the Senate:

The appropriations for salaries and mileage to Senators and for clerical assistance to Senators as made in the act of May 30, 1934 (48 Stat. 817 and 819), shall be construed as available, respectively, for the salary of Senator RUSH D. HOLT for the period from January 3 to June 21, 1935, and for the compensation of his authorized clerical help for services rendered during said period.

Cordially yours,

J. R. McCALL,
Comptroller General of the United States.

AMENDMENTS TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL—RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. CONNALLY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11035, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 68, line 10, to strike out "$138,677,899" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$188,677,899."

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11035, the War Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

On page 68, line 10, to strike out "$138,677,899" and insert "$188,677,899."

INVESTIGATION OF RESETTLEMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BARBOUR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 248), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Resolved, That a special committee of five Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, three from the majority political party and two from the minority political party, is authorized to make a full and complete investigation of the Resettlement Administration with a view to determining particularly (1) the nature and extent of all expenditures made or proposed to be made by such Administration, (2) the nature and extent of projects undertaken by it and the advisability of undertaking future projects, (3) the effect of each such project on State and local taxation and on local real-estate values, (4) the extent to which such projects have benefited and will benefit labor, and (5) the circumstances relating to the securing of persons as tenants or purchasers in connection with such projects and the effect on such persons of becoming such tenants or purchasers. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fourth Congress and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpoena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $25,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

THE LATE ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address on the late Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered by Hon. Martin T. Manton, senior judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience, on this anniversary of the birthday of the late Justice Holmes, we must recall that it was John Marshall who molded our Constitution into a system of coherent and dynamic principles; it was he who gave it body and form. It was Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes who, more so than any other jurist in our national life, took the same principles and adapted them to the ebb and flow of the economic, social, and political currents of the day; it was he who breathed into those principles the breath of a newer, a fresher, and a richer life. He went on the theory, as he once expressed it, that "a constitution is not intended to embody a particular economic theory, whether of paternalism and the organic relation of the citizen to the state or of laissez faire." The greatest service of Marshall to his country was in stabilizing our political structure through the enunciation of certain fundamental formulas deducible from the words of the Constitution. The greatest service of Justice Holmes to his generation and those to come has been in making our body of constitutional doctrine rational, liberal, and modern. "The interpretation of constitutional principles," he said, "must not be too liberal. We must remember that the machinery of government would not work if it were not allowed a little play in its joints." Marshall spoke for an era of political reconstruction; Holmes for a period of economic and social reconstruction. To these two oracles of the law, our country owes undying gratitude.

It fell to the peculiar lot of Justice Holmes to show that the Constitution, if sympathetically interpreted, is adequate to solve any of the vibrant social and economic questions which arise in the course of our history. His frequent dissents from the conservative majority opinions go to demonstrate that questions of constitutional interpretation depend as much on the prejudices of the judge as on fixed canons of interpretation. It is in this respect that Mr. Justice Holmes' contribution to the cause of constitutional government is most noteworthy. Few have rendered more valuable service to their country; fewer still have had the capacity and vision to follow him. If ever there was one who, in high place, assailed outgrown and narrow views of our Constitution, that one was Justice Holmes. He realized that stagnation in the interpretation of the Constitution was intolerable if our form of government was to endure the shock of social and economic forces; and he betook himself to the happy task of calling upon the teachings of science and philosophy to build up a school of constitutional liberalism which is destined to become the dominant legal philosophy in the not distant future. He often charged his colleagues with injecting their own economic theories into the interpretation of statutes and the Constitution, thus departing, as he thought, from the judicial line of duty to interpret the law as it is and not to pass upon its wisdom. "While the courts must exercise a judgment of their own," he remarked, "it by no means is true that every law is void which may seem to the judges who pass upon it excessive, unsuited to its ostensible end, or based upon conceptions of morality with which they disagree. Considerable latitude must be allowed for differences of view, as well as for possible peculiar conditions which this Court can know but imperfectly, if at all. Otherwise a constitution, instead of embodying only relatively fundamental rules of right, as generally understood by all English-speaking communities, would become the partisan of a particular set of ethical or economical opinions, which by no means are held semper ubique et ab omnibus."

This apostle of constitutional liberalism would have condemned, no doubt, some recent attempts to maintain our people chained in perpetuity to the much abused economic doctrine of unrestricted laissez faire, for I recall that on one occasion, while still defending the principle of private ownership, he remarked that "As the size of a private fortune increases, the interest of the public in the administration of it increases."

There is not, in the history of our judiciary, another example of a legal mind, in so exalted a position, which has been more friendly to the interests of the labor movement, more opposed to the exploitation of child labor, more in favor of equal rights for women on the matter of wages and hours of work, more insistent on the fullest expression of the right of freedom of speech, more bent on allowing the fullest play to the forces of intellectual emancipation, and more vehemently opposed to the doctrine of the strict construction of our Constitution. If blind, selfish, partisan reaction calls—if it dares—Mr. Justice Holmes disloyal to the ideals and institutions of his country, those who view the future of our country with any degree of concern, will see in his resounding liberalism the only way out of the atmosphere of confusion, uncertainty, and reaction which seems to beset us at this moment. He himself had the satisfaction, while still on the bench, of seeing many of his earlier dissenting opinions become the opinion of the majority of the Court in later cases, and perhaps we may live to see the day when his broad views will become the prevailing tone of our highest tribunal.

The conflict now rife between the forces of reaction and progress in the judicial and political spheres is not new by any means. His masterly dissents from the majority opinions during his long and honorable career on the bench show that he could not always see eye to eye with his more conservative colleagues on important questions of constitutional law and policy. It was not then, as it is not now, the Constitution which is at stake in these clashes between the so-called conservative and the liberal wings of the Court, but some pet economic or social theory thrust into the Constitution by the exponents of the old order. It is in the refusal of the judiciary to see that the world moves on that the danger lies, if danger there be; it is in their belief that the Constitution is the receptacle of their own private economic or social doctrines that makes for doubt of the day and so ominous of the future. No judicial pronouncement or legal doctrine can hold back the momentum of the economic and social forces now playing havoc with preconceived notions the world over; and herein lies the essential difference between the liberalism of Mr. Justice Holmes and the conservatism of those who disagree with him—his views moved along and expanded with the times; theirs stagnated in dangerous contentment with the past. It is around the liberalism of Mr. Justice Holmes that Progressives of all shades of opinion should gather. He was a liberal, yet he was not a radical; he was a dissenter, yet he was not destructive. His dissents show that it is possible to hold two views of the Constitution—the view of reaction and the view of progress; that it is all a matter of preconceptions—of social and economic prejudices.

The views of Justice Holmes are all the more remarkable when we consider the traditional conservatism of the New England society of which he always was a part. Yet, like his celebrated forbears, he seems to have been endowed by high Heaven with an understanding, a humaneness, a practical wisdom, a polish of mind, a moral sanity and tolerance which contributed to build him up into the towering and influential figure that he was. His was a life dedicated to the service of the law, and especially attuned, morally and intellectually, to the delicate task of the judicial profession. He was the almost perfect type of the perfect judge.

THE LATE GEN. WILLIAM MITCHELL

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter published in the New York Herald Tribune of Sunday, March 1, 1936, relative to the late Gen. William Mitchell.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of Mar. 1, 1936]

GENERAL MITCHELL'S FORESIGHT—HE ADVANCED VIEWS SIMILAR TO THOSE OF GENERAL DOUHET

To the New York Herald Tribune:

In the passing of the brilliant and gallant Gen. William Mitchell, aviation loses one of its earliest and most earnest advocates. Military aviation in the Army and the Navy loses its most vigilant critic.

A skilled pilot with battle experience, General Mitchell's vehement fighting for his own views, while in the Army as one of the air generals and assistant to the Chief of the Air Corps, brought on a clash with Army discipline similar to the experience of his great Italian flying contemporary, the late Gen. Giulio Douhet. Soon after Italy entered the war, Douhet publicly issued his celebrated criticisms of Army plans and operations. He was tried by a general court martial and sentenced to 1 year in prison.

The Caporetto disaster so fully confirmed Douhet's predictions that he was released and placed at the head of Italian aviation. His subsequent activities, great air maneuvers, and his studies and writings much influenced the defense organization of the principal European powers. Most European countries now have a council or a secretary of national defense with three equal services—navy, air, army—each under a civilian head or secretary.

Mitchell believed that under the control of the Army and the Navy the new arm could never develop to its reasonable capacity. This came, in his opinion, from the fact that the older services saw the chief function of air forces as auxiliaries to aid the surface ships of the fleet and the ground units of the land contingent. General Mitchell visualized a separate air force coequal with the Army and Navy. He early predicted great increase in the speed, size, and range of the airplanes. He saw these qualities double in the bombers in the last 4 years. He desired large planes capable of crossing the Pacific Ocean and felt that aircraft carriers would never be able to transport other than relatively small airplanes.

The outlines of General Douhet's doctrine of war are—the land and the sea forces should maintain the defensive (illustrated in the great forts along the French and Belgian frontiers); the massed air forces take the offensive, not in the former effort to destroy the hostile army, but to penetrate deep into the enemy country; all the national armed forces of a country should be under a single chief. Also, to avoid duplication, competition, and cross purposes, the preparation and supply of all a nation's forces must be under a single organization.

We have had no comprehensive study of the general organization that is best for our own national defense since the advent of the airplane. The nearest to such a study was that of the Federal Aviation Commission (the Howell Board). This Commission of five civilians not connected with either the Army or Navy was appointed under a resolution of Congress and had $60,000 for expenses.

The Commission's work was the study and survey of all phases of aviation. The best organization for the national defense was outside the scope of the Commission. However, in its report of January 1935 the Commission stated, "While this matter lay beyond our scope, we have considered it so serious that we recommend that the whole problem be made the subject of extended examination by some appropriate agency in the near future." Congress has as yet taken no action on this pressing and wise suggestion.

WILLIAM C. RIVERS,

Major General, United States Army (Retired).

SENATE INVESTIGATIONS—ARTICLE BY JOHN T. FLYNN

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by John T. Flynn, published in the Washington Daily News of Tuesday, March 10, 1936, relative to Senate investigations.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of Mar. 10, 1936]

PLAIN ECONOMICS

By John T. Flynn

THE GREATEST AND MOST USEFUL FUNCTION OF THE SENATE IS INVESTIGATION—IT WOULD BE A PUBLIC CALAMITY TO CRIPPLE THIS ARM OF THE SENATE

NEW YORK.—An attack—apparently an organized attack—has been launched on Senate investigations. The indictment is that innocent people are dragged to Washington and mercilessly questioned without benefit of counsel, while their private papers are raked through and their private affairs exposed ruthlessly.

But let us see how far this is true. Take the great investigations of the last 4 years—first, the investigation of Wall Street and the banks by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and Mr. Pecora. Would anybody undo that investigation? What innocent persons were dragged to Washington in that investigation without benefit of counsel?

As a matter of fact, I can see the picture now. On one side of the table sat Mr. Pecora, patriotically serving the Government at the pitiful salary of $235 a month. On the other side was Mr. Wiggin, of the Chase Bank, surrounded by a host of the biggest and most expensive lawyers and an army of accountants and clerks. At almost every question asked by Mr. Pecora, Mr. Wiggin turned to his lawyers and accountants and held a little conference before answering.

This scene was duplicated a dozen times. These great businessmen could scarcely give their middle names or the names of their partners without consulting their staffs and lawyers.

And what was the upshot? The facts about banks in Detroit, Cleveland, the National City and Chase National in New York were brought to light. The head of the National City was forced to resign. Mr. Wiggin of the Chase, who had retired, was forced to give up his juicy life pension of $100,000 a year, and now the stockholders of the bank are suing for large sums. In Cleveland some of the bankers have been convicted. In Detroit they are yet to be tried.

That investigation cost about $275,000. It brought into the Government, from just two or three taxpayers, six times that amount in income taxes and must have saved countless millions besides, to say nothing of the great reforms effected in our financial system—the Securities Exchange Act, the Securities Act of 1933, the Glass-Steagall Act of 1933.

What innocent persons were dragged without counsel before the Munitions Committee? Those who think the Morgans were manhandled in Washington ought to read the record of the investigation. And can it be that any decent group is going to try to stop the lobby investigation, which has already revealed such shocking practices by lawless utility magnates?

During the Hoover administration the Senate passed a resolution limiting salaries in investigations to $300 a month. This was done to cripple investigations. Another method of crippling them is to deprive them of the necessary funds. That's the move which is on now. The greatest and most useful function of the Senate is investigation. It would be a public calamity to cripple this arm of the Senate.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10919) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, that it may be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee may be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Treasury Department—Office of the Secretary", on page 5, line 3, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,099,140", so as to read:

Bureau of the Mint and Mints and Assay Offices, including not to exceed $85,640 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $1,099,140.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of chief clerk and superintendent", on page 6, line 14, after the words "Treasury Department", to strike out "$520,000" and insert "$529,720", so as to read:

Salaries: For the chief clerk and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including the operating force of the Treasury, Liberty Loan, and Auditors' Buildings and the Treasury Department Annex, Pennsylvania Avenue and Madison Place, and of other buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, $529,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous and contingent expenses, Treasury Department", on page 8, line 9, after the word "for" and the semicolon, to strike out "$150,300" and insert "$160,000", so as to read:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses of the office of the Secretary and the bureaus and offices of the Department, including operating expenses of the Treasury, Treasury Annex, Auditors' and Liberty Loan Buildings; newspaper clippings, financial journals, books of reference, law books, technical and scientific books, newspapers, and periodicals, expenses incurred in completing imperfect series, library cards, supplies, and all other necessary expenses connected with the library; not exceeding $10,000 for traveling expenses, including the payment of actual transportation and subsistence expenses to any person whom the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time invite to the city of Washington or elsewhere for conference and advisory purposes in furthering the work of the Department; freight, expressage, telegraph and telephone service; purchase and exchange of one passenger automobile (at a cost not exceeding $2,500) for the Secretary of the Treasury and of motor trucks, and maintenance and repair of motor trucks and three passenger automobiles (one for the Secretary of the Treasury and two for general use of the Department), all to be used for official purposes only; file holders and cases; fuel, oils, grease, and heating supplies and equipment; gas and electricity for lighting, heating, and power purposes, including material, fixtures, and equipment therefor; purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriters and labor-saving machines and equipment and supplies for same; floor covering and repairs thereto; furniture and office equipment, including supplies therefor and repairs thereto; awnings, window shades, and fixtures; cleaning supplies and equipment; drafting equipment; ammonia for ice plant; flags; hand trucks, ladders; miscellaneous hardware; street-car fares not exceeding $500; thermometers; lavatory equipment and supplies; tools and sharpening same; laundry service; laboratory supplies and equipment, removal of rubbish; postage; uniforms for Treasury guards not exceeding $1,200; custody, care, protection, and expenses of sales of lands and other property of the United States, acquired and held under sections 3749 and 3750 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 40, secs. 301, 302), the examination of titles, recording of deeds, advertising, and auctioneers' fees in connection therewith; and other absolutely necessary articles, supplies, and equipment not otherwise provided for; $160,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits", on page 9, line 22, to strike out "$279,520" and insert "$285,920", so as to read:

Salaries: For Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits and other personal services in the District of Columbia, including the Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, $285,920.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I did not until a moment ago observe the presence of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I recall that 3 or 4 years ago he was very active and enthusiastic in his efforts to decrease all appropriations carried in appropriation bills. I observe that the three amendments which have been agreed to all represent increases in appropriations. I think some explanation should be made why increased appropriations are now proposed, when some years ago increased appropriations were so greatly condemned.

Mr. McKELLAR. All the amendments to the bill do not represent increases. There are a number of increases, but none over the amount estimated by the Budget, and there are several decreases, one outstanding one below the amount contained in the bill as sent to the Senate by the House. Does the Senator want to know about the item at the bottom of page 9, which is the amendment now before the Senate?

Mr. McNARY. I was speaking with general application. The Secretary starts to read the amendments, all so far showing increases in appropriations, and not a word of explanation is offered. I was just asking, in a general way, why so many increases in appropriations are now made, and why it is so popular to add to appropriations now when it was so wrong to do the same thing a few years ago?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator—

Mr. McNARY. I was directing my remarks more particularly to the Senator from Tennessee in connection with this particular matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will be glad to say about this bill, as I have about other bills, that where items needed to be cut down, I have endeavored to reduce them.

I call the Senator's attention to the amendment on page 61.

Mr. McNARY. I have regard to that amendment, but I think it involves a very large subject and should be considered specifically.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention, for instance, to something that perhaps he has overlooked. Take the post-office items; they have generally been increased to the amount of the Budget estimates. The reason is that not long ago Congress passed what was known as the 40-hour-week bill. The Department officials came before the committee and showed that with the 40-hour-week bill it would be impossible for them to get along on less than the amounts recommended by the Budget. They made out a good case, and, insofar as I know, the entire committee, Republicans as well as Democrats, agreed that these comparatively small increases should be made.

Mr. GLASS. I may invite the attention of the Senator from Oregon to the fact that the net decrease by the Senate committee under the total amount approved by the House is $14,711,277.

Mr. McNARY. I must repeat that I am not here to quarrel with anyone particularly, and much less the chairman of the committee. The Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], 3 or 4 years ago—

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Virginia is in charge of the bill, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I think so; technically.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; actually. I am here to help him and to take any responsibility that is mine.

Mr. McNARY. I am not complaining if it takes two Senators to handle the bill. In any event, I am referring to the Senator from Tennessee. As I recall, 3 or 4 years ago, during another administration, when I was in charge of the bill making annual appropriations relating to the agricultural interests of the country, the Senator from Tennessee, in a great spirit of enthusiasm for a reduction in the expenses of the Government, proposed an amendment decreasing every item carried in the bill 10 percent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and that amendment carried. May I say to the Senator further—

Mr. McNARY. I do not yield for the moment. I recall that as chairman of the committee I realized the reasonableness of some of the arguments of and to some extent the philosophy of the position occupied by the Senator from Tennessee and agreed to a reduction in several of the items. The Senator from Tennessee was not content with a 10-percent reduction, and in some instances insisted upon a reduction of as much as 30 percent. That was a few years ago, when the Senator from Tennessee was exhibiting unusual zeal in cutting down Government expenses. Here, today, partly in charge of the bill, he brings before the Senate a measure containing amendments which in practically every instance increase the amounts approved by the House.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. McNARY. Generally they are increases. What I ask the Senator is, What has caused the difference in his attitude and philosophy 3 years ago under another administration and his attitude and philosophy now? Then he strongly advocated decreasing governmental expenditures, and now he favors expanding them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Several years ago, when the appropriation bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon was brought before us, it carried extremely extravagant items. The proposals had gone beyond all bounds. Thereupon, in keeping with the spirit of the law which had been enacted, known as the Economy Act and in strict accordance with that act, I moved that the appropriations be decreased by 10 percent. As I remember, the Senate overwhelmingly agreed and the amounts were cut down.

Because of the tremendous extravagance proposed, the Senate took the same view that I did, and, as I remember, the Senator from Oregon took exactly the same view and supported the reductions which I then and there proposed.

The pending bill is a most reasonable bill. The Senate committee has decreased the total approved by the House. It is true that some of the smaller items were increased to the amount of the Budget estimate; in fact, most of them were. However, in the items for the Post Office Department, where most of the increases are proposed to be made, the increases are caused by a bill passed by the Senate reducing the number of working hours to 40 per week. It was absolutely necessary, as shown by the testimony taken by the committee, that the Budget estimates should be allowed. We would have to take notice of those differences anyway and would have to meet them either in this bill or in a future deficiency bill, and accordingly they were included in this bill.

I have no apologies to make. I have not changed my position at all. I think extravagant waste of money anywhere should be curtailed by the Senate on all occasions. I felt that way previously. I still feel that way. I think the amendments which have been inserted in the bill by the Senate Committee on Appropriations are all proper and none of them is extravagant. If the Senator has any doubt about it, I invite his attention to the fact that there are a number of Republicans on the committee who agreed almost unanimously to every amendment that has been recommended to the bill. The first real criticism comes from the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I am not criticizing the appropriations. I am merely drawing attention to the very different position the Senator from Tennessee occupies now as compared with that which he occupied a few years ago. This is the fifth bill which carries appropriations for governmental activities, and the voice of the Senator from Tennessee has not been raised against an increase in a single item in any of the bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. The position of the Senator from Tennessee is very different from what it was then. In the committee he had no opportunity at that time to accomplish his desire. He had to come on the floor of the Senate and to the best of his ability see that reductions were made in cases where extravagant expenditures had been proposed, as they were then. The Senator from Oregon agreed with me at that time, and I think the Senate is going to agree with me this time, that the appropriations carried in the pending bill are economical and should be granted.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Tennessee was a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry several years ago during the time of which I speak. He was a member of this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. I was; and I am not excusing myself in any way. I took the same position then that I am taking now, that extravagant appropriations ought not to be made. Where I found extravagant items of appropriation in this bill I made a fight against them in the committee, and the amounts were reduced or the items were left out of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I may observe that modesty never kept the Senator from Tennessee off his feet in those days.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; and modesty does not keep the Senator off his feet in these days. The Senator from Oregon is wholly mistaken about any change in position on the part of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McNARY. I still say the Senator this year and last year has exhibited a very different spirit with respect to appropriations than he did under another administration.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the Senator's opinion, and the Senator is welcome to retain that opinion if he so desires; but the truth is that the Senator from Oregon is wholly mistaken.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I hope we may proceed with the bill, and not with a controversy between Senators. I am a little curious to know why the Senator from Oregon should pick out the Senator from Tennessee for criticism when all the other members of the Appropriations Committee are just as much responsible for the bill as is the Senator from Tennessee. I am chairman of the subcommittee having the bill in charge, and heard every particle of the testimony.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand why the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] raised the question. It was, as I recall, because the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] was the most energetic and violent advocate of cutting down appropriations to the extent of 10 percent several years ago, and I think we all concurred in his efforts. Evidently at that time he did not have so much confidence in the Appropriations Committee when he disagreed with their recommendations at that time and proposed a 10-percent reduction. I wonder if the Senator from Tennessee would approve an amendment which I might propose to reduce all items in the pending bill 10 percent?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; because I do not think extravagant appropriations are contained in the bill which the committee has reported which would justify a reduction of 10 percent. I think the Senator from Michigan would make a mistake to offer such an amendment.

I thought I was right when I proposed reductions several years ago during the Hoover administration, and the Senate agreed to my proposal. It was adopted and approved. Why? It was because there were facts behind me, because there had been extravagant appropriations which the Senate could not approve. If there are any such appropriations in the pending bill and the Senator will point them out and state the reasons, as I did 4 or 5 years ago, I shall be very happy to join him in an effort to bring about reductions. I know the Senator from Oregon is a fair man and I know he would not propose such a thing without having positive information as to whether an appropriation should be reduced 10 percent. The facts are different this year from the facts which existed 3 or 4 years ago. Extravagant appropriations proposed at that time were cut down.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I suggest we proceed with the bill, and if any Senator desires to offer an amendment, let it be duly considered.

Mr. COUZENS. Does the Senator from Virginia object to our discussing the bill?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no; I never object to discussion. The Senator may proceed to speak if he desires.

Mr. COUZENS. The only point I raise is that the Senator from Tennessee offered a blanket amendment covering every item, without respect to the merits of any item; so it must be assumed that the Senator from Tennessee believed that every item in the bill was wrong, and therefore he wanted a 10-percent cut made in all of them.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Michigan wishes to be fair. When I offered that amendment, as I remember, this body was Republican. I think the Senator will agree to that, will he not? I offered the amendment, and when I did so I had the facts backing it up; and the Senate—which, at the time, was a Republican Senate—agreed with me that those were such extravagant appropriations that they ought to be cut down 10 percent; and, although the Senate was opposed to me politically, it voted with me, because of its belief that the appropriations ought to be cut down.

Mr. COUZENS. Of course, the Senator understands that the Republicans apparently were much more willing to cooperate with the Democrats at that time than the Democrats are willing to cooperate with us at this time in an effort to cut down expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Michigan has any facts to show that any or all of these appropriations ought to be cut down 10 percent, and if he will offer his amendment and give the facts as to why the appropriations should be cut down, I have no doubt he will find the Democrats just as willing to vote for a reduction as the Republicans were.

Mr. COUZENS. I have some doubt about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 9, line 22.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 2, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$1,273,210" and insert "$1,473,210", and in line 9, after the words "Federal Prison Industries", to insert "Railroad Retirement Board, Social Security Board", so as to read:

Division of Disbursement, salaries and expenses: For personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, stationery, travel, rental of equipment, and all other necessary miscellaneous and contingent expenses, $1,473,210.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Debt Service", on page 12, line 23, after the words "District of Columbia", to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,073,000"; and in line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,975,000" and insert "$2,048,000", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For necessary expenses connected with the administration of any public-debt issues and United States paper-currency issues with which the Secretary of the Treasury is charged, including the purchase of law books, directories, books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, and newspapers, and the maintenance, operation, and repair of a motor-propelled bus or station wagon, for use of the Destruction Committee, and including the Commissioner of the Public Debt and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $2,073,000: Provided, That the amount to be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia shall not exceed $2,048,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I have an explanation of that item?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is in connection with the Public Debt Service; and I read from the testimony:

The 1937 Budget, as submitted to Congress, contained an estimate of $2,073,000 for salaries and expenses, Public Debt Service. The House Committee on Appropriations, in its report on the Treasury and Post Office Departments appropriation bill, recommends an allowance of $2,000,000, which is $73,000 under the Budget estimate. The allowance, it is stated, is based upon the present rate of expenditure and the existing vacancies in the present number of authorized positions.

For more than 2 years the volume of work handled by the Public Debt Service has been greatly increased, due to the huge refunding occasioned by the retirement of the fourth and first Liberty Loans and their replacement by other interest-bearing obligations of the United States at lower rates of interest. The expense of new issues, of course, is borne in this service by the indefinite appropriation for "Expenses of loans." However, there has been an inevitable effect upon the regular work of the service by reason of these operations, and certain expenses for which the indefinite appropriation will be available until June 30, 1936, must thereafter be borne by the regular appropriations. It is not believed that the regular appropriation for 1937 can stand a cut of $73,000, which is the equivalent of 50 employees of the lower grades, without impairment and curtailment of essential functions.

I think that sufficiently shows why the committee allowed the extra $73,000.

Mr. McNARY. Is the Senator reading from a speech of his, or from something else?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am reading from the evidence in the case, as furnished by the Department.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator from Tennessee is reading from a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. The letter is in the evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Internal Revenue", on page 18, line 12, after the word "districts", to strike out "$48,512,980" and insert "$49,768,830", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes and to administer the applicable provisions of the act of October 28, 1919, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 27), the act of August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 872-881), the act of January 11, 1934 (48 Stat. 313), Public Resolutions Nos. 40 and 41, approved June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 1020-1021); and the internal-revenue laws pursuant to the act of March 3, 1927 (U. S. C., title 5, secs. 281-281e), the act of May 27, 1930 (U. S. C., title 27, secs. 103-108), and Executive Order No. 6639, dated March 10, 1934; including the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Assistant General Counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue, an assistant to the Commissioner, a special deputy commissioner, four deputy commissioners, one stamp agent (to be reimbursed by the stamp manufacturers), and the necessary officers, collectors, deputy collectors, attorneys, experts, agents, accountants, inspectors, investigators, chemists, supervisors, storekeeper-gaugers, guards, clerks, janitors, and messengers in the District of Columbia, the several collection districts, the several divisions of internal-revenue agents and the several supervisory districts, to be appointed as provided by law; the securing of evidence of violations of the acts, the cost of chemical analyses made by others than employees of the United States and expenses incident to such chemists testifying when necessary; telegraph and telephone service, rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, postage, freight, express, necessary expenses incurred in making investigations in connection with the enrollment or disbarment of practitioners before the Treasury Department in internal-revenue matters, expenses of seizure and sale, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, including stenographic reporting services; for the acquisition of property under the provisions of title III of the Liquor Law Repeal and Enforcement Act, approved August 27, 1935 (49 Stat. 872-881), and the operation, maintenance, and repair of property acquired under such title III; for the purchase (not exceeding $50,000), exchange, hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled or horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary, for official use of the Alcohol Tax Unit in field work; and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, laboratory supplies, law books and books of reference, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia, the several collection districts, the several divisions of internal-revenue agents, and the several supervisory districts, $49,768,830, of which amount not to exceed $9,527,740 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Federal Alcohol Administration", on page 20, line 19, after the word "evidence", to strike out "and" and insert "of", so as to read:

Salaries and expenses: For the purpose of administering the provisions of the Federal Alcohol Administration Act, approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), including personal and other services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; supplies and materials; equipment; communication service; stationery; travel and subsistence expenses as authorized by law; maintenance, repair, and operation of automobiles; law books, books of reference, magazines, periodicals, and newspapers; contract stenographic reporting service; the securing of evidence of violations of the act; and miscellaneous and contingent expenses; $400,000, of which sum not to exceed $218,800 shall be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast Guard", on page 23, line 6, after the word "duty", to strike out "in the District of Columbia" and insert "at Coast Guard headquarters", so as to read:

Office of the Commandant: For personal services in the District of Columbia, $389,240: Provided, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay any enlisted man of the Coast Guard while detailed for duty at Coast Guard headquarters if such detail increases the total number of enlisted men detailed on such duty at any time above 10.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask that that item be passed over, since I propose to offer an amendment to it later on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 16, after the word "men", to strike out "$17,512,000" and insert "$17,580,933", so as to read:

Pay and allowances: For pay and allowances prescribed by law for commissioned officers, cadets, warrant officers, petty officers, and other enlisted men, active and retired, temporary cooks, surfmen, substitute surfmen, and two civilian instructors, including not to exceed $94,000 for retired pay for certain members of the former Life Saving Service authorized by the act approved April 14, 1930 (U. S. C., title 14, sec. 178 a), and not exceeding $6,000 for cash prizes for men for excellence in gunnery, target practice, and engineering competitions, for carrying out the provisions of the act of June 4, 1920 (U. S. C., title 34, sec. 943), rations or commutation thereof for cadets, petty officers, and other enlisted men, mileage and expenses allowed by law for officers; and traveling expenses for other persons traveling on duty under orders from the Treasury Department, including transportation of enlisted men and applicants for enlistment, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof, expenses of recruiting for the Coast Guard, rent of rendezvous, and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; transportation and packing allowances for baggage or household effects of commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men, $17,580,933.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 12, after the word "station", to strike out "or of any permanent extension at any aviation shore station", so as to read:

No part of the appropriations contained in this act under the Coast Guard, nor of any appropriation heretofore made, shall be used for the construction for the Coast Guard of any new permanent aviation shore station, but this limitation shall not apply to expenditures for completion of construction for which funds were made available prior to February 5, 1936.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator explain that amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Striking out these words is almost entirely, if not quite entirely, for the purpose of clarifying the language of the appropriation. It has not any real effect. It is purely a question of language.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if language means anything in a Democratic administration or not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it means just as much in a Democratic administration as it does in a Republican administration.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator try to explain this language which he says is so simple? He himself does not seem to understand it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. GLASS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. The minority having no other issue, why not allow them to find one in this bill, so that they may go before the country with it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very happy to do so. If the Senator from Michigan will read the paragraph, he will see that what I have stated is correct.

Mr. COUZENS. I have read it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, Commander Waesche appeared before the committee and asked that those words be stricken out, because they were not at all necessary. He said:

We feel that it may well interfere with the improvements and extensions to air stations in the way of ramps, fueling systems, etc.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask whether this inhibition has been in prior bills, or whether this is a new undertaking?

Mr. GLASS. That I do not know, and the testimony does not show.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. GLASS. I do.

Mr. HALE. The House, as I understand, provided that no part of the appropriation should be used for the construction of any new permanent aviation shore station, or any permanent extension of any existing aviation shore station.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. HALE. The Senate committee cut out the provision applying to the permanent extension of any existing aviation shore station, so that the Coast Guard may make improvements to existing stations, but they may not start any new ones.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; for which the Senator from Maine voted.

Mr. HALE. I voted for it because it was justifiable.

Mr. GLASS. So did I.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and the words which are the subject of the amendment ought to be stricken out, just as the committee has recommended.

Mr. HALE. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask some member of the Appropriations Committee for the reason which justifies the large appropriation for the Coast Guard.

I remember that a number of years ago, during the period of prohibition, it was urged with a great deal of zeal upon both sides of the Chamber that we must strengthen the Coast Guard Service; and, as I recall, upon one occasion we appropriated $12,000,000 to build or buy new boats for the Coast Guard. The prohibition question now has been relegated to the rear, and the reason which then impelled those large appropriations does not now exist. It seems to me we are trying to build up the Coast Guard Service as a sort of an adjunct to the Navy or, rather, to perform the duties of a second navy. I think the appropriations for the Coast Guard are entirely too large.

Mr. GLASS. Responding to the Senator, I think the item to which he refers has been passed over; but we are perfectly willing to return to it if the Senator wishes us to do so.

Commander Waesche testified before the committee:

We are up against a very difficult situation in connection with repair appropriations. In the first place, we have increased our aviation facilities, which has increased the amount of money needed for repairs to planes and the appropriation for repairs has not been proportionately increased. In addition a number of our vessels at the present time are reaching the stage where they need major reconditioning all at one time. We built a number of vessels from 1924 to 1928, and that whole group of vessels are reaching the point where they all need major repairs.

I will say to the Senator, however, that the appropriation is within the Budget estimate.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that would not be a compelling argument so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GLASS. It is not compelling to me; but I desired to have the Senate have the information.

Mr. KING. In my opinion, the Budget Bureau has been too generous in many of the appropriations it has recommended. It is apparent that the reasons which formerly justified the large appropriations for the Coast Guard Service do not now exist. Having once built up the organization, however, the determination is to perpetuate it; and as the years go by we shall find demands for an increase in the appropriations for the Coast Guard.

Moreover, everyone knows that our foreign trade and commerce has been materially diminished. Formerly it was alleged that the Coast Guard Service was necessary for the protection of our coasts against smuggling, and we were told that because of the increase in importations we needed to have Coast Guard vessels at the various ports. A few years ago customs duties from imports brought into the country amounted to between five and six hundred million dollars. Now that they are cut in two, amounting to perhaps less than $300,000,000 last year, we are still keeping up this high standard of appropriations, though there is not now the necessity for the large Coast Guard Service that was built up during prohibition, and during the period when the customs receipts were very great.

Personally, I think there ought to be a great reduction. The Senator just called attention to the testimony, wherein it was stated that some of the Coast Guard boats built only a few years ago are now, not obsolete but in need of repairs. Even battleships and other great naval craft which we build for our Navy have a life tenure of 25 to 30 years, although some of the navalists insist that the longevity period should be reduced materially. But many of the Coast Guard boats are practically new, and those asking the appropriations are justifying these enormous demands for the Coast Guard Service by alleging that these vessels, many of which are new, need extensive repairs.

I desire to challenge attention to another point. I think the Government is at fault in having so many organizations engaged in the acquisition of airplanes. If we should pursue a wise course, we would have one organization, whether it was under the Army or under the Navy, or under any other organization. It should be a board or an organization which would receive the proof in regard to the demands for aviation, whether on land or sea, or for the Coast Guard or what not. If we establish, as we are establishing, half a dozen organizations to build, or to acquire by purchase or otherwise, airplanes for Government service, we are bound to have duplication. We cannot develop a scientific and properly coordinated system by having half a dozen organizations engaged in the manufacture or purchase of airplanes, either for peace or for war.

Great Britain is realizing this fact, and the Government of Great Britain has now done what we ought to have done. I have a bill pending here to accomplish that result, and I have offered it repeatedly. Great Britain is bringing under one organization all of the forces which make for the defense of the nation. Then she will have an assistant secretary for the Army, an assistant secretary for the Navy, and an assistant secretary for aviation, but there will be one coordinated organization. Here we are scattering our organizations, when, in the interest of efficiency and in the interest of better government, we ought to consolidate in the interest of economy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, on page 25, line 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall later move to amend.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I draw the attention of the Senate to a statement appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 6, 1932? I quote from the statement:

It seems that the administration has been proceeding on the plan that it was all poppycock about our having an empty Treasury; that it was merely a vague assertion that we have one, and that all we had to do to bring about prosperity was to continue to get money out of a bankrupt Treasury and distribute it among the people.

I wonder if Senators can tell whether it was a Republican or a Democrat who made that speech.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall.

Mr. GLASS. I do not recall.

Mr. COUZENS. Senators will find that the speech was made by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], who was at that time driving down appropriations because they were drawing upon an empty Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will look at the record, he will find that under the Hoover administration the national debt was increased $5,000,000,000, and they might as well have gone out and burned that money, and thrown the ashes to the winds. It was a reckless extravagance, and the criticism I made at that time was a proper one, if I made the criticism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 15, after the word "heading" and the semicolon, to strike out "$175,000" and insert "$180,000", so as to read:

Contingent expenses: For contingent expenses, including subsistence of shipwrecked and destitute persons succored by the Coast Guard and of prisoners while in the custody of the Coast Guard; for the recreation, amusement, comfort, contentment, and health of the enlisted men of the Coast Guard, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $40,000; instruments and apparatus, supplies, technical books and periodicals, services necessary to the carrying on of scientific investigation, and not exceeding $4,000 for experimental and research work; care, transportation, and burial of deceased officers and enlisted men, including those who die in Government hospitals; wharfage, towage, freight, storage, advertising, surveys, medals, labor, newspapers, and periodicals for statistical purposes; not to exceed $5,000 for cost of special instruction, including maintenance of students; and all other necessary expenses which are not included under any other heading, $180,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 17, after the word "boats", to change the appropriation for repairs to Coast Guard vessels and boats from $1,800,000 to $1,900,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 24, after the word "office", to change the total appropriation under the Coast Guard, exclusive of Commandant's office, from $23,-631,330 to $23,805,263.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I not only desire that the Senate shall not agree to this increase, although it is small—two or three hundred thousand dollars is not much—but I should like to move to reduce the appropriation for the Coast Guard to $20,000,000, and if the amendment is proper at this time, I shall submit it.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, does the Senator desire now to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to?

Mr. KING. The clerk just read the item. I did not know it had been agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator knows this is just the total that is allowed.

Mr. KING. I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator desires to move to amend it?

Mr. KING. If my motion should prevail, it would necessitate perhaps a return to the various items and would necessitate scaling them down so as to come within the total. Perhaps it would be better to offer the amendment as an independent motion as to each of the items which swell the total to $23,000,000.

Mr. GLASS. The Senate could better understand then what the Senator from Utah desired to do.

Mr. KING. I will ask that the amendment be passed over, and I shall recur to it and move to amend some of the items so as to bring the total within $20,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment? The Chair was unable to hear the Senator.

Mr. KING. I move to strike out "$23,805,263" and to insert in lieu thereof "$20,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah offers an amendment to the committee amendment, which the clerk will state.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 26, line 24, it is proposed to strike out "$23,805,263" and to insert in lieu thereof "$20,000,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I indicated, this is perhaps not the most logical way to proceed. In order to attack this item perhaps it would be necessary to reconsider the votes by which the preceding amendments were agreed to, which, added together, make the $23,000,000. But if my motion shall prevail, and the appropriation shall be reduced to $20,000,000, I will then return to the various items which aggregate the $23,000,000 and ask for corresponding reductions in them, so as to bring the total to $20,000,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 26, line 24.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Secret Service Division", on page 29, line 3, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$53,160"; so as to read:

Salaries: For the Chief of the Division and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $53,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 25, after the name "United States", to strike out "$850,000" and insert "$906,575", so as to read:

Suppressing counterfeiting and other crimes: For expenses incurred under the authority or with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury in detecting, arresting, and delivering into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction dealers and pretended dealers in counterfeit money and persons engaged in counterfeiting, forging, and altering United States notes, bonds, national bank notes, Federal Reserve notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and other obligations and securities of the United States and of foreign governments, as well as the coins of the United States and of foreign governments, and other crimes against the laws of the United States relating to the Treasury Department and the several branches of the public service under its control; purchase (not to exceed $25,000), exchange, hire, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles when necessary; purchase of arms and ammunition; traveling expenses; and for no other purpose whatsoever, except in the performance of other duties specifically authorized by law, and in the protection of the person of the President and the members of his immediate family and of the person chosen to be President of the United States, $906,575.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have a statement of the reasons for the increase in this appropriation.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the explanation is that Mr. Moran, who has been at the head of the Secret Service of the Government for 35 years and who is universally regarded as a very conservative as well as a very discerning, acute man, came before the committee and pointed out that this appropriation was necessary. He said:

We carried this year and were allowed on our regular force 180. When you deduct from that 27 clerks or field clerks and 15 men assigned to the White House work for the protection of the President and his family you only have about 137 or 138 field men to cover the United States. With that force we must protect the country, the people of this country against counterfeiters and forgers and the like.

Our duties have been increased very materially in the last 2 or 3 years. We do all of the work of the Farm Credit Board. We do all the work in connection with the adjusted-service certificates. We are now charged with work under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service", on page 35, line 19, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$24,500" and insert "$27,740", and on page 36, line 8, after the word "vehicles" and the semicolon, to strike out "$663,220" and insert "$666,460", so as to read:

Division of Mental Hygiene: For carrying out the provisions of section 4 of the act of June 14, 1930 (U. S. C., title 21, secs. 196 and 225); for maintenance and operation of the narcotic farm, Lexington, Ky., in accordance with the provisions of the act of January 19, 1929 (U. S. C., title 21, secs. 221-237), including personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $27,740) and elsewhere; traveling expenses; necessary supplies and equipment; subsistence and care of inmates; expenses incurred in pursuing and identifying escaped inmates and of interment or transporting remains of deceased inmates; purchase and exchange of farm products and livestock; law books, books of reference, newspapers, and periodicals; furnishing and laundering of uniforms and other distinctive wearing apparel necessary for employees in the performance of their official duties; transportation when necessary, within continental United States and under regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, of persons voluntarily admitted and discharged as cured; tobacco for inmates; purchase and exchange, not to exceed $800, and maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, $666,460.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 20, after the word "work", to strike out "$1,155,160" and insert "$1,500,000", so as to read:

Diseases and sanitation investigations: For carrying out the provisions of section 603 of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, and section 1 of the act of August 14, 1912, including rent and personnel and other services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and items otherwise properly chargeable to the appropriations for printing and binding, stationery, and miscellaneous and contingent expenses for the Treasury Department, the provisions of section 6, act of August 23, 1912 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 669), to the contrary notwithstanding, the packing, crating, drayage, and transportation of the personal effects of commissioned officers, scientific personnel, pharmacists, and nurses of the Public Health Service upon permanent change of station, and including the purchase (not to exceed $5,000), exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles for official use in field work, $1,500,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of that substantial increase.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am very glad to give the Senator the facts as stated by the Secretary of the Treasury. His statement is to be found on pages 52, 53, 54, and 55 of the hearing. The committee asked the reason for the estimate, and Dr. Thompson responded as follows:

Well, Mr. Chairman, under the Security Act there is authorized to be expended annually $2,000,000 for research and investigation of public health, including the necessary technical work to the States in supervising the allotment of $8,000,000 for public health work in the States, and in the regular appropriation to the Public Health Service for this particular line of work we had $255,160, making a total of $2,255,160.

The Director of the Budget, however, estimated that $1,500,000 would be sufficient for this work and it was afterward reduced by the House committee to $1,155,160.

Senator McKELLAR. Now, what are you supposed to do with the $345,000?

Dr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, it mostly goes into two general fields of work; in industrial hygiene, which is the study of the health problems in industry; and into our National Institute of Health, in which we have control of biologics. There is need of a great deal of additional research work in connection with the control of biologics in this country.

Senator McKELLAR. Well, you have more money than you had last year?

Dr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir; we have more money, Mr. Chairman, considerably more; but these problems are very real and are very important. We have confronting us in industrial hygiene the question of silicosis.

Dust in mines—a matter which has been very much in the public notice during the past few weeks and months, as the Senator will recall.

There is need for a lot of studies of the silicates, which at the present time we have no satisfactory information about as to whether they are harmful dusts or not, and unless we can have funds to make investigations of the silicates and other similar dusts where we also have very little information—

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Do I understand correctly that the Appropriations Committee accepted this increase without any itemization of the way in which the money was to be expended?

Mr. McKELLAR. The committee provided it for the purposes distinctly stated by Dr. Thompson—for investigation work in industrial hygiene, which we have just explained, and also for our National Institute of Health, in which, as he said, "we have control of biologics."

Mr. GLASS. If the Senator from Michigan will refer to page 721 of the House hearings—

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I have no such copy. There is no such copy on the desk of Senators.

Mr. GLASS. I shall be glad to lend the Senator a copy.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to have the Senator advise me concerning this matter.

Mr. GLASS. There is a break-down which appears in the hearings.

Mr. COUZENS. It does not appear in the record just how those increases are brought about.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read the break-down:

1. Bureau administration.....	$41,795
2. Cancer investigations.....	79,030

And certainly there is nothing more important.

3. Child hygiene investigations.....	$49,780
4. Clinical research studies.....	33,520
5. Cooperative studies.....	44,858
6. Dental studies.....	20,800
7. Dermatoses investigations.....	12,645
8. Heart disease studies.....	23,740
9. Industrial hygiene investigations.....	143,460
10. Leprosy investigations.....	21,280
11. Malaria investigations.....	87,740
12. Mental hygiene studies.....	29,040
13. Milk investigations.....	89,060
14. National Institute of Health.....	309,546
15. Nutrition studies.....	21,100

The next provision is made for a subject I cannot pronounce, but which is epidemiology. I believe I have pronounced it properly. If that pronouncement is improper, any Senator who wishes to do so may correct me.

16. Poliomyelitis (epidemiology).....	$35,985
17. Public health instruction.....	9,211
18. Public health methods.....	30,320
19. Rocky Mountain spotted fever.....	28,650
20. Statistical investigations.....	55,065
21. Stream pollution investigations.....	119,830
22. Tuberculosis investigations.....	26,200
23. Venereal disease studies.....	33,540
24. Vital statistics.....	17,130
25. Supervision of State activities—sec. 601, title 6, Social Security Act.....	109,060
26. Miscellaneous.....	7,615
27. Printing and binding.....	20,000

Mr. COUZENS. Has the Senator the total of all the items?

Mr. McKELLAR. The total is $1,500,000.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator, in that long list of investigations and activities to be undertaken, how many new ones there are which heretofore have not been entered into?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think all of them have been heretofore entered into.

Mr. COUZENS. I think not. I should like to be enlightened. I am not on the Appropriations Committee, but I am unofficially informed that many of the items are new undertakings on the part of the Government.

Mr. GLASS. Very likely. The appropriation for silicosis is entirely new.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. HALE. The facts are that last year the Public Health Service had, for diseases and sanitation investigation, $1,005,000. This year the House has increased that item to $1,155,000, or an increase of nearly $150,000. The Senate is proposing further to increase it to $1,500,000.

Mr. GLASS. Which was the Budget estimate.

Mr. HALE. It seems to me that if we increase last year's appropriation $150,000, that is really all that is necessary.

Mr. KING. I think so.

Mr. HALE. That will enable them to go ahead with some of the investigations which are new, and some of the others which are continuing investigations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some are old and some are new.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to be informed, if the Senator from Tennessee can tell us, what are the new investigations which are undertaken. Certainly the committee members ought to know that.

Mr. McKELLAR. The investigation of silicosis is one of the new ones. Practically all of them have been carried on for the past year or two and only a very few of them are new. The investigation of silicosis is entirely new.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I was not present in the committee when this matter was considered. I have long held the belief that the Public Health Service ought to be either an independent department of government or placed somewhere else than in the Treasury Department. It is now only a small part of a great institution. Ever since I have been in the Congress, and before that time, I have had the impression that the Public Health Service has been robbed. What I mean by that is that there are many activities which, as I see the matter, ought to be carried on more vigorously by the Federal Government.

When I was commissioner of health in a large city of New York State, if I may refer to it, I had a larger annual appropriation than has the Public Health Service representing the entire Federal Government. Many States are doing splendid work. I happen to know that in the State of Michigan, in which I take pride because it is my native State, the Senator from that State [Mr. COUZENS] has spent millions of dollars in promoting the public health; and through his individual aid and his splendid, generous gifts that State is having the benefit of advanced work in which other States and the citizens of the whole country should share.

As I said, Mr. President, I was not present in the committee when this matter was considered. All I know about it is the statement I heard the Senator from Tennessee read just now. He spoke about industrial hygiene. If there is one thing which ought to be done in this country, it is to make certain that those who work in hazardous trades are protected.

It may well be said, "Why not leave that to the States?" Of course, the application of this knowledge must be left to the States; but somebody must originate the methods which are needed to protect society. I take it that the only function of the Federal Government is to do those things which will contribute to the welfare of the entire country.

Certainly in the case of industrial hygiene, let alone the problem of silicosis—which is tremendously important, as has been pointed out, and which has been so frequently mentioned in the press—there may be worked out devices, ways of protecting men and women who work in dusty places. There are other things by way of control of chemical fumes and other hazards which are associated with industry which may be worked out, and properly worked out, by the Federal Government for the benefit of all the people.

Then the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] read about the biologics, meaning the vaccines and the serums. Progress is all the time being made in that field, and it ought to be developed.

Only recently there has been a rumor that certain diseases which have heretofore been considered to be incurable may be cured by the application of scientific remedies or agents which are developed in these central laboratories.

So, Mr. President, without knowing the particulars at all, I am convinced that we ought not to be niggardly as regards these matters, because they have to do with the human health.

We do not hesitate to vote money for hog cholera and Bang's disease—

Mr. GLASS. Which does not exist.

Mr. COPELAND. And many other ailments of animals. We talk about diseases of plant life, and are making large appropriations for the eradication of the Dutch elm disease. I am glad of it, but are we not going to do the same thing for the human beings of our country? Are we not going to do it for men, women, and babies? So far as I have any influence, I want to sustain any increased appropriation in that particular field. I am opposed to many appropriations we are making, and bitterly opposed to them, but when it comes to human health, the relief of pain and the extension of human life, I want to be on the side of those who propose adequate appropriations to promote such objectives.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it may readily be admitted that the members of the Appropriations Committee, with the exception of the Senator from New York, have little or no knowledge of the science of medicine. We have to rely upon the Public Health Service for statements made. There was available to us the hearings on the House side, which are quite elaborate and which are available to any Member of the Senate who cares to study the problem. But we do not know anything about medicine, and we are unwilling to take the risk of being niggardly with appropriations when it comes to the public health. For that reason, and upon the urging of the Public Health Service, the committee recommended the increase, which is not beyond the estimate of the Budget Bureau. We have a right to assume that the Budget Bureau itself goes carefully into these matters and satisfies itself that the appropriations should be made. Frankly, I do not think the Budget Bureau knows any more about it than I do, and that is nothing.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move to amend the committee amendment, in line 20, on page 37, by striking out "$1,500,000" and inserting the figures "$1,250,000." That will provide a 25-percent increase over what the Bureau had last year for this purpose.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator why he did not suggest that proposed change in the committee and give a good reason for it?

Mr. HALE. I did make the proposal in the committee, and it was defeated by a vote of 5 to 4.

Mr. GLASS. There has not been any politics in the committee at all; there has not been any division at all in the slightest degree on party lines.

Mr. HALE. I repeat that in the committee I made the exact motion which I have now made on the floor, and the motion was defeated.

Mr. GLASS. I confess that I have not any patience with trying to make politics out of appropriations for the Public Health Service or any other appropriation, so far as that is concerned. I have nothing to do with such efforts.

Mr. HALE. There is no question, Mr. President, about the action of the committee on the proposal made by me.

Mr. GLASS. The Senator could have offered his amendment in the committee, but he did not do it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before the Senate votes on this amendment, I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Maine concerning this appropriation.

As has been stated, the Public Health Service is vitally important to the American people, and I think it is doing a wonderful work. I should be glad if the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Michigan would visit the Earle Theater this week and see there Mr. Paul Muni's wonderful characterization of Dr. Pasteur, who was a great chemist and the leader in the science of bacteriology during his professional life in the last century beginning in the sixties and extending probably nearly to the close of the century. The picture is a remarkable one. The investigations now being made by the Public Health Service are exactly in line with the investigations that Dr. Pasteur was conducting even at that early date.

I had some doubt, as the Senator from Maine knows, about increasing this appropriation to a million and a half dollars, but after I sat through that picture I never had a doubt about what we had done concerning this particular item. The picture itself is the finest argument for the allowance of this appropriation I ever saw, and, of course, it had no possible connection with it except that, as everybody knows, Dr. Pasteur in his researches in bacteria developed the germ theory of the transmission of disease and initiated the serum treatment which had much to do with stamping out hydrophobia.

So I am sure that if the Senators referred to, who are complaining of this increase in the appropriation of $340,000, will go to the theater mentioned and see that picture they will change their minds about the matter and probably want to increase instead of diminishing the appropriation.

Mr. COUZENS obtained the floor.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia will desist for a few moments, I should like to make it plain that I am in no sense criticizing the amount of money proposed to be spent for the purposes which were amplified by the Senator from New York, but I submit that if Senators will read from line 4 to line 20, inclusive, on page 37 of the bill they will not find a word within that whole paragraph which indicates how this money is going to be spent and where. I have tried to get an explanation—

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to complete my statement before I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. I thought I had yielded to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COUZENS. I understood that I was recognized, and I am speaking in my own time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan was recognized and holds the floor in his own right.

Mr. COUZENS. I raised this question because of the ambiguity of this particular provision. If Senators will read it, they will find, beginning in line 4, it says:

Diseases and sanitation investigations: For carrying out the provisions of section 603 of the Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935—

Then there are incorporated in the same paragraph appropriations for the Public Health Service. The Senator from New York and no other Senator can tell from reading that paragraph how much of the appropriation is to be devoted to carrying out the Social Security Act of 1935 and how much is to go to the other provisions as applied to the Public Health Service. If the Senator from New York will explain to the Senate what proportion of the $1,500,000 is going to the services he recommends, I will be entirely in favor of leaving the appropriation as it stands.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator has appealed to me—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. While, of course, as I said awhile ago, I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have been engaged on various hearings on the ship-subsidy bill, and I was not present in that committee; but I assume, according to the long-established practice of the Appropriations Committee, that the hearings indicate how the money is to be expended.

I understand the attitude of the Senator from Michigan. He is not opposing this item if it can be shown that the money is actually going to be used for some human benefit. I think it is incumbent upon the committee to reassure the Senator from Michigan that that is the case.

So far as I am concerned, since the Senator has yielded to me for a moment, let me say that I would rather have some money, say half a million dollars, used for the protection of the human family than to have 50,000 Passamaquoddy Bay projects voted on and public money used for them in the United States or elsewhere. It is human relief in which I am interested, as I know the Senator from Michigan is. I think he makes a proper appeal to the committee when he asks for what purpose the money is to be used.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I should like to continue for a moment, although, if the Senator from Tennessee will tell me, I will yield to him and await his explanation. However, a reading of the entire paragraph indicates that the appropriation is all confused with the Social Security Act and the Public Health Service. There is no division showing which department is going to spend the money; but there is a broad authority for spending a million and a half dollars without any specifications whatsoever. In other words, if I read the section correctly, the whole million and a half dollars may be spent to buy passenger-carrying automobiles; it may be spent for the transportation of personal effects of commissioned officers; it may be spent for any one of the enumerated objects within that paragraph; and there is not a word to indicate how much is going to be spent for human welfare, to which the Senator from New York so well refers.

I think that before we do this thing we are entitled to know where the money is going. We all know the incompetency and inefficiency of most bureaus, regardless of whether they are conducted by Democrats or Republicans. I am rather surprised that the Senator from Virginia should indicate that there was any politics in this matter so far as I am concerned, because I am not half so much a partisan as is the Senator from Virginia, for I vote sometimes with the Democrats and sometimes with the Republicans. So far as my interest in this matter is concerned, it is in no sense partisan.

I will yield to the Senator from Tennessee or to the Senator from Virginia, if either one will tell me what part of the million and a half dollars is to be used for purposes contemplated by the Social Security Act, what part of it is to be used for the Public Health Service, and how much of it is to be used for automobiles under the wide expanse of authority that is granted by this paragraph of the bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have been a member of the Committee on Appropriations since the first day I entered the Senate, and, so far as I can recall, it has never been the practice of the Appropriations Committee to set forth in detail in the appropriation bill every item for which the money is to be used. On the other hand, there are 200 pages of testimony relating to this appropriation of $1,500,000 and other items included in the bill. That testimony is accessible to any Senator who is interested in the matter.

It seems to me an extraordinary contention that the committee should include all these details in an appropriation bill. It never has been done, and I do not imagine it ever will be done.

As to partisanship, I do not intend to get into any controversy with the Senator from Michigan beyond saying that when I get out on the stump in a campaign no one can be more partisan than I have been and intend to be hereafter, but I challenge any one of my colleagues to point to a sentence I have ever uttered in the Senate of a partisan nature in the consideration of public questions. I have not accused the Senator from Michigan of doing anything of the kind, because I have as great respect for him as for any Senator in this body.

Mr. President, I want to apologize profoundly to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] for saying awhile ago that he did not offer the proposal in the committee. He did offer it in committee. I had failed to recollect it and I apologize to my friend for saying he did not. I was misled by his talk about a 4-to-5 vote. I thought he was trying to separate the sheep from the goats, and I am not going even to say which were the sheep and which were the goats. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan said perhaps all this money could be spent for automobiles. I call his attention to the wording of this provision in line 17, page 37, of the pending bill:

And including the purchase (not to exceed $5,000), exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying automobiles for official use in field work.

Out of the $1,500,000 only $5,000 may be spent for automobiles under the very wording of the bill itself.

As to what the appropriation is going to be used for, that is stated in section 603 (a) of the Social Security Act, a copy of which I have before me, and in order that the Senator may have the facts about it, I desire to read that section, as follows:

Sec. 603. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, the sum of $2,000,000 for expenditure by the Public Health Service for investigation of disease and problems of sanitation (including the printing and binding of the findings of such investigations), and for the pay and allowances and traveling expenses of personnel of the Public Health Service, including commissioned officers, engaged in such investigations or detailed to cooperate with the health authorities of any State in carrying out the purposes specified in section 601: Provided, That no personnel of the Public Health Service shall be detailed to cooperate with the health authorities of any State except at the request of the proper authorities of such State.

(b) The personnel of the Public Health Service paid from any appropriation not made pursuant to subsection (a) may be detailed to assist in carrying out the purposes of this title. The appropriation from which they are paid shall be reimbursed from the appropriation made pursuant to subsection (a) to the extent of their salaries and allowances for services performed while so detailed.

(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this title.

If the Senator will take that language and the language on page 721 of the record, which I have already read, he will find it is as specific as any appropriation in this bill, or, perhaps, in any other bill.

Mr. COUZENS. This question may settle the matter in my own mind: What proportion, if any, is going to be spent by the Social Security Commission and what proportion by the Public Health Service, or is it all to be spent by the Public Health Service?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is all to be spent by the Public Health Service. The appropriation of $1,500,000 we are now making is to be spent for the public-health work as outlined in the Social Security Act, section 603. There the Senator will find a direct authorization of an appropriation of $2,000,000, and the appropriation here made is less than the authorization.

Mr. COUZENS. What I am trying to get at, and I think the Senator will not object to giving me the information, is what proportion of the $1,500,000 is to be spent for carrying out the Social Security Act, or whether it is all to be spent for that purpose, or whether some of it is to be spent for activities previously authorized.

Mr. McKELLAR. For the activities previously authorized, and then an addition was made covering the activities authorized in section 603 of the Social Security Act. It all comes under the head of "disease and sanitation investigations." It is left to the Public Health Service to make these investigations and report to Congress. They are required to report to Congress what they do.

Mr. COUZENS. I am still unable to get an answer to my question. How much of the $1,500,000 is to be spent under section 603 of the Social Security Act—all of it?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. COUZENS. That is what I want to know.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is to be spent under the very terms of the act.

Mr. COUZENS. I think the Senator still does not understand the point I am endeavoring to make.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, I do. It is to be spent for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 603 of the Social Security Act approved August 4, 1935, and section 1 of the act approved August 14, 1912. The bill does not say how much shall be spent under the old act nor does it say how much shall be spent under the new act. The Public Health Service is given the $1,500,000 to spend under the two acts according to their discretion, with the exception which I have explained in answer to the Senator's inquiry about automobiles. His statement in that regard was incorrect because only $5,000 of the amount may be spent for automobiles.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand the Appropriations Committee does not know how much of the $1,500,000 is to be spent under the pending bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not stated. The most the committee can do is to give the 27 items showing the break-down indicating how the money is to be spent.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no! If the Senator will refer to the hearings, he will find there are 4 pages giving in detail how the money is to be spent.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is in the Budget.

Mr. GLASS. Yes; it is in the Budget, but it was placed in the hearings of the committee and shows the salary of each official employed, and for what the money is to be spent. It is available to any Senator.

Mr. COUZENS. May I ask the Senator from Virginia if, under the pending bill, the administration would be justified in using the money in any other way than is specified in the Budget?

Mr. GLASS. I should say they would not be.

Mr. COUZENS. It seems to me, from the language of the bill, that they would be so justified, and that is one of the points I am trying to clear up. I am still trying to find out how much of this money is to be spent under the new Social Security Act which was passed last year.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I may be of some assistance to the Senator from Michigan by calling attention to the fact that a statement contained in the House hearings itemizes the $1,500,000. Among those items, 27 in number, is one for "supervision of State activities, section 601, title 6, Social Security Act, $109,060." No other item indicates that it is specifically for the Social Security Act. Other items are set forth. I shall be glad to hand that statement to the Senator as it appears in the House hearings.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from South Carolina has answered the question I have been trying to get answered as to how much of this appropriation is to be used for carrying out the Social Security Act and how much to carry out the old objectives of the Public Health Service.

Mr. McKELLAR. I read from the House hearings at page 721, and read that very language to the Senator at the time. He overlooked it.

Mr. COUZENS. No; I do not overlook it. The Senator did not point out that that was the only item in the whole list which was applicable to the Social Security Act, while the Senator from South Carolina did so point it out.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am very much obliged to the Senator from South Carolina for making that specific, but I did read the following:

Supervision of State activities, section 601, title 6, Social Security Act.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan has referred to the inefficiency of many of the bureaus of the Government.

I do not think the Public Health Service are in any way inefficient. I think they do excellent work. I believe, however, that they can get along for the coming year with an increase of 25 percent over what they had last year.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] has shown that the Public Health Service need $109,000 to carry out certain provisions of the Social Security Act. The House has already given them nearly $150,000 more than they had last year. My amendment gives them nearly $100,000 in addition to that. It seems to me a 25-percent increase ought to enable them to operate for the coming year.

We know that all activities of the Government desire to increase their scope; and the more we give them, the more they want. I think we should hold them down to a reasonable basis, and I think my amendment does that.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. HALE. I call for a division.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of the Mint—Office of Director of the Mint", at the top of page 39, to insert:

For the establishment, equipment, and maintenance of an assay office at Helena, Mont., $22,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Procurement Division—Public Buildings Branch", on page 39, line 21, after the word "societies", to insert "and educational exhibits", and on page 40, line 3, after the word "advertising", to insert "expenses of educational exhibits, specifically approved by the Secretary of the Treasury", so as to read:

General administrative expenses: For architectural engineering, mechanical, administrative, clerical, and other personal services, traveling expenses, including expenses of employees directed by the Secretary of the Treasury to attend meetings of technical and professional societies and educational exhibits in connection with subjects related to the work of the Division of Procurement, Public Buildings Branch, and transportation of household goods, incident to change of headquarters of all employees engaged in field activities, not to exceed 5,000 pounds at any one time, together with the necessary expenses incident to packing and draying same; advertising, expenses of educational exhibits, specifically approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, testing instruments, law books, books of reference, technical periodicals and journals, drafting materials, especially prepared paper, typewriting machines, adding machines, and other mechanical labor-saving devices, and exchange of same, carpets, electric-light fixtures, furniture, equipment, and repairs thereto, telegraph and telephone service, freight, expressage, and postage incident to the transportation of drawings to and from the office and such other contingencies, articles, services, or supplies as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order or approve in connection with any of the work of the Procurement Division, Public Buildings Branch; rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including ground rent of the Federal building at Salamanca, N. Y., for which payment may be made in advance, $920,000; of which amount not to exceed $494,940 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $289,060 for personal services in the field.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Procurement Division—Branch of Supply", on page 48, after line 15, to insert:

With the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, there may be transferred to the appropriations, "Salaries, Office of Treasurer of United States, 1937", "Contingent expenses, Treasury Department, 1937", "Printing and binding, Treasury Department, 1937", and "Stationery, Treasury Department, 1937", from funds available for the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, Home Owners' Loan Corporation, Farm Credit Administration, Tennessee Valley Authority, Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, and Reconstruction Finance Corporation, such sums as may be necessary to cover the expenses incurred in clearing of checks, servicing of bonds, handling of collections, and rendering of accounts therefor: Provided, That a statement of any transfers of appropriations made hereunder shall be included in the annual Budget.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Post Office Department—Salaries in bureaus and offices", on page 50, line 6, to strike out "$360,000" and insert "$372,270", so as to read:

Office of the First Assistant Postmaster General, $372,270.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 8, to strike out "$566,040" and insert "$573,580", so as to read:

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, $573,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 10, to strike out "$766,440" and insert "$771,860", so as to read:

Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster General, $771,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 12, to strike out "$442,800" and insert "$452,200", so as to read:

Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, $452,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 14, to strike out "$81,000" and insert "$81,280", so as to read:

Office of the Solicitor for the Post Office Department, $81,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 15, after the word "inspector", to strike out "$201,380" and insert "$216,000", so as to read:

Office of the chief inspector, $216,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 16, after the word "agent", to strike out "$40,880" and insert "$42,000", so as to read:

Office of the purchasing agent, $42,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 17, after the word "Accounts", to strike out "$103,000" and insert "$106,860", so as to read:

Bureau of Accounts, $106,860.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Contingent expenses, Post Office Department", on page 51, line 17, after the word "for" and the semicolon, to strike out "$81,000" and insert "$85,000", so as to read:

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses; stationery and blank books, index and guide cards, folders and binding devices, including purchase of free penalty envelopes; telegraph and telephone service, furniture and filing cabinets and repairs thereto; purchase, exchange, maintenance, and repair of tools, electrical supplies, typewriters, adding machines, and other labor-saving devices; maintenance of motor trucks and of two motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles, to be used only for official purposes (one for the Postmaster General and one for the general use of the Department); street-car fares; floor coverings; postage stamps for correspondence addressed abroad, which is not exempt under article 47 of the London convention of the Universal Postal Union; purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, railway guides, city directories, and books necessary to conduct the business of the Department; newspapers, not exceeding $200; expenses, except membership fees, of attendance at meetings or conventions concerned with postal affairs, when incurred on the written authority of the Postmaster General, not exceeding $2,000; expenses of the purchasing agent and of the Solicitor and attorneys connected with his office while traveling on business of the Department, not exceeding $800; and other expenses not otherwise provided for; $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of Chief Inspector", on page 54, after line 3, to strike out:

Salaries of inspectors: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge of divisions and 560 inspectors (including 20 additional inspectors for the fiscal year 1937), $2,176,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Salaries of inspectors: For salaries of 15 inspectors in charge and 15 assistant inspectors in charge of divisions and 625 inspectors, $2,425,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 13, after the word "charge", to insert "assistant inspectors in charge", and in line 24, after the word "Service", to strike out "$573,000" and insert "$650,000", so as to read:

Traveling and miscellaneous expenses: For traveling expenses of inspectors, inspectors in charge, assistant inspectors in charge, the chief post-office inspector, and the assistant chief post-office inspector, and for the traveling expenses of four clerks performing stenographic and clerical assistance to post-office inspectors in the investigation of important fraud cases; for tests, exhibits, documents, photographs, office, and other necessary expenses incurred by post-office inspectors in connection with their official investigations, including necessary miscellaneous expenses of division headquarters, and not to exceed $500 for technical and scientific books and other books of reference needed in the operation of the Post Office Inspection Service, $650,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 4, after the word "of", to strike out "159" and insert "194", and in line 6, after the word "headquarters", to strike out "$446,100" and insert "$465,000", so as to read:

Clerks, division headquarters: For compensation of 194 clerks at division headquarters, $465,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the First Assistant Postmaster General", on page 56, line 4, after the words "fourth class", to strike out "$47,500,000" and insert "$48,000,000", so as to read:

Compensation to postmasters: For compensation to postmasters, including compensation as postmaster to persons who, pending the designation of an acting postmaster, assume and properly perform the duties of postmaster in the event of a vacancy in the office of postmaster of the third or fourth class, and for allowances for rent, light, fuel, and equipment to postmasters of the fourth class, $48,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 8, after the word "offices", to strike out "$6,750,000" and insert "$6,800,000", so as to read:

Compensation to assistant postmasters: For compensation to assistant postmasters at first- and second-class post offices, $6,800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 13, after the word "substitutes", to strike out "$186,500,000" and insert "$187,500,000", so as to read:

Clerks, first- and second-class post offices: For compensation to clerks and employees at first- and second-class post offices, including auxiliary clerk hire at summer and winter post offices, printers, mechanics, skilled laborers, watchmen, messengers, laborers, and substitutes, $187,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 15, after the word "Service", to strike out "$124,500,000" and insert "$135,300,000", so as to read:

City delivery carriers: For pay of letter carriers, City Delivery Service, $135,300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Special-delivery fees: For fees to special-delivery messengers, $7,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster General", on page 57, line 25, after the name "Alaska", to strike out "$207,245" and insert "$450,000", so as to read:

Star-route service, Alaska: For inland transportation by star routes in Alaska, $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 17, after the words "sum of" to strike out "$31,550" and insert "$33,050", so as to read:

Railroad transportation and mail messenger service: For inland transportation by railroad routes and for mail messenger service, $102,000,000: Provided, That not to exceed $1,500,000 of this appropriation may be expended for pay of freight and incidental charges for the transportation of mails conveyed under special arrangement in freight trains or otherwise: Provided further, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for mail messenger service: Provided further, That there may be expended from this appropriation for clerical and other assistance in the District of Columbia not exceeding the sum of $60,922 to carry out the provisions of section 5 of the act of July 28, 1916 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 562) (the space basis act), and not exceeding the sum of $33,050 to carry out the provisions of section 214 of the act of February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 826) (cost ascertainment).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 7, after the word "otherwise", to strike out "(exclusive of mail carried under contracts awarded under the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928), $9,450,000" and insert "$14,300,000"; in line 10, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$7,962,500" and insert "$8,230,000"; and in line 13, after the words "excess of", to strike out "$7,962,500" and insert "$8,230,000", so as to read:

Foreign mail transportation: For transportation of foreign mails by steamship, aircraft, or otherwise, $14,300,000: Provided, That not to exceed $8,230,000 of this sum may be expended for carrying foreign mail by aircraft under contracts which will not create obligations for the fiscal year 1938 in excess of $8,230,000: Provided further, That the Postmaster General is authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not to exceed $165,000, to cover the cost to the United States for maintaining sea-post service on ocean steamships conveying the mails to and from the United States, including the salary of the Assistant Director, Division of International Postal Service, with headquarters at New York City.

Mr. COPELAND obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator now is about to address himself to the transportation item?

Mr. COPELAND. I am.

Mr. McNARY. That involves the foreign-mail service?

Mr. COPELAND. It does.

Mr. McNARY. I think it is important; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 61, beginning in line 4.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, in order that this matter may be understood by all of us, I desire to ask whether my interpretation of the amendment pending, and those immediately following, is correct. As I understand the matter, the amendment on page 61, beginning in line 4 and going through line 11, strikes out of the bill the appropriation which has been made since 1928 for ocean-mail contracts. If that amendment were adopted, in connection with those on the preceding page, it would mean that hereafter no money would be provided for ocean-mail contracts, that the mail would be carried on the poundage basis, and an appropriation of four or five million dollars would be made, sufficient to pay the poundage. Have I stated the matter correctly?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; except that I would not say that it is correct to state that no appropriation will be made. No appropriation will be made in the pending bill for ship-subsidy purposes.

Mr. COPELAND. I am glad the Senator makes the statement; indeed, my purpose in rising to speak is to ascertain what is in the mind of the committee. I have to present an alibi as to this item, as I did before. I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on Appropriations when this was considered, but, of course, was advised as to what had been done.

If the amendment on page 61, line 4, shall prevail, and the House shall agree to it, and no ship-subsidy legislation or substitute provision for the support of the merchant marine shall be adopted, what, in the opinion of the committee, will be the effect upon the merchant marine?

Mr. GLASS. It was the opinion of the committee that in that event the amount deducted from the pending bill would very likely be included in the next deficiency bill for the merchant marine.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have this to say about the procedure. I do not rise to start any discussion or to make any fight for the holders of mail contracts. I am in full sympathy with the plan which has been put forward by the President to be frank with the public and openly to admit that we are paying a sum out of the Treasury to establish parity. This is essential in order that American ships may compete with their foreign rivals in such manner as to maintain our standards of American living, also to build ships in American shipyards, paying the difference occasioned by the American cost, which goes to American labor. I am in favor of that plan; but I will now state what causes me concern about the matter.

As the matter stands under the present law and under the existing arrangement, putting it very crudely, we have a club over those steamship lines which have ocean-mail contracts. In my judgment it would make it easier to deal with the problem confronting us if we had this appropriation in the background. On the other hand, it may be that by striking out the appropriation we will put the ship lines on notice that they must conform to a new system.

Mr. President, I was shocked yesterday. There was a hearing before the Committee on Commerce on the subject of subsidy legislation. This is what surprised me: In spite of the fact that the shipowners are on notice by the action of the committee making the report which is reflected in the pending bill, through the Steamship Owners Association they came to us with a 23-page argument, which for about 20 pages I thought was a very appropriate and proper argument; it laid down proposals for amendments to or improvement of the pending bills. But the last two pages of the argument were, in effect, an insistence that the old plan be carried on.

My distinguished friend from Maine [Mr. WHITE], co-author of the Jones-White Act, holds a view which I share—that, properly administered, the Jones-White Act would build up an American merchant marine. It has done a good deal. What arouses me, however, is the fact that the shipowners do not realize that that act is out of the window. No one on this floor is more convinced than am I of the fact that the old act is dead. But I know that we cannot have ships built and operated under the American flag unless we do one of two things: Either we shall have to provide funds out of the Treasury to establish parity in building and parity in operation between American standards and foreign standards, either that money will have to be taken out of the Treasury or, if we are not satisfied to do that and still wish to maintain an American merchant marine, it must be done by Government building and operation. I do not think anyone within the sound of my voice will dispute that statement.

Of course, to me, Mr. President, it is unthinkable that we should go back to Government ownership and operation. We had that system after the war, and we miserably failed. Just before the war and during the war the Federal Government spent $4,000,000,000 in building ships. Four billion dollars! The war ended, and we had them on our hands, and we now have hundreds of them on our hands. They were ships which were built to meet war emergencies, for transporting troops and transporting supplies. They were absolutely unsuited to the needs of modern commerce. But we attempted to make use of those ships. We tried to induce private corporations to buy them and operate them; but finally we were forced to enter into contracts with private parties for the operation of the ships. In very recent years, just before the enactment of the Jones-White Act, between 1920 and 1928, the operating losses of the Government fleet amounted to as much as $100,000,000. If there ever was an example of the fallacy of Government ownership and operation of the merchant marine, here is the finest example I know.

Mr. President, I know there are Members of the Senate, men whom I love and honor, who think that the way we should handle the merchant marine now is by building ships, chartering the ships if we can find persons to hire them, or, if not, operating them ourselves. Sometime in the near future we shall have to fight out that issue; and we have very formidable opponents, I am sure.

What we are proposing to do by the amendment on page 61 is to wipe out the appropriation we have made year after year, to carry out solemn contracts we have made with ship operators.

As I said in the beginning, I am not here in an attempt to defend the contracts. It has been charged that all of them are fraudulent or that most of them are. It has been charged that many of them are the result of collusion and fraud. Of course I should have to ask, if that is true, Why has not the Department of Justice long since exercised its duty to bring about cancellation? Why has not the Comptroller General refused to honor these checks? The President for 2 years past has had the power of cancellation by an amendment to the Independent Offices Appropriations Act of nearly 3 years ago, permitting him by or before a certain date to cancel the contracts; and then last year we extended the time, so that he has until the 31st of the current month in which to cancel them. If the contracts were entered into by collusion, or if they are fraudulent, unlawful, illegal, immoral, or indecent, why have they not been canceled? They have not been. They are in existence.

If we take the action proposed by the amendment on page 61, we shall place the Government in the position of repudiating 42 contracts. In the absence of any effective legislation between now and the 30th of June, and a readjustment which will make possible voluntarily turning back the contracts to the Government, on the 1st day of July the Government of the United States will be in the position of repudiating 42 contracts upon which we are pledged as a Government to pay $26,500,000 a year.

Mr. President, if that should be the result of this bill, it would be infinitely worse than what was done with reference to gold, because, if I recall correctly, the owner of the gold dollar got 59 cents; his contract was reduced less than half. By this act we shall totally, absolutely, and fully cancel and repudiate the contracts upon which we have entered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. In the light of the testimony which was taken by the committee, of which I was a member, and which resulted in the cancellation of a large number of the air-mail contracts—and the evidence showed, as I recall, that there was ground for challenging the validity of some of the contracts with the steamship companies—was not some action taken by the Postmaster General looking to a cancellation or modification of contracts which had been entered into with some of the shipping companies?

Mr. COPELAND. I have no knowledge whatever of the air contracts. I know nothing about the air contracts; but by the action of the committee referred to by the able Senator from Utah, everybody concerned was put on notice that it was the opinion of his committee that many of these ocean-mail contracts were fraudulent, that collusion entered into their formation, and that in consequence they were illegal.

I think the Senator had not yet returned to the Chamber; I know he was at an important committee meeting; but I had suggested that the power has resided in the President of the United States for nearly 3 years to cancel one or all those contracts or to modify them. That was provided in the act of Congress passed in June 1933. All the time, too, the Attorney General's office has been on notice that it was the opinion of the committee that these were improper contracts, and the Comptroller General all this time has paid the checks. If they were illegal, if they were fraudulent, why have they not been canceled?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. What action was taken by the Postmaster General in the light of the testimony that was elicited by the committee to which I refer? The point I am getting at is, my understanding was that he challenged the legality of some of these contracts—I shall not state the reasons why he did so—and that, as a result of his challenge, some composition was entered into between the holders of the contracts and the Government under the terms of which they were permitted to operate for a limited period of time.

Mr. COPELAND. It is very interesting, Mr. President, that, with the exception of one contract, which was recently canceled by agreement between one shipping line and the Postmaster General—and not on the basis of what the Senator has in mind—every single contract today, so far as I know, is exactly where it was when the committee began its work. Not one has been changed; not one has been modified. There has been no competition of differences. The contracts are exactly where they were when the committee started its work.

The conclusion of this matter, as I see it, is this: Every agency of the Government has been put on notice about these contracts, but no one in authority has done anything about them. I think I voice the sentiment of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who knows more about shipping certainly than I do, and, I believe, more than all the rest of us do, and who sat through all the hearings and debates in 1928, as I did in the Commerce Committee of the Senate—he was then in the House—when I say that these contracts are legal contracts. I will ask the Senator from Maine if I am right in so stating?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I wish to thank him for his very gracious reference to me. It is true that I sat through the hearings before the so-called Black committee, and I read, I think, in their entirety, the reports of the Postmaster General to the President. In my opinion, there is doubt as to the legality of only one of these contracts; and it is an interesting thing when one studies the report of the Postmaster General to find that, while he expresses the opinion that many of the contracts were illegally entered into, while he expresses the opinion that many of the contracts should be modified, he does not, in his report to the President, affirmatively recommend the cancellation of the contracts.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the Senator from Maine has stated the case exactly as it is. There have been charges heralded all over the country and repeated abroad—for shipping is a matter of interest to every country—that these contracts are unlawful and fraudulent; and yet, Mr. President, for nearly 3 years there reposed power in the President—and that power is in his hands now, and will be until the 31st of March—so that any day, any moment he could cancel or modify any one of those contracts. He could tender to the holder of a contract a sum of money which the President, in his judgment, believed the holder to be entitled to by reason of the modification or cancellation, and then, under the law, the contractor could go to the Court of Claims and make an effort to collect more. But it has not been done.

Now the question arises—and my only purpose in talking about it is to get the consensus of the Senate—is it wise now to take an action which may result, whether we pass subsidy legislation or not, in a very serious embarrassment to the American merchant marine? Why do I say that? It is utterly impossible to operate our ships without Government aid. We have established the policy of extending aid, and if the subsidy bill which I myself presented to the Senate the first day of the session, and which since that time has been modified by conferences between the Post Office Department and the Commerce Department and the White House, were to be passed as written, we will say by the first of April, under its terms—and in this particular the terms of the other bills which are pending, the Guffey bill and the Gibson bill, are identical—the President then must select the personnel of the maritime authority. Under my bill, if the Senate will forgive me for speaking of it in that way—I really do so to designate it; I do not think I have any particular pride in its present form, but I take ownership of it for a moment—under my bill provision is made for a maritime authority of three members. Under the Guffey bill it is to be composed of five members. I have forgotten what number is provided in the Gibson bill, but I think it is five. After the enactment of the bill, the President then must select under my bill three men, and the restrictions are so great they cannot be shipping men. No one who has ever seen an ocean would be eligible. I mean to say if he has been connected with shipping in any way for 3 years past he would not be eligible. The President would have to find men; and their names would have to come to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I assume from what the Senator has said that he believes his bill, the merchant-marine bill, has some relationship to the present subject matter?

Mr. COPELAND. An intimate relationship.

Mr. WALSH. So I understand. Now, I should like to ask the Senator if he thinks there is very much likelihood of his bill being enacted into law at the present session?

Mr. COPELAND. Well, Mr. President, I know what a determined group can do. I recall what was done in 1922, I think it was, by a group of "Young Turks", who I think were new Members of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I will relieve the Senator from embarrassment.

Mr. COPELAND. No; I do not want to be relieved; I want to answer.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not a fact that what action should be taken upon the pending amendment depends upon whether the so-called merchant marine bill is to be passed?

Mr. COPELAND. One hundred per cent.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I thought, but up to date it is impossible to forecast what the outcome will be. I am only asking these questions to get the Senator's viewpoint. I do not wish to embarrass him.

Mr. COPELAND. The question the Senator asks me is somewhat embarrassing.

Mr. WALSH. Then I will withdraw it.

Mr. COPELAND. No; the Senator need not do that. But there is a rule that the White House shall not be quoted. There is no such rule so far as anything I may say is concerned. Now, in order that the Record may be complete—

Mr. WALSH. The rule applies to the Senator but not to the White House?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct, but here is the situation: Let me tell the Senate all I know about it. Last year—

Mr. WALSH. I really do not want to divert the Senator from the course of his argument.

Mr. COPELAND. I want to answer the question, because I want the Senate to know the facts.

Mr. WALSH. My purpose was to ascertain whether the Senator's bill can be eliminated from any consideration as to what we should do at this time in connection with the pending matter.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator must not be impatient with me if I hem and haw a little bit. He realizes, of course, my embarrassment.

Mr. President, last year we finally reached what we called the "star print" of the ship-subsidy bill. We had exhausted all the earthly numbers and so we went to the heavenly atmosphere to get a name for the bill, and we called it a "star print." The "star print" was the subject of conferences between the Post Office Department and the Commerce Department all through the summer.

I think the President was entirely right in desiring to have the departments having to do with the matter compose their differences. That was expected. So the conferences went on all through the summer and through the fall, but they could not get anywhere.

Then, in December, with the aid of certain experts, we prepared the bill which was reported and which is now Senate bill 3500. That bill did not prove to be satisfactory to the Post Office Department or the Commerce Department, particularly the Post Office Department, where they have all the genius and knowledge relating to the American merchant marine.

In the preparation of the last bill I deliberately chose to exclude from it everything that was not mentioned in the President's message of last year. I took his message as a yardstick, with one or two very slight exceptions which perhaps my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] might think were vital; but still it was not acceptable. Through all the winter and springtime there has been discussion. I think the action of the Appropriations Committee in taking the stand it did finally hastened matters to the point where it was thought it was an acceptable bill.

The bill was brought to me by the Postmaster General and the Secretary of Commerce and was received by me with the impression that it was a part of the administration program.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was it approved by both Departments?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand that the Senator desires to leave the impression with the Senate that it has been approved by the President?

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator had been present to hear my whole statement, he would realize that I was contending that the bill was brought to me by those representatives to whom I have referred, and I was given the very decided impression that now the bill was satisfactory.

Mr. BLACK. To whom?

Mr. COPELAND. To the administration. I am not going to argue with the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. I do not care to have the Senator argue with me. I was asking for information because I do not understand anyone has the right to state that the bill has the approval of the President.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask Senators present if I have not hedged sufficiently so that I have not said that? I had the impression that it had the approval of the White House, but I have not said the White House indicated to me that it was its bill. Does that answer the Senator?

Mr. BLACK. As I understand the Senator, he does not know whether it has the White House approval or not.

Mr. COPELAND. There we are again. [Laughter.]

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I may state that the Appropriations Committee had information which it thought was authentic to the effect that the President approved the bill.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator has finished his reply to my question, I should like to ask another question.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator stated the amendment has relationship to his bill. Is it the opinion of the Senator that by the adoption of this amendment his bill is more likely to be taken up for consideration and action taken upon it?

Mr. COPELAND. I thought so until yesterday afternoon.

Mr. WALSH. I rather inferred from something I thought I heard subrosa from the Senator from Virginia that he thought the adoption of this amendment would help to further the enactment of the Senator's legislation.

Mr. GLASS. It was not meant to be sub rosa, because I was going to state openly to the Senate that we could never get the departments together upon the bill until we adopted this amendment or until the committee authorized its chairman to communicate with the Secretary of Commerce and the Postmaster General and put them upon notice that we were going to discontinue this sort of fraud.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose the Senator has had, as I have had, representations from shipping companies who have contracts, protesting vigorously against the amendment to the pending bill and claiming that it would be to their financial ruin. Has the Senator been so advised?

Mr. COPELAND. I have.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know, whether that is true or not. I should like to inquire if there were any investigations or hearings held to find out what the effect would be upon the American merchant marine as the result of the adoption of this amendment without other legislation.

Mr. COPELAND. We had hearings yesterday afternoon, to which I have referred, where the positive statement was made that if this action should be taken by the Congress and no legislation should be enacted to take its place, the American merchant marine would be absolutely ruined.

Mr. WALSH. That is the representation which was made to me, but I confess I am unable to say whether it is founded upon facts or not. Therefore, I inquire again, has there been any study or investigation made or hearings held to determine the effect of the removal suddenly of this amount of subsidy money from the American merchant marine?

Mr. COPELAND. There have been many such hearings and discussions in several committees of the Senate, and particularly in the Commerce Committee, of which I happen to be chairman.

Mr. WALSH. In reference to this particular item?

Mr. COPELAND. On the question of whether the American merchant marine could survive without aid. This question relates to the item under consideration, or, in the absence of the financial support heretofore given, to some substitute for it.

I have no doubt, I may say to my able friend from Massachusetts, that if we were to remove all Government aid from shipping very few lines would survive. One of them would be a line out of the Senator's city of Boston—the United Fruit Line. The International Mercantile Marine would survive, and perhaps two or three other lines; but the great majority of them would not. They are operating on a shoestring. That was well brought out by the Black committee. Unless they have this financial aid they cannot continue to operate.

Mr. WALSH. Would the Senator's bill now pending before his committee remove this item and repeal this law?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; it would give the Maritime Authority the same power that we have heretofore given the President; and that Authority would be directed within a year to cancel or modify every contract and to readjust the financial system in accordance with the new plan without the aid of the money in the pending bill.

That is the thing I have in mind—whether or not we are premature in wiping out the appropriation or whether it would be wiser to continue it this year. I would not ask that it be continued a whole year. I got pretty mad yesterday, as Senators who were there will remember, because of the absolute stupidity of the shipping men. I think if there ever were in the world a lot of "dumb Doras"—whatever that term means; it sounds good to me anyway—they are the men engaged in the American shipping.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand the Senator, he has in mind an agreement between the Department of Commerce and the Post Office Department and the shipping people themselves. Does not the Senator believe if this amendment should be adopted and the $22,000,000 were cut out, it would come nearer to bringing the matter to a head before his committee and before the Congress than anything else that could be done?

Mr. COPELAND. That is possible. I think the prospect has been helpful. I believe the action of the committee has aided in an agreement between the two departments, which was impossible of accomplishment before.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the shipping men of the country are so dumb—I believe the Senator used that term?

Mr. COPELAND. I used the term "dumb Doras", though I am not just sure what it means.

Mr. NORRIS. If they are such ignoramuses, does not the Senator think it is a mistake to appropriate public money and let them have it? Does he not believe we ought to have at least good businessmen to handle it?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not doubt they are good businessmen. I do not want to give the wrong impression. I think they are good businessmen.

The Senator from Nebraska has perhaps sometimes wondered why it is that one guard can take care of 20 inmates in an insane asylum. It really is quite remarkable, when we stop to think about it, that 20 husky insane persons, big, strong fellows, can be taken care of by one little guard. He can take care of them because there is never any unity on the part of the 20 inmates. They never get together.

Mr. GLASS. A good many of them have been getting together here lately, and getting out, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I wonder if the Senator has suspected that the steamship people might not be quite so dumb as they appear on the surface to be? I have been informed by creditable people that the representatives of the Steamship Association who appeared before our committee yesterday and protested against the bill of the Senator from New York had appealed to them to support the bill. I am wondering if there is wisdom in their idea of relieving the Senator's bill from the odium of their support by appearing and insulting the Senator from New York, incurring his antagonism because of their ingratitude, and really at the same time assisting the bill by making an appearance against it?

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps the Senator thinks I am one of the "dumb Doras."

Mr. CLARK. No; I can very readily understand that the Senator from New York is very much outraged at the attitude of these gentlemen, on the principle—

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!

I did not blame the Senator for what he said last night, and I acquit him of any participation in collusion in this attitude on the part of the steamship companies; but it appears to me that it might be very smart strategy for them apparently to criticize the bill of the Senator from New York by indicating that it would deprive them of some rights, and insisting that they would stand only on the Jones-White bill, and do nothing else, and at the same time very much prefer the passage of the bill of the Senator from New York by relieving that bill of the odium of their support.

Mr. COPELAND. I sincerely hope the Senator is right.

Mr. CLARK. I have reason to believe that I am, Mr. President.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think so.

These people who have contracts believe they have vested rights. They believe they are going to be protected in them, and I think probably they will be. The only thing I have in mind is whether it is wise for us actually to give them the sympathetic support of the people who believe in the sacredness of contracts by putting our country in the attitude of actually repudiating the contracts. That is what we shall do if we pass this bill in the form proposed by the committee. We have 42 contracts which, so far as we know, are legal contracts. It has been alleged that they are not, but certainly they are contracts which run from 3 to 8 years each.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, would the adoption of this amendment, if it should be adopted by the Congress, be a violation and a repudiation of those contracts?

Mr. COPELAND. It would.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no, no!

Mr. WALSH. One Senator says "yes" and the other says "no." Which is right?

Mr. GLASS. The Committee on Appropriations did not undertake to deal with maritime matters. This is supposed to be a bill appropriating money for the Post Office Department, but in this respect it is not a bill appropriating money for the Post Office Department. Since 1928 it has been used as a ship-subsidy bill.

If the Congress wishes to enact a ship-subsidy bill, very well; let the Congress do it; but Congressmen are tired of going before the country and undertaking to explain, as has been asserted here, and is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, that the Government is paying $750,000 to carry twelve and a half dollars' worth of mail to South American republics. That is what is going on.

The Senator from New York says the shipping men are dolts. I think they are pretty smart. I think they think we are dolts. We are not going to get any agreement with them as long as we continue this appropriation. That is all they want.

We have not discussed in the Appropriations Committee whether these contracts are valid or invalid. We have not undertaken to repudiate any contracts. The Department may go on and make as many contracts as they please; they may resume operations under the contracts they have already made, or they may modify them if the Postmaster General is correct in his statement that the contracts are fraudulent. We have not undertaken to deal with that question. We are now simply making an appropriation for carrying foreign mail, and we are advised by the Postmaster General that, on the poundage basis, $4,500,000 will entirely cover the cost of carrying foreign mails; so no repudiation is involved in the report of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. COPELAND. The only doubt I have about the wisdom of the action is the brief period between the date when we imagine we may adjourn and the 1st of July.

Mr. GLASS. What I have said in response to that to the Senator from New York and to others, is that it was thought by the Appropriations Committee that if Congress wishes to appropriate $22,000,000 to subsidize shipping, it will have ample opportunity to do that between now and adjournment. Inevitably, there will be another deficiency bill; and if Congress wishes to appropriate $22,000,000 to subsidize shipping, it will have ample opportunity to do it; but we ought to stop this miserable fraud of pretending to appropriate $26,500,000 to carry foreign mails when we are advised by the Post Office Department that it requires only $4,500,000, if quite that much.

That is all the Appropriations Committee has done; and it ought to have been done long ago.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I take it from what the distinguished chairman of the committee says that in the event of the passage of a ship-subsidy bill, in all human probability, at least so far as his committee is concerned, there will be the recommendation of whatever funds are needed. I do not think the funds needed will exceed the amount that has been heretofore appropriated. In my judgment, the necessary amount will be less; but I assume that in the event of the enactment of a ship-subsidy bill there will be, in the deficiency bill, the necessary amount of money. So I do not have to worry about that part of the matter.

Of course, however, that does leave us in this position: If we do not pass a subsidy bill, if we do not make provision through some other appropriation act for the money to take care of the shipping, on the 1st day of July, 42 of the great steamship lines of this country, practically all the ships we have in foreign service, will be without means of carrying on.

That is a large problem. I do not know that this is the time to settle it; yet, after all, by taking this action today we are doing the very thing I suggest: We are putting ourselves in the position of repudiating contracts and of taking away from these lines the money necessary to enable them to operate.

Now let me say a word more about that subject:

Under the Jones-White Act the money allocated by the Postmaster General to a given line was only indirectly related to the poundage of mail. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has spoken about "a hatful of mail", and I have forgotten how much money appropriated to carry it—an enormous sum. Of course, however, the amount allocated by the Postmaster General was to cover not alone the difference in cost of operation to establish parity, but also the money for construction. That money, which presumably under the subterfuge of the act was supposed to be given for service rendered, as a matter of fact was the contribution of the Government to the building of refrigerator ships which the Navy believed to be badly needed. That is the explanation. There are sufficient explanations of these things, but that is aside from the point.

Now the question is, Are we ready today to vote out of the pending appropriation bill the sum of money which we have been putting in the annual bills since the passage of the Merchant Marine Act of 1928, in the hope that it may facilitate agreement upon a ship-subsidy bill which may be passed? All the time we have in the background the possibility—and I think, from what the Senator from Massachusetts said, perhaps the probability—that there will be no ship-subsidy legislation. In that event on the 1st of July we shall have repudiated our contracts, and American shipping, as I see it, will be destroyed.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the story involved in this controversy is to me a very simple one.

For a number of years in the Post Office appropriation bill we have been appropriating $26,500,000 to carry foreign mail. As the Senate knows, the Postmaster General has very bitterly denounced many of these contracts, if not all of them, as being fraudulent, irregular, and contrary to the law which required advertisement and bidding, and he has asked authority to put a stop to that sort of thing, with the result that the Post Office Department conferred with the Commerce Department with a view to ridding the Post Office Department of the annual charge of $26,500,000 for carrying foreign mails, when the proper charge should have been less than $4,000,000.

These negotiations have been in progress for a period of 2 years. The Post Office Department reported to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it could not get the Department of Commerce to come to any agreement whatsoever with respect to these matters. That feature of the controversy was taken up by the Committee on Appropriations when it was proposed to repeat this fraudulent transaction—and I say fraudulent because it is not $26,500,000 for carrying foreign mails; it takes less than $4,500,000 to carry foreign mails, and the balance is a ship subsidy.

We determined then to subtract from this appropriation about $22,000,000, and, acting upon the advice of the Post Office Department, to appropriate $4,500,000 for carrying foreign mails. As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I was authorized to communicate our determination to the Secretary of Commerce and to the Postmaster General. That I did; and the day after I did so the Department of Commerce and the Post Office Department came to an agreement upon a proposed bill to subsidize the shipping of this country, an agreement which they had never been able theretofore to reach.

The Committee on Appropriations was advised that they had come to that agreement, and I was told that it was an agreement satisfactory to the President of the United States. I have never talked with the President about it, and I do not know of my own knowledge that it is agreeable to him, but I was very definitely told that it was.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I note that the amendment merely strikes out the entire appropriation. Is $4,500,000 appropriated at some other place in the bill?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; on the preceding page.

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 60, line 9, the Senator will find the provision.

Mr. GLASS. The Committee on Appropriations more readily agreed to do this because it was not an appropriation for carrying the foreign mails, upon the supposition that if the Congress of the United States really wants to appropriate $22,000,000 for ship-subsidy purposes, it will be given ample opportunity to do that when the next deficiency bill is presented.

Talk about these shipping men being stupid! They are discerning. They are wise. If I were not speaking in the Senate, I might say they are tricky. They know perfectly well that if this appropriation goes through, as long as we make the appropriation they will never agree either to a cancellation or a revision of existing contracts, although the Postmaster General has pronounced some of the contracts to be fraudulent, and perhaps all of them to be irregular.

Those men are businessmen. The Senator from New York says they are businessmen. Undoubtedly, they are businessmen. They have business prescience and sense enough to know that if the Congress keeps on making this fraudulent appropriation under the guise of furnishing money for carrying the foreign mails, their contracts will never be touched and never will be revised in any sense.

I do not know that the contracts are fraudulent; I do not know anything about them, nor does the Committee on Appropriations know anything about them. Some members of the committee, some of the outstanding, some of the most experienced members of the committee, believe the contracts to be fraudulent; but whether or not they are fraudulent, they are never going to be reconsidered or modified unless we stop making this appropriation under the pretext that it is for carrying the foreign mails, when that is not what it is for.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to say just a few words with reference to the situation now being discussed, particularly with regard to the bill introduced by the Senator from New York upon the agreement finally made by the Post Office Department and the Commerce Department.

I have endeavored to get in touch with the Postmaster General, since the discussion rose on the floor, but I find that he is in New York. I endeavored to get in touch with the Postmaster General because I was directly and positively told by those who participated in the agreement that the President had not seen the bill, had not approved the bill, was not approving the bill, and that it was the result only of an agreement between the Post Office Department and the Department of Commerce.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, I was told by those who were directly involved in the controversy that the proposed agreement was not only satisfactory to the two departments but was satisfactory to the President, and would be handed in to the Senator from New York according to the agreement on the following Monday; and I was told this on the preceding Saturday.

Mr. BLACK. The statement I made was not in any way intended to indicate that the Senator had not received exactly the information which he said he had received. I was able a few moments ago to get in touch with the Second Assistant Postmaster General, who participated in the agreements. I asked him the direct question. I told him I was not sure as to the information which had been given me as to whether the President had approved this bill. He stated to me that if the President had ever approved it, he had no knowledge of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to be informed what difference it makes, so far as this appropriation is concerned, whether these two departments have agreed on some other bill or not. I am not sure that does not have a bearing, but I cannot see the relevancy of that information.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to answer the Senator's question as to the reason why I made the statement.

So far as I am concerned, whether the President is for the bill or not will not affect my own ideas of the measure, and I do not think it should affect the action of the Committee on Appropriations. I fully agree with the distinguished chairman of that committee in the statement he has made that whatever is done hereafter this appropriation should not be made in this manner, for it is a fraud on its face.

I can state my reason for bringing this matter on the floor at this time. It is that I think the bill which has been offered is so indefensible, is so outrageous, and opens up the doors of the Treasury so much wider even than they have been opened heretofore that I do not want any statement to be given either to me, to the distinguished chairman of the committee, or to anyone else that the President was for it unless the President himself made the statement that he was for this particular bill.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I have never talked with the President about it. I have never seen the particular bill referred to, or any other bill on this subject. All I am trying to do is to eliminate this fraud from the Post Office appropriation bill.

Mr. BLACK. With which effort I am in thorough accord. A Senator sitting beside me has just suggested that I make it plain that the bill to which I am referring is not the appropriation bill, with which I am in hearty accord—

Mr. GLASS. I understand that.

Mr. BLACK. But the bill offered by the Senator from New York, having the agreement of the Post Office Department and the Commerce Department.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Please make clear that the reference is to the bill which I presented as it was modified by agreement between the Post Office Department and the Department of Commerce. Please indicate that the reference is not to my original bill. The Senator is referring to the bill which is now under consideration by the committee, which is the bill which contains the amendments of the Post Office Department and the Commerce Department. So far as I am concerned, it becomes the bill of the Post Office and Commerce Departments.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I shall be glad to distinguish between the two, because I think the latter bill, as offered by the Post Office Department and the Commerce Department, is a decided improvement, if a thing so bad can be improved, on the bill originally offered by the Senator from New York.

I simply wanted to place in the RECORD the statement that I am in hearty accord with the action of the Appropriations Committee. Whatever is done, it is my judgment that honesty requires that we cease to appropriate money ostensibly for carrying the mails, when in reality it is not used for carrying the mails.

It is ridiculous, for instance, to appropriate money for carrying the mails on boats when the evidence in many hearings has shown beyond dispute that the only letters ever carried are letters which are written by the companies themselves and placed on the boats for the purpose of complying with the law. I do not criticize the companies for writing those letters. It shows, however, the absurdity of the situation when we appropriate money for carrying the mail, when in reality it is a subsidy.

I am thoroughly in accord with the idea expressed by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee that if we are to grant a subsidy it should be honestly and squarely called a subsidy. The President's message was to that effect. In that message he did not outline the bill which was to be passed. Of course, even if he had done so, Senators would still exercise their own judgment as to which measure they would support. I believe it will be in the interest of fairness and honesty to pass this appropriation bill as recommended by the committee and then, if the Congress desires to pass a subsidy measure, it may be done.

I have made this statement simply in order that there may be no misunderstanding until finally the President may reach a decision on some particular measure. If he does, I assume he will send a message concerning it. However, I believe that at this stage the proper and accurate statement is that the bill introduced by the Senator from New York, amending his previous measure, is simply a bill agreed to by the Post Office and Commerce Departments.

Mr. GLASS. It may be said that, if neither that bill nor any other ship subsidy bill is reported to the Senate for action, but the Senate wishes to appropriate $22,000,000 for shipping purposes, the Senate may do so in the next deficiency bill.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct; and I myself think the action now proposed will actually aid to get some kind of legislation along such lines that we shall not be compelled to apologize for the legislation on the ground that the law on its face is a deception.

Mr. GLASS. It is the only thing that will aid it, and it is the only thing that has ever brought into agreement the Commerce Department and the Post Office Department.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I desire to say a brief word about this amendment and the situation as it has developed here in the course of the debate.

I confess I do not have the feeling about this amendment that perhaps I should have; for, as I see it, through the action or inaction of the present administration, the American merchant marine is doomed, and it makes little difference whether this amendment stays in or whether it goes out.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has referred to the present mail payments as fraudulent or dishonest, or words of that import. I freely concede that this action is an indirect method of subsidizing the merchant marine; but I deny that it is either fraudulent or dishonest, for it is a thing which has been done openly, it is a thing which has been notorious to all men, it is a course of action which was in the minds of the Congress of the United States when the act of 1928 became law through its action. It is not dishonest, it is not fraudulent, but it is rendering aid to merchant ships in precisely the way that Congress intended. It is indirect, and in that sense the Senator from Virginia is justified in his criticism.

Mr. President, the action of the committee, as I understand, is based upon the understanding or the allegation that the mail contracts which have been entered into are fraudulent and illegal.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no, Mr. President; the Senator totally misstates the case.

Mr. WHITE. Then I withdraw that statement.

Mr. GLASS. We did not discuss the contracts at all. We have not said the payments were fraudulent; but I have said, and I do repeat, that this appropriation is fraudulent because it pretends to be an appropriation for carrying the ocean mail, and it is not that at all.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I withdraw what I said about members of the Committee on Appropriations, and I make the statement that the assaults on these payments have generally been made because of the allegation that the contracts are fraudulent.

I should concede freely, I should concede openly, that there are many of these contracts which, in my view, are improvident, many of them which are unwise, some of them which should not have been entered into at all; but I deny that the contracts are illegal. I differ radically from the Senator from Alabama in the view he holds with respect to that matter. I disagree entirely with the Post Office Department, with respect to that matter. I call attention to the fact, as the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] has already done, that no one with responsibility, with respect to these contracts, has moved upon the assumption that the contracts are illegal. For more than 2½ years of time the President of the United States has had authority under the act of Congress to cancel or to modify any of the contracts upon the ground of their illegality, or upon the ground that they were contrary to the public interest, and the President has acted in no single case.

The Attorney General's office is charged with the enforcement of the laws of the United States. It is charged with a due regard for the interests of the United States. A representative of the Attorney General's office was present throughout the hearings of the Black committee. If there is an illegal contract, if the United States has been defrauded, manifestly it is the duty of the Attorney General's office to act in the premises; and yet no action has been taken by that authority in the 2½ years of time during which this matter has been under consideration and has been a matter of controversy.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

Mr. WHITE. I hope the Senator will not interrupt me. I shall be very brief.

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely desire to call attention to the fact that while the President has not canceled the contracts, he has recommended an entirely different system which does not include these contracts at all, and which would mean their virtual cancellation by a new law.

Mr. WHITE. The President has recommended a different system, and he has recommended that new contracts of a different character be substituted for the existing contracts.

Another officer of the Government has responsibility. That officer is the Comptroller General of the United States. Year after year payments have been made under these contracts, and never has the Comptroller General of the United States assumed to say that any payment has been illegally made.

There are the three officials, the three departments of this Government with a direct responsibility to stop payments, to cancel these contracts, to move in some direction with respect to these contracts, if they were obtained collusively or fraudulently or if they were illegal.

Mr. President, I give it as my opinion, for whatever it may be worth, that no court will find the contracts illegal. In my opinion, they may all be justified under the letter and under the spirit of the law.

What will be the practical effect of the withdrawal of this appropriation? At the present time there are about $89,000,000 of construction loans outstanding, money owed to the Government of the United States; and an authority of the Department of Commerce tells us that, if mail payments are withheld, companies owing $37,000,000 of that $89,000,000 will be in the hands of receivers almost overnight. He tells us that there are contractors owing something like $12,000,000 more who are right in the twilight zone, almost ready to knock on the door of the bankruptcy courts. Forty-nine million dollars is put in jeopardy by withholding this appropriation of $26,000,000.

That $89,000,000 is owed by some 21 companies having mail contracts in the United States today. In my opinion, out of those 21 contracts there are not more than 3 contractors who will be able to meet their obligations, if we withhold the annual appropriation under which the payments to them by the terms of the contracts should be made. It is proposed that we shall save here $26,000,000, and if we do we shall have companies owing the Government of the United States in excess of $49,000,000 in the bankruptcy courts or in receivership almost overnight, and the United States will get out of the transaction nothing, or it will get back on its hands ships it does not want.

Mr. President, that is the practical phase of this problem. I say that I do not feel so keenly about it as perhaps I should, because I am frank to say I see little to encourage me in the belief that merchant-marine legislation is to be enacted during the life of this Congress. I have almost a certainty that merchant-marine legislation which will be effective in behalf of the American ships will not be enacted during this Congress.

Mr. President, the real question here is not whether we are going to appropriate $22,000,000 or $26,000,000. The real question here is whether we are going to bankrupt companies of the United States to which we are under contractual obligation. The real question is whether we are going to haul down the flag and get off the seas.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, is that the real question? This money would not be available until the 1st of July, and between now and the adjournment of the present session of Congress, if the Congress desires to appropriate $22,500,000, to save the shipping interests it will have ample opportunity to do so. The money appropriated here will not be available until the 1st of July.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 3, to strike out:

Foreign mail service, Merchant Marine Act: For transportation of foreign mails under contracts authorized by the Merchant Marine Act of 1928 (U. S. C., title 46, secs. 861-889; title 46, secs. 886-891x), including the cost of advertising in connection with the award of contracts authorized by said act, $26,500,000: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be paid on contract no. 56 to the Seatrain Co.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 21, to strike out "$12,000,000" and insert "$12,250,000", so as to read:

Contract Air Mail Service: For the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, as authorized by law, and for the incidental expenses thereof, including not to exceed $18,800 for supervisory officials and clerks at air-mail transfer points, and not to exceed $42,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia and incidental and travel expenses, $12,250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General", on page 63, line 14, after the word "boxes" and the semicolon, to insert "not to exceed $35,000 for the salvage, repair, assembly, and installation in units of lockboxes obtained from public buildings demolished or not longer used for post offices and for the purchase and installation of new lockboxes to complete and supplement such units, to be furnished to post offices of the second and third classes."

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I object to that amendment on this basis: It seems that the Post Office Department desires to expend the sum of $35,000 for resalvaging and repairing certain post-office boxes taken from vacated Government buildings. I understand that the manufacturer of these boxes, whose factory is located in Indianapolis, Ind., can and will manufacture them new and furnish them for a price equivalent to the price for which the Government says it can salvage them. If that be the case, there would seem to be no reason why the Government should be in the business of repairing post-office boxes when it can buy them new for less than it can repair them and reinstall them in other buildings.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the trouble is that I think the Senator from Indiana has been misinformed. The Post Office authorities very strongly urge the restoration of the limitation of $35,000 for the rehabilitation of Government-owned lockbox equipment salvaged from vacated Federal buildings. This matter is fully discussed in the hearings. To date a total of 30,096 lockboxes have been reconditioned and shipped to postmasters, and there are approximately 120,000 lockboxes still to be reconditioned. The restoration of the limitation of $35,000 would prevent the interruption of the progress on this work. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General feels so strongly on the question of the restoration of the $35,000 item that he is meeting the cuts of the House committee of $20,000 for the purchase of twine, $75,000 for conveyor systems, and $25,000 for complete equipment for first- and second-class offices.

The Department, Mr. President, feels that a great saving will be effectuated by reconditioning the old lockboxes taken from buildings that have been vacated and using them in new buildings when the boxes so reconditioned are just as good as new ones would be. I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the fact simply is that the Government goes into the lockbox business.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it is using the lockboxes that it already has.

Mr. MINTON. It does not use them for its own purposes, except that it leases them or sells them to postmasters who have to furnish boxes in the post offices which they operate. It is not that the Government is using them in any post office where the Government itself has to furnish the boxes, but it wants to take its old boxes and sell them to the postmasters whom it requires to buy post-office boxes. So what it amounts to is that the Government is taking this old equipment, going into the market, competing with the manufacturer, and furnishing boxes that are remade, to postmasters who have to buy them at a price for which they could buy them new.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some years ago there was an investigation of what is known as the Keyless Post Office Box Co., which, I think, was located out in the Middle West. It was found that they were the sole makers of the lockboxes, and naturally that company would like to continue to have the complete monopoly of the lockbox business. The lockboxes covered by this item that the Government can use—they are already in existence, and they can be used at a very great saving. By all means, it seems to me that the amendment ought to be agreed to, and I hope the Senate will agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 24, after the word "expenses", to strike out "$2,345,000" and insert "$2,380,000", and on page 65, line 6, after the word "except", to insert "lock boxes, as herein provided and", so as to read:

Post-office stationery, equipment, and supplies: For stationery for the Postal Service, including the money-order and registry system; and also for the purchase of supplies for the Postal Savings System, including rubber stamps, canceling devices, certificates, envelopes, and stamps for use in evidencing deposits, and free penalty envelopes; and for the reimbursement of the Secretary of the Treasury for expenses incident to the preparation, issue, and registration of the bonds authorized by the act of June 25, 1910 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 760); for miscellaneous equipment and supplies, including the purchase and repair of furniture, package boxes, posts, trucks, baskets, satchels, straps, letter-box paint, baling machines, perforating machines, duplicating machines, printing presses, directories, cleaning supplies, and the manufacture, repair, and exchange of equipment, the erection and painting of letter-box equipment, and for the purchase and repair of presses and dies for use in the manufacture of letter boxes; not to exceed $35,000 for the salvage, repair, assembly, and installation in units of lockboxes obtained from public buildings demolished or not longer used for post offices and for the purchase and installation of new lockboxes to complete and supplement such units, to be furnished to post offices of the second and third classes; for post-marking, rating, money-order stamps, and electrotype plates and repairs to same; metal, rubber, and combination type, dates and figures, type holders, ink pads for canceling and stamping purposes, and for the purchase, exchange, and repair of typewriting machines, envelope-opening machines, and computing machines, copying presses, numbering machines, time recorders, letter balances, scales (exclusive of dormant or built-in platform scales in Federal buildings), test weights, and miscellaneous articles purchased and furnished directly to the Postal Service, including complete equipment and furniture for post offices in leased and rented quarters; for miscellaneous expenses in the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blueprints, including tracing for photolithographic reproduction; for other expenditures necessary and incidental to post offices of the first, second, and third classes, and offices of the fourth class having or to have rural-delivery service, and for letter boxes; for the purchase of atlases and geographical and technical works not to exceed $1,500; for wrapping twine and tying devices; for expenses incident to the shipment of supplies, including hardware, boxing, packing, and not exceeding $55,000 for the pay of employees in connection therewith in the District of Columbia; for rental, purchase, exchange, and repair of canceling machines and motors, mechanical mail-handling apparatus, and other labor-saving devices, including cost of power in rented buildings and miscellaneous expenses of installation and operation of same, including not to exceed $35,000 for salaries of 13 traveling mechanicians, and for traveling expenses, $2,380,000.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 11, to strike out "$12,750,000" and insert "$13,000,000", so as to read:

Rent, light, and fuel: For rent, light, fuel, and water, for first-, second-, and third-class post offices, and the cost of advertising for lease proposals for such offices, $13,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public buildings, maintenance and operation", on page 68, line 10, after the word "activities", to strike out "$14,500,000" and insert "$15,300,000", so as to read:

Operating force: For personal services in connection with the operation of public buildings, including the Washington Post Office and the Customhouse Building in the District of Columbia, operated by the Post Office Department, together with the grounds thereof and the equipment and furnishings therein, including telephone operators for the operation of telephone switchboards or equivalent telephone switchboard equipment in such buildings jointly serving in each case two or more governmental activities, $15,300,000: Provided, That in no case shall the rates of compensation for the mechanical labor force be in excess of the rates current at the time and in the place where such services are employed.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, it appears that the House of Representatives agreed upon $14,500,000 and the Appropriations Committee of the Senate expanded it $800,000. I think an explanation should be made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan kindly restate his question? I was diverted for a moment.

Mr. COUZENS. There is an amendment on page 68, line 10, increasing the amount appropriated by the House from $14,500,000 to $15,300,000, an increase of $800,000 without any explanation whatsoever.

Mr. McKELLAR. This item relates to the operating force in public buildings.

The Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives in presenting this bill to the House, as appears on page 23 of Report No. 1935, doubted if the general average of occupancy of new buildings would reach the estimated figure of 6 months. The Fourth Assistant Postmaster General points out, however, that on page 549 of the hearings before the House subcommittee, the chairman stated:

I believe our committee last year estimated that there would be about a 60-percent occupancy, and cut your appropriation accordingly.

His estimate for 1936 was based on a 60-percent occupancy, while the estimate for 1937 was based on a 50-percent occupancy, or 10 percent less than that allowed by the committee last year. On page 798 of the Treasury hearings before the House subcommittee, Admiral Peoples stated:

The schedule of work contemplates and requires that 90 percent of the total number of projects authorized under the act of August 12, 1935, should be on the market by the end of February.

The restoration of the amount eliminated by the House of Representatives is essential for the employment of personnel for the operation of new Federal buildings upon their completion and to permit of the vacation of postal quarters under lease.

As the Senator from Michigan knows, a great many of the new buildings are being completed; a number have been completed in the District of Columbia. This is the estimate by Admiral Peoples, of the Procurement Division of the Treasury, and Mr. Purdum, the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. I wish to say that I have had a long acquaintance with these gentlemen, one of whom, Admiral Peoples, I have known since the World War, and I can say that he is one of the most careful, prudent, and economical businessmen of whom I know in connection with the Government. And I think this appropriation ought to be allowed.

Mr. COUZENS. Does not the Senator from Tennessee believe that there is a very large difference represented by dollars between the opinion of the Appropriations Committee of the House and the Appropriations Committee of the Senate?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but it is because a very large number of these new buildings have been completed; but, at the same time, the appropriation recommended will save the Government because of the discontinuance of present leased buildings throughout the country. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 2, after the word "herein", to strike out "$4,650,000" and insert "$4,700,000", so as to read:

Operating supplies, public buildings: For fuel, steam, gas, and electric current for lighting, heating, and power purposes, water, ice, lighting supplies, removal of ashes and rubbish, snow and ice, cutting grass and weeds, washing towels, telephone service for custodial forces, and for miscellaneous services and supplies, tools and appliances, for the operation of completed and occupied public buildings and grounds, including mechanical and electrical equipment, but not the repair thereof, operated by the Post Office Department, including the Washington Post Office and the Customhouse Building in the District of Columbia, and for the transportation of articles and supplies authorized herein, $4,700,000.

The next amendment was, on page 69, line 18, after the word "safes", to insert "safe and vault protective devices", and in line 20, after the word "Department", to strike out "$600,000" and insert "$650,000", so as to read:

Furniture, carpets, and safes, public buildings: For the procurement, including transportation, of furniture, carpets, safes, safe and vault protective devices, and repairs of same, for use in public buildings which are now, or may hereafter be, operated by the Post Office Department, $650,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, after line 15, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. No part of the money appropriated under this act shall be paid to any person for the filling of any position for which he or she has been nominated after the Senate upon vote has failed to confirm the nomination of such person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments, with the exception of the one passed over, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 23, line 6, after the word "duty", it is proposed to strike out "in the District of Columbia" and insert "at Coast Guard headquarters", so as to read:

COAST GUARD

Office of the Commandant: For personal services in the District of Columbia, $389,240: Provided, That no part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used to pay any enlisted man of the Coast Guard while detailed for duty at Coast Guard headquarters if such detail increases the total number of enlisted men detailed on such duty at any time above 10.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask the Senate to return to page 20, to the item under the subhead "Federal Alcohol Administration", and I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, in behalf of the committee, on page 20, line 21, after the word "expenses", to strike out the words "$400,000, of which sum not to exceed $218,800 shall be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia", and to insert in lieu thereof "$550,000", so as to make the paragraph read:

FEDERAL ALCOHOL ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: For the purpose of administering the provisions of the "Federal Alcohol Administration Act", approved August 29, 1935 (49 Stat. 977), including personal and other services and rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; supplies and materials; equipment; communication service; stationery; travel and subsistence expenses as authorized by law; maintenance, repair, and operation of automobiles; lawbooks, books of reference, magazines, periodicals, and newspapers; contract stenographic reporting service; the securing of evidence of violations of the act; and miscellaneous and contingent expenses, $550,000.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Budget Bureau estimated the amount now suggested, and I am not mistaken in supposing the President wants it, because I have a personal letter from him in which he states he very carefully considered the item, that he went into the matter very thoroughly before estimates were submitted, and feels that the amount is essential in the proper administration of liquor control. I hope the Senate will adopt the increased amount, at least, and let it go to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia in behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. I send to the desk another amendment in behalf of the committee and ask its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 61, line 18, it is proposed to strike out "$18,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$22,200", and in line 19 to strike out "$42,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$46,460", so as to make the paragraph read:

Contract Air Mail Service: For the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, as authorized by law, and for the incidental expenses thereof, including not to exceed $22,200 for supervisory officials and clerks at air-mail transfer points, and not to exceed $46,460 for personal services in the District of Columbia and incidental and travel expenses, $12,250,000.

Mr. GLASS. That does not increase the total appropriation. It merely changes the allocation of funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia in behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, in connection with the continuing debate on Panama Canal toll legislation, Senate bill 2288, I think it most important that before prescribing by law a method of assessing tolls which differs from the one that has been in effect for over 20 years, the Senate should know, as nearly as is possible, just how this new method will affect the tolls paid by the various classes of ships using the Canal.

There can be no possible question that if tolls are assessed under this bill at the rates suggested by the Secretary of War, there will result an enormous increase in the tolls of the general cargo and passenger ships, and a very substantial decrease in the tolls of tankers and other bulk carriers that for the most part are industrially owned and do not serve the public as common carriers, notwithstanding the additional charge of 10 cents a ton on laden tankers. Furthermore, the increases imposed on American ships are much heavier proportionately than those imposed on foreign ships of the same classes, and the decreases enjoyed by foreign bulk carriers are proportionately greater than those granted American ships of this class.

I have here a tabulation which shows how this bill would affect the traffic that actually moved through the Canal during the past 2 fiscal years. This tabulation reflects the changes that the bill will bring about much more accurately than data based on an earlier period, when the character of the Canal traffic was quite different than it is today.

I ask to have this tabulation printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] for the committee amendment.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, last night I delivered a short radio address, which ordinarily would be placed in the RECORD by unanimous consent. However, it is very short and will take only a few minutes for me to deliver here, which I desire to do at this time.

Mr. President, propaganda is one of the most vicious and ingenious methods of deceiving the American people. It is well known that the great majority of news agencies and newspapers of this country are strongly partisan and many of those which are not partisan are ultraconservative. So-called news coming out of Washington is almost exclusively controlled by these agencies and papers. The result is that the newspapers of the country, and this includes not only Republican but many of the Democratic papers, print whatever may be sent out of Washington criticizing and abusing the Roosevelt administration, and, as a consequence, many honest people are misled by this propaganda.

No better illustration of the power of this propaganda can be found than the statements constantly flaunted before the American people concerning the increase of the national debt by the Roosevelt administration. The substance of this propaganda, whatever its various forms, is that in 1920, under the Wilson administration our national debt rose to a peak of $26,500,000,000; that the economical Republicans, led by the thrifty Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury in three Republican administrations, by December 31, 1930, had, by his skill and ability as a financier, reduced the national debt to $15,700,000,000; that the wicked, wasteful, and reckless Democrats, under the Roosevelt administration, have increased that debt from $15,700,000,000 to $31,000,000,000 or more; or, as the usual cry is, that Roosevelt has more than doubled the national debt.

This propaganda has been advertised thousands of times in thousands of publications and by thousands of speakers during the past 3 years. This propaganda never remotely suggests that the great majority of the Republicans during the war voted for the war debt of $26,500,000,000. It does not even remotely suggest that the reason the national debt was reduced after the war was not because of the thrifty, ingenious, and financial wizard (?) Andrew W. Mellon, but because of the following provision of law governing that reduction passed by the Democratic administration under Woodrow Wilson, approved March 3, 1919. I quote that law:

That there is hereby created in the Treasury a cumulative sinking fund for the retirement of bonds and notes issued under the First Liberty Bond Act, the Second Liberty Bond Act, the Third Liberty Bond Act, the Fourth Liberty Bond Act, or under this act—and outstanding on July 1, 1920. The sinking fund and all additions thereto are hereby appropriated for the payment of such bonds and notes at maturity or for the redemption or purchase thereof before maturity by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Our great United States Senator CARTER GLASS, one of the ablest Secretaries of the Treasury ever to occupy that office, was the author of that amendment; and, instead of Mellon's having anything to do with reducing the public debt except clerical service, exactly the contrary was the fact. It was reduced by reason of the mandate of a Democratic law, as recommended by the then Democratic Secretary of the Treasury, CARTER GLASS, than whom there is not a truer patriot, nor greater statesman, nor a more far-sighted financier in this or any other country. If Mr. Mellon had failed to carry out this law, he would have been subject to impeachment and trial by the Senate; and yet this propaganda would have people believe that the thrift and financial shrewdness (?) of Mr. Mellon reduced the national debt. Poppycock! He was merely carrying out the law that had been passed in a previous administration.

In like manner these propagandists tell us in clarion voice that the national debt was reduced to $15,700,000,000 on December 31, 1930; but never is there the remotest allusion to the fact that thereafter, between December 31, 1930, and March 4, 1933, Hoover increased the national debt more than $5,000,000,000! Nor, perhaps have the people ever seen the figures or been told that when Hoover went out of office on March 4, 1933, the national debt had been increased to $20,700,000,000! In other words, after December 31, 1930, Mr. Hoover increased the national debt in the remaining 2 years and 2 months over $5,000,000,000!

Here I am not speaking from information gathered elsewhere. I have obtained from the Treasury Department itself the figures I am now giving. I have taken them from the books of the United States Government.

What are the real facts as shown by the books of the Treasury concerning the increase of the national debt by Mr. Roosevelt? Plainly stated, they are that when Mr. Hoover turned the Government over to Mr. Roosevelt on March 4, 1933, the national debt was $20,700,000,000. I hope Senators will keep that figure in their minds for a moment. Since that time the debt has been increased by Mr. Roosevelt to $28,800,000,000. It is true that on the 4th of March 1936 the national debt as reported by the Treasury was $30,500,000,000, but that report shows that there was a cash balance in the general fund at that time of $1,700,000,000; and, therefore, that sum being deducted, the national debt was less than $28,800,000,000 on March 4, 1936.

I am giving the round numbers. I have the exact dollars and cents all the way along. In this address I am merely giving the round numbers in millions and billions.

In other words, in spite of all this propaganda about the increase in the national debt by Roosevelt, spread over the pages of millions of tons of newspapers and news-agency stories and like tons of magazine stories in the last 3 years, the facts are that the Treasury figures show that in the last 2 years and 2 months of Hoover's administration the debt was increased $5,000,000,000, and in the last 3 years of Roosevelt's administration the debt has been increased $8,800,000,000 more!

Keep these figures in mind: Under Hoover the debt was increased $5,000,000,000 in 2 years and 2 months. Under Roosevelt the debt was increased $8,800,000,000 in 3 years. Yet these news agencies, newspapers, and magazines continue to publish accounts of the "extravagances" of the Roosevelt administration, and refer to the "economies" of the Hoover administration. All poppycock! Hoover adds to the national debt $5,000,000,000 in 2 years and 2 months, and, so far as beneficially affecting the depression is concerned, he might as well have gotten together $5,000,000,000, reduced it to ashes, and then scattered the ashes in the ocean! On the other hand, Roosevelt spends $8,800,000,000 in 3 years, and makes the country prosperous and happy, and restores prosperity to our people; and yet this pernicious and untrue propaganda would make the public believe that Roosevelt has squandered the taxpayers' money without doing any good, while Hoover and Mellon would have saved the country if they had had the opportunity! They had the opportunity for 4 years, and our country was bankrupt when Mr. Hoover went out of office.

Not only that; the net national indebtedness is not $28,800,000,000 today. When it got down to $15,700,000,000 in December 1930 the Government owned no commercial obligations to offset any part of the debt; but on March 4, 1936, it owned $3,900,000,000 of what might be called commercial assets, like stock in banks, loans and mortgages made by the R. F. C., and the like, and also $2,000,000,000 of credit in the stabilization fund, or a total in round numbers of $5,900,000,000, which, by a simple subtraction, would reduce the debt to $22,900,000,000; and in order to be perfectly just to the Hoover administration, because these figures come from the record, I wish to say that $2,000,000,000 of this commercial paper or equities in banks accumulated during the Hoover administration. Three billion nine hundred million dollars of these offsets or equities or obligations, which are sound offsets to the debt, arose in Roosevelt's 3 years, and $2,000,000,000 arose during Mr. Hoover's Presidency. The result, however, is that when these obligations now owned by the Government are taken from the national debt—and they are perfectly good obligations, and are proper offsets—the net national debt on March 4, 1936, was $22,800,000,000. So the real result is that Mr. Roosevelt has increased the actual national debt comparatively very little since he took office, instead of having destroyed the country by increasing the national debt, as has been so often said:

But oh what a difference in results there has been! Hoover increased the national debt $5,000,000,000 in 2 years and 2 months, and the depression was worse than when it had begun. His haphazard, unplanned, and in some cases entirely fruitless spendings resulted in thousands of failed banks, receiverships everywhere, business on its last legs, industry hopeless, helpless, and insolvent, and agriculture destroyed, the prices of all agricultural products having gone down to even less than cost of production.

Ah, but how different has been the result of Roosevelt's spending! It is true that the national debt has increased $8,800,000,000, not for the moment counting the $5,900,000,000 of good, merchantable assets that I have just explained. But the banks today are all solvent.

Under our $5,000 guaranty not a depositor in a bank has lost any money during the past 3 years of Roosevelt's administration. Business is booming all over the country. Anyone with a grain of sense must know, from reading the daily newspapers, that it is booming in every part of our common country.

Transportation is in the black again. Industry is back on its feet, and is getting better every day, and agriculture is better than it has been in the last 15 years. Our whole country is prospering. Prosperity is not around the corner, as was claimed in the Hoover administration, and improperly claimed, because they never could find the corner behind which it was hiding. Prosperity is out in front in every part of our beloved country, inviting every industrious person to enjoy its benefits, and the plain men and women of our land are praising Roosevelt for his planned and effective policies which have removed the depression from our midst.

Mr. President, possibly the severest critics of the Roosevelt administration are bankers, publishers, and newspapers, and this apparently without regard to party politics. I have no quarrel with these three powerful groups of our citizens. As a rule they have all three been unusually kind to me, but I do for a moment express my utter incapacity to understand why so many in these groups should be bitterly opposed to the President and his administration when he and that administration have done as much for these three groups as for any other three groups that could be mentioned in the country, or more.

It must be remembered that prior to March 4, 1933, innumerable members of these three groups were in the hands of receivers, and exceedingly few of them were making any money at all. In 1932 the net incomes from income-reporting banks amounted to $16,280,938, while in 1934 the net incomes of banks reporting incomes had increased to the enormous amount of $50,230,071. Besides, while there were six or eight thousand bank failures in the Hoover administration, there have been only 31 since Mr. Roosevelt came into office, and the Comptroller of the Currency tells me that practically all of the 31 failures were due to defalcations of officers or employees.

Besides that, by reason of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, approved by President Roosevelt, substantially not a dollar has been lost by any bank depositor in America. Can my good friends, the bankers, wonder that with this vast increase in the profits and business of banks since 1933 some of us marvel that so many of these bankers are criticizing and opposing the Roosevelt administration, which has safely brought them out of utter financial ruin and restored them to prosperity?

The publishing and allied interests are in exactly the same boat. In 1932, the last income-tax year of Mr. Hoover, the taxable income of these companies was $58,804,346. Under Mr. Roosevelt, in 1934, their reported income had risen to the enormous figures of $202,487,285.

Lastly, let us consider the newspapers. In 1932, the last year of Hoover's administration, there were only 60 newspapers reporting net incomes at all, and the amount was $25,248,175, while in 1934 many more were reporting net incomes, and their combined net incomes had increased to $38,458,480. The facts are that probably no industry in the country has increased its net earnings since the 4th of March 1933, as has the newspaper industry. Yet, notwithstanding this, taking them by and large, the great majority of the newspapers of the United States are opposing President Roosevelt's administration, which has safely pulled that great and splendid industry out of the mire of failure and ruin and restored it to prosperity.

I close by appealing to these great industries in all kindness and fairness not to lay themselves open to the charge contained in the well-known quotation from Shakespeare's King Lear:

How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!

I say to my banking friends, my newspaper and publisher friends, this administration has done too much for their prosperity and happiness for them to proscribe and abuse it. Propaganda may be facts and propaganda may be fiction, but I have given facts.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, several Senators have spoken to me within the last few minutes, expressing the wish and the hope that the pending measure might go over until tomorrow. On the last roll call but few more than a quorum answered, and I should like to ask the leader on this side whether it would be agreeable to have the bill go over.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection to that being done, if other Senators who are interested in the subject do not object. I see the Senator from North Carolina present in the Chamber, and it is his amendment which is pending. I may state to the Senator from North Carolina that the Senator from Oklahoma proposes that the pending question go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I see no reason for that, but I certainly would not discommode my friend the Senator from Oklahoma, and if he desires to have the matter go over I shall not object.

Mr. GORE. I should like very much to have it go over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Arkansas whether it is the desire and purpose of the Senator from Oklahoma to have the Senate proceed with his bill tomorrow to a final conclusion?

Mr. GORE. Yes; it is my desire to have the measure taken up as soon as we assemble tomorrow and proceeded with until it shall be finally disposed of.

ROBERT L. MONK—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 186)

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 1683, entitled "An act for the relief of Robert L. Monk."

This bill provides that in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Robert L. Monk shall be held and considered to have served honorably in the First Regiment Alabama

Volunteer Infantry from May 6, 1898, to October 31, 1898, and to have been honorably discharged from such service.

I am advised by the Secretary of War that no record is found to show that Robert L. Monk was ever a member of the military forces of the United States covering the period specified, and the enactment of this bill into law would, in effect, be a discrimination against many others who have claimed similar service and who have been denied Federal recognition. It would establish a dangerous precedent, to which I cannot subscribe.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 11, 1936.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask that the veto message be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair), as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Edwin R. Holmes, of Mississippi, to be United States circuit judge, fifth circuit, vice Nathan P. Bryan, deceased.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Francis R. Stewart, of New York, now a Foreign Service officer of class 4 and a consul, to be also a secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, March 12, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. Blessed are they that keep His testimonies and that seek Him with a whole heart. Merciful Father, Thou hast commanded us to keep Thy precepts diligently. They are a call to life, free from vexatious cares and the fears that tyrannize the soul. O Thou blessed High Priest, look upon us in our need; have compassion and share with us our weakness, that we may not fail to reach the goal of a more perfect life; feed the fountains of our being that cleanse and purify the heart. May we not miss life's richest treasures in vain pursuits. Heavenly Father, bless all who may be perplexed, those who are borne down with cares, and those whose burdens seem more than they can bear. To the Triune God be eternal praises, world without end. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks which I made on the 4th of this month in the RECORD on the general subject of Freedom of Speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did I understand the gentleman to say his remarks of the 4th of this month?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes. I may say to the gentleman that I want to make certain additions and corrections which are not very long so that it will be a complete speech and not separated.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman's speech is four pages long now. If he is going to redraft the whole speech it might be too long.

Mr. MAVERICK. Speeches come in here 19 and 20 pages long and the gentleman does not object.

Mr. RICH. Certainly. We object to all these 19-page speeches.

Mr. MAVERICK. I can assure the gentleman I am making a reasonable request.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman has already made a speech four pages long.

Mr. MAVERICK. What of it?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania should object.

Mr. RICH. May I say to the gentleman from Texas that his speech is in the RECORD now, and takes up four pages. Now he wants to revise it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, he may want to condense it.

Mr. RICH. He says he is going to add to the speech.

Mr. MAVERICK. I am going to add a small amount, relevant and necessary to the whole. I will not abuse the privilege, I can assure the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. After this, will the gentleman be careful to make his speech right the first time?

Mr. MAVERICK. I thank the gentleman, and I will try my best to do better in the future. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made on March 3 by the addition of two paragraphs that will not take more than 1 inch?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what can the gentleman from Michigan put in an inch that is worth while?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It will not be any telephone plug in a switchboard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order for today the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] for 15 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PIERCE. I should be sorry to take up the time of my colleagues for any statement which is not constructive and I believe it is not best to use this floor for purely personal controversy.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MAVERICK. I want to cross-examine the gentleman now to determine whether he is a good American. How long has the gentleman's people been in this country?

Mr. PIERCE. They came here in 1630. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. That worries me because my own people came here in 1620, although that seems to be the Mayflower date. But I claim, anyhow, having gotten in earlier. Hence, the gentleman is only an immigrant. So I should like to ask him a question. Does he not think it better that we retain our democratic processes and political democracy, and fight communism and fascism that way rather than by attacking fascism and communism through the stoppage of free speech? We hear a lot about "Americanism" and the Constitution—these consist in following our essential traditions of freedom. To do otherwise is not true Americanism; to deny free speech is to violate the Bill of Rights, which is an integral part of our Constitution. Fascism and communism is admittedly the control of the will of the people by a single authority and marching feet. Do you not believe the will of the American people should be free, subject only to our Constitution, with its duties, rights, and immunities?

Mr. PIERCE. I think I can agree with the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. I thank the distinguished gentlemen and former Governor of Oregon. He is recognized not only as an efficient Representative of his State but as a credit to the great West. I am glad, as a younger Member of Congress, to pay tribute to an able man, who understands real democratic government and who intelligently battles for the rights of his people and against communism.

Mr. PIERCE. I should prefer not to yield further, because I have carefully prepared these remarks, and I am anxious that the Members listen to what I have to say.

I cannot, however, ignore the remarks of my Oregon colleague, the genial judge from Portland, made before this body on Monday, March 9. At that time he criticized and ridiculed me because I justified the Columbia Broadcasting System for granting radio time to the leader of the Communist Party. The broadcasting company followed that with time granted for a reply by a Member of this House. One of the judge's friends, commenting upon his congressional career, has said that the judge has not yet learned that the House is not just a glorified Elks' club. I think possibly this change from his usually humorous trend to red baiting may indicate that he has become conscious of the fact that a political campaign is in the offing. It is well that his constituents and mine should understand what apparently underlies this attack upon my plea for freedom of speech, of the press, and of the radio. We are in agreement in appreciation of the fundamentals of our Government worked out in suffering and struggle—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and equality of opportunity. The basis of discontent which creates "isms" is the fact that present conditions do not afford equality of opportunity nor freedom in fullest measure.

The Communists and Russia need no defense at my hands and I have none to offer, but the sacred institutions of America are entitled to defense on every platform and from every source. I do know that most of the early settlers came to American shores to escape religious persecution and tyranny of kings and the privileged ones. Here came the Puritans, William Penn, and Roger Williams. Nowhere in history can you find a parallel to the first settlements on these shores. It was freedom from oppression of the Old World that brought them here. It was true that after they came here they themselves were sometimes intolerant. The Puritans punished the Quakers. Only Rhode Island and Maryland had full religious freedom granted, but it was the birth of a new world. Freedom was in the air in this new country—freedom from the traditions of the Old World, from conditions that had fettered, bound, and enslaved the common man for untold centuries. Those were the things that cemented the Colonies during the dark days of the Revolution. Patrick Henry stirred the people when he eloquently spoke of liberty and freedom. Out of those 8 years of suffering and privation came the freest and best government that the whole world has ever known.

THE JUDGE TALKS FOR HOME CONSUMPTION—ELECTION YEAR TALK NOT IMPORTANT

The judge, like all the rest of us, desires to be reelected. He is a candidate for Congress, and among those to be appeased, if his candidacy is to be successful, is his local press. One of these papers is now taking the same viewpoint he expressed; in fact, I am not sure it is not using the same words which the judge put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday. I regret very much that a usually liberal and valuable paper in Portland is defending the Oregon criminal-syndicalism law. There has been a definite movement for the repeal of this law ever since it was enacted, and it came to the front during the last regular session of the Oregon Legislature. At that time the Portland papers took issue with each other and the battle was on. I shall, therefore, be glad to discuss this matter somewhat as I have thought about it and been active on it ever since it came before the people of Oregon. Headlines in a Portland paper after my previous talk on this subject were "PIERCE Wants Free Speech for Radicals", yes, and for reactionaries also. If it does not cover all types of thought, it is not free speech. I respect an honest difference of opinion, I realize that our different points of view are due, largely, to temperament, but I do here, as elsewhere, object to hidden motives which I propose to expose to the light of day.

The judge erupted verbally not long ago in a political address in this city. He then declared, so I read in the press, that our President has established a dictatorship, has encouraged the spread of communism, and that the New Deal from "its inception has done everything possible to do away with liberties and freedom." Editorial comment in a leading Oregon newspaper is entitled "Ekwall's Bunk", and asks what freedom has been lost and what liberty infringed, and suggests that it may have been the right to exploit child labor, now restored to our reactionary citizens. It points to the judge's diatribes as proof that no one is interfering with his freedom of speech.

Some years ago a real reformer had made a great and strong argument against an opponent. The opponent was so severely worsted in an honest argument that he despaired of success and said to his financial backer, "I can't answer. I am out of the game." The financial wizard came back and said, "Don't answer. Call him a Socialist." So the judge, yielding, possibly, to the judgment of his friends looking out for the utilities, calls me a Communist, abandoning real argument. So a little group here in the House can see under every bush a Communist. They realize that it helps their cause to call "Communist" every man who lifts his voice for the rights guaranteed by the Constitution. The red baiting is probably fostered by those who desire fascism and create this fear as an excuse for the seizure of arbitrary power. They refuse to help to prevent collapse by dealing with the fundamental problem faced by the American people today, the maldistribution of wealth. This concentration of wealth in the hands of a few has resulted in curtailment of consumer buying power, and this is our basic difficulty. One of my colleagues reminded me recently that the people of three of the great nations of the world have surrendered their liberties for bread. I believe we can work it out, retaining our liberty, with our bread, too, properly and justly divided.

BONNEVILLE POWER IS THE REAL ISSUE

Another point which must not be overlooked is that the gentleman who finds himself at odds with a large number of his constituents on certain economic and social questions must court privileged groups as well as the press in order to secure votes. I have no intention of attempting to thwart his ambition to return to Congress, but it is perfectly apparent that in attacking me he spoke as an ally of those forces which have for many years constituted my battle front. He was, by that attack on this floor, moving into the Second Oregon Congressional District, out of his own sphere, in order to help his constituents, the utilities, with whom I have battled for many years. The managers of these utilities do not, of course, desire to see me returned to Congress; but there is more involved than is at first apparent, and more than concerns a congressional campaign. Indeed, it is reliably reported to me today that the same utilities whose agents are now being investigated by a Senate committee have a sizeable purse ready for a contender for my place in Congress. All the money is not spent in Washington, D. C.

There are now in committees of this House three different bills providing for the use of the electric current generated at the great Bonneville Dam. On that matter my colleague and myself have opinions widely at variance. This must be apparent to any person who noted our different positions on the holding-company bill of last session. These positions were taken in the open, through votes and speeches on the floor, so they are undoubtedly clearly understood. My colleague from Portland vigorously defended the holding companies and opposed the passage of regulatory legislation, which I favored by voice and vote. We represent different constituencies. The judge has a city with a compact constituency, largely trading and industrial. I represent the far-flung grazing grounds and wheatfields of the high plateaus of eastern Oregon. It is natural that we should have different points of view on many questions and different interests, but we are both vitally concerned with the matter of control and distribution of that power at Bonneville. The question is shall it be reserved for the utilities and a single city or county at tidewater, or shall it benefit all who may advantageously use it? The decision will be made here in Congress.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH

The judge fears communism. I fear special privilege. Since the issues are so great and so marked, I shall not further dwell upon any differences in our attitudes toward public questions. I should not like to add to the convictions of many disillusioned people who complain of legislative smallness and ineptitude and feel that great places are sometimes filled by little men. I shall, therefore, address myself to definite points brought out by my colleague.

First, the matter of the use of the radio for broadcasting a talk on communism. Now, as I understand it, communism is a philosophy which deals with social and economic life. Those who hold these views have formed a political party, which is legalized in many of our States, including Oregon. It may have candidates for local, State, and Federal offices. This being true, it seems to me extremely unwise to allow people to be left ignorant as to its tenets. The judge should have listened in because his intemperate statements show that he needs the information which was broadcast. I regard communism as an unthinkable alternative to our form of government. I do not subscribe to its theories, but I observed in the broadcast no license nor abuse of free speech. Yes, I believe it is best to bring communism out into the open. Surely it is better that it should take to the air than that it should be forced into underground passageways. I fear all secrecy—secret personal vices, secret political vices, secret alignments with powerful privilege seeking political advantage. The subversive movements in public life are those which are secret. Does my colleague for one minute think that this country would be safer and better if communism were driven into subterranean channels? It is perfectly plain to anyone who reads that radio speech that there is no glamour in communism. It was also perfectly plain that our colleague from New York, who was allowed the privilege of refuting the statements made by the Communist leader, had no real fear of communism, because he devoted his radio rebuttal to abuse of the New Deal and practically ignored the communistic trend. No; there is no need to quarrel over communism. There must be a cause for its existence. Would it not be the part of wisdom to ascertain that cause and remove it? What has been the history of suppression to still discontent? It has always driven the discontented closer together. The blood of martyrs has always made millions of converts. My dear Judge, is it not better to let them talk it out? If denied, hungry, discouraged men will declare, in every room and park where they gather, that they have not had fair play; they will believe the country fears them. My dear Judge, with your judicial mind, decide which would make the most converts now—that speech of Browder a few nights ago or the knowledge that this great Nation fears open expression of political ideas?

My genial Judge, have you forgotten Voltaire's reply to his opponent in the French Assembly—

I wholly disapprove of what you say, but will defend to the death your right to say it.

Any restriction of free speech is dangerous, because it implies the setting up of standards by groups which would restrict other groups. No one can foresee who will be the next victim.

My colleague, you and I have the same ends in view. We both want to preserve American institutions. We both want to preserve the capitalistic system under which we have prospered so marvelously. Would to Heaven we might by some edict bring to the light of day all these secret machinations and deal with them openly! The Congress realizes the importance of this matter when it appoints investigating committees to learn of the doings of special privilege. These committees are not always as effective as they should be, but they are a last resort in the effort to stay the manipulation of government through secret channels.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

I have no fear of theories nor of dreams, but I do fear the tangible actualities of money control of Government and of the press. I fear the hidden enemies, the microbes not yet isolated and dealt with. My colleague values freedom of the press. He states that he would "rather live in a country without a government at all than be deprived of freedom of the press." Who is opposed to freedom of the press? I certainly am not. Why not a free radio also? They perform the same functions of news dissemination and interpretation and advertising mediums. Any governmental restriction on freedom of the press will never be tolerated in this Nation.

But how free is the press? Have you read Seldes on the subject? How long since the commercial advertising press has been free from the domination of the advertisers who pay the bills? Why are we unable to secure decent and adequate food and drug legislation in this country? Is it the will of the press or of the advertisers? I have been told by a great advertiser, upon whom the press of a certain city is dependent for a large part of its income, how he stopped the great presses at night in order to have desired changes made in news items as well as in editorials. Does that constitute freedom of the press? I am thankful for our small local papers and our weekly press near to the people who know the owners and editors and can estimate their characters and understand them. The rural press does sometimes give space to the canned editorials of the utility promoters and other big business parasites. The people are, however, not deceived, as they know the earmarks of such news agencies and recognize them by the differences, in diction as well as thought, between the smooth appeals of big business and the honest opinions of the local editors.

OREGON'S CRIMINAL SYNDICALISM ACT

Now, a word about the criminal-syndicalism law of Oregon. The judge has quoted it to you. It was adopted during the after-war red-baiting frenzy, when we had not been fully informed in regard to the propaganda measures which operated during the war. It is, of course, true that any overt act against government or any act of treason or incitement to treason, can be dealt with under the law without any criminal-syndicalism act. We now know something more about propaganda, though we are still, in a measure, its victims. I am proud of some things in my record of some 50 years of public life, and I take great satisfaction and pride in the fact that I opposed the adoption of that act in our liberal Oregon. We Oregonians, leaders in the establishment of popular government, are restive under this act, and it would undoubtedly have been repealed if we could have devoted our full attention to it, but the attacks upon our system of government from other sources have diverted this attention to defense of our fundamental political organization. The State election of January 31, 1936, should teach a lesson to all Oregonians. That lesson is that the people of Oregon value their liberties and are not yet ready to surrender them. It also shows that they understand somewhat the secret manipulations of those who would destroy popular government. Now, the wrong in the criminal-syndicalism law does not rest entirely in the act itself but in the uses to which it has been put. It has been applied only for the control of that economic order, members of which call themselves Communists, those who openly avow the desire for change. It has never been, and probably never could be, applied to others who have secretly endeavored to manipulate destructive governmental changes. That is the basis of my main objection to the act. The judge quoted the section which provides that any person who advocates the expediency of committing any violence or unlawful act for profit is among those guilty of criminal syndicalism, but the law has never been invoked against such persons. The meaning conveyed by quoting the law depends upon the words emphasized in capitals, and I have never known the baiters to print in capitals those two words, "for profit." I also object to the statute because it is difficult to determine without bias what constitutes literature advocating the unlawful acts cited. Under the law, a poor fellow in Oregon going about with a donkey and some communistic literature goes to the penitentiary for 5 years. The malefactors of wealth go scot free. Do you think the law would ever touch a Liberty Leaguer, whatever he might say? What was ever done to punish those holding company officials and great corporation executives which made what John T. Flynn calls "outrageous raids upon the savings of the American people"? I have not heard that any of them have been punished for their crimes. He continues, "We have, of course, an economic problem and a social problem and a political problem. But we have also a problem of civilization and America had better look to her civilization."

MEN ARE ENTITLED TO JOBS

During the same session in which I voted against the criminal-syndicalism law in Oregon, I introduced and tried to bring before the people a constitutional amendment that would have guaranteed a job to every Oregonian, and that was 17 years ago. If passed, it might have headed off some of the communism and other "isms." I am willing to vote to balance the Budget now, if you are willing to enforce an income and inheritance tax similar to that in England, but I am not willing to vote to balance the Budget if we have to say to ragged and hungry millions, "We cannot feed you any more and we have no jobs for you. You must stand the pangs of hunger for now we are engaged in balancing the Budget." Such action would make Communists.

As I have said, Oregon is liberal. Our people are liberal-minded. We have a very high rating for literacy. Our people are readers and thinkers and students. We subscribe to more periodicals than the people of the other States. We are politically conscious. In some communities Communists have met to discuss their theories without interference or apparent effect.

STRAW BALLOTS

The judge refers to my straw-ballot bills, and that interests me, and I am glad to take this opportunity to say that I have no objection to free and open, honestly conducted straw ballots. What I desire is to satisfy Congress that straw ballots, which mold public opinion, are actually what they purport to be and are not manipulated in order to influence opinion. They sometimes give a totally false impression of political opinion and should, in my judgment, be controlled, as are other political propaganda methods, in that the sources of support should be revealed to the public.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

IT IS THE SAME OLD FIGHT

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in the many years of my public life I have supported some causes which were at the time unpopular. I have seen many of them come into public favor. I think of the years of struggle for the State income tax. Who were the enemies we fought? They were those who front us now. I voted for the guaranty of bank deposits. Who were those intrenched opposite us in that fight? The same forces which confront us now. I voted with others for popular government in Oregon 35 years ago and I renewed the fight this last January. The face of the enemy was decidedly familiar. Our next great fight is to control Bonneville power in the interests of the people. This little ripple among the Oregon delegates in Congress shows that the battle has begun again, and the same old familiar enemy is drawn up in opposition. Yes; I should have added that one of my greatest fights was to compel the utilities to pay taxes on their valuations fixed for rate-making purposes. Does that explain anything to my friends on this floor? I notice that a certain influential and able editor in Portland commended Mayor LaGuardia for taking this step a few weeks ago. The result in Oregon was an attempted recall of myself as Governor. In fact, the utilities and other specially privileged groups put $15,000 on the table in Portland one evening toward the expenses of a recall election, figuring it cheaper to get rid of one Governor than to pay increased taxes each year. How public opinion has changed on that matter! Those constituents of my colleague who may wreck democracy are those who would make it safe for holding companies instead of making holding companies safe for democracy. It is the same old fight we had last spring. This is a fight for the control of water power, and it is part of the campaign of the utilities to get that control. Red baiting should not divert attention from the real matter at issue between my colleague and myself.

Let us bring it all out in the open, along with communism and the other evils which are said to threaten the structure of our Government. It is partly greed and political privilege which have brought about the conditions that have produced 30,000 Communists in these 48 States, one Communist voter in every 1,300 voters. My, what a menace! The real cure is control of the greedy and powerful ones who manipulate parties and legislative bodies. These groups, so influential in matters of State and National legislation, have gained great wealth through privilege, and they used that wealth to gain more privilege. They are truly entrenched. Curb them and provide work for all, and the Communists will disappear like mist before the bright summer morning sun. Any other method is a confession of incompetence.

A businessman with a conscience recently wrote:

After all is said, business is but a privilege. Ours is not a right but a franchise. * * * If this be so, then the Government, representing both the people who gain most by our present system and those who suffer most, has the right and duty to control and organize this privilege so as to raise and fortify the general level of American life. (Fels. This Changing World.)

While I was Governor of Oregon William J. Bryan visited the State. I had many pleasant hours with him on that, his last trip to the West. He told me many stories—this one I shall never forget. He said after he had made his second race for the Presidency he and his wife were visiting in England. They were invited out to a great house for a week end. When it came time to go into the banquet he was given as his dinner companion a lady of high rank who had been reared in wealth in New York. During the long, pleasant dinner she was an interesting companion. Toward the close of the banquet she turned to Bryan and said, "Colonel Bryan, I can't understand my New York friends. They have every means of knowing all about you. I have studied you for 3 hours this evening. I think you are a wonderful man and would make a great President of the United States. Why are my New York friends so deathly afraid of you?"

He replied, "My dear Duchess, your friends in New York need me much more than I need them. All I have said to your friends in New York is 'Quit stealing!' Those who come after me will say, 'Put it back!' That will hurt your friends in New York." Has that time come, and are they hurt? Are they trying to draw across the path the red herring of communism? [Applause.]

COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that the committee may be allowed to sit during the session of the House today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

UINTAH, WHITE RIVER, AND UNCOMPAHGRE BANDS OF UTE INDIANS

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 6019) authorizing an appropriation for payment to the Uintah, White River, and Uncompahgre Bands of Ute Indians in the State of Utah for certain coal lands, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

COMMUNISM

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—I do not like to object—

Mr. EKWALL. Then do not object if you do not like to. Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. This is a controversial question, and I gave up about 2 hours of the time of our committee yesterday.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is entitled to 5 minutes. Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I shall not object to this request for 5 minutes, but please do not ask for any additional time.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman from Oregon ask for 10 minutes tomorrow, because I think a little thought upon this subject will bring out a better talk, and I am going to object at this time, but I shall not object on tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks an editorial from the Portland (Oreg.) Journal on this subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to the editorial.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my colleague from Oregon that I voted against the utility monopolies for the "death sentence"—

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon has yielded to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The point of order is that the gentleman from Oregon has not any time yet.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon has been recognized for 5 minutes, and has yielded to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to my friend from Oregon that I voted against the utility monopolies and supported Chairman RAYBURN and voted for the "death sentence", and public-utility money is being spent now in my district to defeat me; but nevertheless I wish to say to him that, in my judgment, he being a Republican and I being a Democrat, my distinguished colleague from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] is such a valuable public servant that it would be a public calamity if he were defeated in Oregon this year. We need him here. [Applause.]

Mr. EKWALL. I thank the gentleman.

(Mr. EKWALL addressed the House and subsequently withdrew his remarks.)

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to the point of order that the gentleman has used words in debate—

Mr. EKWALL. I withdraw the words.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not care whether he withdraws them or not, I demand that the gentleman's words be taken down.

Mr. EKWALL. Let them be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Washington invited and provoked them. His conduct toward the gentleman from Oregon was outrageous in doing that, and we ought to have fair play for the gentleman from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will take their seats, and the Clerk will report the words objected to.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Texas to state his point of order. The gentleman from Washington will permit the gentleman from Texas to state it.

Mr. BLANTON. My point of order is that the gentleman from Washington provoked the statement made by the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is stating his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. My point of order is that the gentleman from Washington provoked the reply made by the gentleman from Oregon. I ask in all fairness that the Speaker submit the question to the House to vote upon it, and allow the House to decide whether the gentleman from Oregon was within his rights in making his reply in kind, which action the Speaker has the right to take under the rules of the House.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman from New York withhold that for me to make a request?

Mr. SNELL. No; I will not.

Mr. MAVERICK. I wanted to make a good suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 33]

Amile	Darden	Haines	Oliver
Ayers	Dear	Halleck	Patton
Barden	DeRouen	Harlan	Robinson, Utah
Berlin	Dickstein	Healey	Romjue
Buckbee	Dingell	Hoeppel	Ryan
Bulwinkle	Dorsey	Hook	Sadowski
Burnham	Doutrich	Kee	Sanders, La.
Caldwell	Fenerty	Keller	Scott
Cannon, Wis.	Ferguson	Kennedy, Md.	Sears
Casey	Fitzpatrick	Kvale	Seger
Cavicchia	Flannagan	Lamneck	Short
Clark, Idaho	Gambrill	Lanham	Steagall
Clark, N. C.	Gasque	Larrabee	Summers, Tex.
Cole, Md.	Gassaway	Lesinski	Thomas
Collins	Granfield	Merritt, Conn.	Tinkham
Cooley	Gray, Ind.	Mitchell, Ill.	Tobey
Cox	Gray, Pa.	Montague	Underwood
Crowther	Greenway	Murdock	West
Culkin	Greenwood	Nichols

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-five Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that all further proceedings under the roll be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that these gentlemen be permitted to take these remarks out of the RECORD, because we are talking too much, wasting too much time, and indulging far too much in personalities, and after they take them out, we proceed with our business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Reserving the right to object, my purpose in asking that the remarks of the gentleman from Oregon be taken down was not directed against the gentleman from Oregon, but against a situation which has existed here in the House for weeks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I object.

The SPEAKER. The objection comes too late.

For the information of the House, the Chair will read from rule XIV and make a short comment upon it.

Rule XIV reads as follows:

When any Member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker", and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

The Chair reads further from section 361 of Jefferson's Manual, which also governs in this House:

No person, in speaking, is to mention a Member then present by his name, but to describe him by his seat in the House, or who spoke last, or on the other side of the question; nor to digress from the matter to fall upon the person, by speaking reviling, nipping, or unmannerly words against a particular Member.

The Chair regrets to say that there has grown up a practice in this House under which personalities are frequently indulged in; there has also grown up a practice whereby Members fail to address the Chair and get the consent of the Member speaking to interrupt. Those things, of course, provoke disorder and interfere with the orderly procedure of the House. The Chair hopes that Members will observe these rules, and that hereafter they will refrain from personalities, and confine themselves, when speaking, to the subject matter of debate.

Again, there has grown up in the House the practice of addressing a Member in the first person, which is not in accordance with parliamentary practice.

The Chair thinks it proper to make these statements and to say that hereafter, while the present occupant of the chair is presiding, whenever any Member violates these rules, he will be called to order by the Speaker. [Applause.] The Chair also requests Members who are presiding as Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, that while they are in the chair they pursue a similar practice. The Chair regrets that these occurrences take place and thinks they have become entirely too frequent for those who like to see the rules complied with and who are anxious to see parliamentary forms observed in the House. Parliamentary procedure cannot obtain unless there is a strict observance of these rules. The Chair thinks the entire membership will be glad, out of their respect for the dignity of this great body, of which they are a part, to assist the Chair in seeing that the rules are observed. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from Oregon be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, may I make a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] yields for that purpose. The gentleman from Oregon has 3½ minutes remaining.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman from Oregon yield to me to make a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. EKWALL. First, Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request myself. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended 10 minutes, because part of it has been consumed and I have not yet touched upon my reply to the address of the gentleman from eastern Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent that he have 10 minutes in which to address the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK].

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, the request that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] has made is the request that I was about to make myself—that his time be extended for 5 minutes. Now that that is unnecessary, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. EKWALL. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I did make a remark, which probably will not appear in the RECORD, that I thought the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL] would make a fool of himself to answer the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] immediately and not take time for deliberation and answer him the next day.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the offensive words again used be taken down.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order, and my point of order is that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK] is in effect substantially repeating what he said before, but in an insidious way, and is making an attack on the gentleman from Oregon. I ask that he be held out of order, and that he stop this attack. It is nonsense to keep on this talk. It is out of order and should not be considered.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the repeated offensive words of the gentleman from Washington be taken down.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Oh, that comes too late. The gentleman is not "sparking" this morning. He makes the point too late.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the repeated offensive words of the gentleman from Washington be eliminated from the RECORD.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the words uttered by the gentleman from Washington be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. MAVERICK. Oh, what is this, Mr. Speaker, a kindergarten? Let us proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further to me?

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Speaker, I will admit that for a moment I forgot the biblical admonition to turn the other cheek, and for having been somewhat hasty I apologize to the other Members of the House and to the Speaker.

As I expected, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] did not answer my Monday attack on communism. The gentleman made a typical "Pierce" talk, as we know it in Oregon. He said that I feared communism. I do not fear communism, because by fearing it I would insult the intelligence of a vast majority of the people of my State and of this country. I do not fear, but I do loathe communism.

The gentleman says that I am seeking reelection. Well, gentlemen in glass houses should not throw stones. We are all up for reelection. But I am not so anxious to return to Congress that I am willing to champion the cause of the Communists and their ilk in this country. [Applause.] No; much as I have enjoyed my work in Washington and much as I would miss my many friends in Congress, I would rather suffer an honorable defeat than to be reelected through the influence of such an un-American group.

The gentleman from eastern Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] made a rabble-baiting speech, but beware of the man who cries "wolf! wolf!" He tries by implication to tie me in with special privilege, as he calls it, and he mentioned the Bonneville Dam. I am just as much interested in the great Bonneville Dam and in getting reasonable power rates for the people of my district and my State as is the gentleman from eastern Oregon [Mr. PIERCE]. Last year I introduced in the House an identical bill to one introduced in the Senate by Hon. CHARLES L. McNARY, Oregon's senior Senator, who is also the distinguished minority leader. This bill, H. R. 8994, provided in substance that the Bonneville Dam should be completed, maintained, and operated under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers. The Federal Power Commission was therein given control of all rate matters pertaining to power to be generated. Does the gentleman question the integrity of the Secretary of War, the Chief of Engineers, and the members of the Federal Power Commission?

The gentleman resorts to the old tactics and trick phrases of the "parlor pinks" in the use of such terms as "predatory interests" and "malefactors of great wealth"; but he will not fool the people of my district.

Talk about one not being sincere. The gentleman professes to be such a sincere Member. He claims to have fought a sales tax in the State of Oregon for years. Still he came here and bent the knee to the Townsend-plan crowd when they demanded that he vote for the Townsend plan in this body. That does not show consistency. He now claims to be for the Townsend plan. The very basis of that plan is a supersales tax, a pyramided sales tax, that is so much worse than any ordinary sales tax that a man ought to be ashamed of himself who claims to be against a sales tax and then advocates the Townsend plan.

I did not intend to make a personal attack, but I want to say that I had a perfect right to answer the gentleman's address on Friday when, to my way of thinking, he made an ideal talk for communism. I am against communism now, and I will be against communism if I live to be a hundred years old, because it is wrong; it is improper; it is un-American. I will always raise my voice against it, regardless of who comes to its defense.

I am sorry that these personalities have entered into this talk today, but I have said exactly what I mean.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Is it not a fact that the gentleman's real opposition to communism is not based so much on the different economic thought of that country as against ours, but the fact that communism works and fights for the overthrow of our churches, schools, and homes?

Mr. EKWALL. Absolutely. As I said in my remarks on Monday, communism seeks to destroy everything that has made America great. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE OLD-AGE PENSION PLANS

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following announcement:

Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 443, Seventy-fourth Congress, the Chair appoints as members of the select committee to investigate old-age pension plans the following Members of the House:

Mr. BELL, of Missouri; Mr. LUCAS, of Illinois; Mr. GAVAGAN, of New York; Mr. TOLAN, of California; Mr. HOLLISTER, of Ohio; Mr. DITTER, of Pennsylvania; Mr. COLLINS, of California; and Mr. HOFFMAN, of Michigan.

THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes; and pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate shall continue throughout the day and until 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, at which time the bill is to be read for amendment with the understanding that it will be disposed of before we adjourn tomorrow evening.

Mr. TABER. And will the gentleman couple with his request the further request that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Certainly. Mr. Speaker, I further request that the time be equally divided between the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H. R. 11691; and pending that asks unanimous consent that general debate on the pending bill continue throughout the day and until 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon, at which time the bill shall be read for amendment, and that the time be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New Jersey and himself. Is there objection?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman's request preclude a motion to adjourn before the bill is finished? The gentleman stated that debate was to continue until 2:30 tomorrow, and that then the bill was to be read and disposed of before adjournment tomorrow evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not put the request in that way. That is a matter for the House to decide.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11619, the legislative appropriation, with Mr. BUCK in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes it will be unnecessary to repeat the admonition given the Members of the House by the Speaker a few moments ago. The bill now before us, the legislative appropriation bill, is one which vitally affects this body and the other body. It is entitled to receive your serious attention and consideration.

The Chair requests that order be preserved without the necessity of having frequently to admonish the Members.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK].

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the subcommittee upon the legislative appropriation bill, I, for one, do not agree with all its provisions, but as a member of that committee I am going to vote for the measure, and am not going to vote for any amendment thereto unless it has a great deal of merit, and I doubt whether such amendments will be offered.

I do not think there is a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations that has given more serious and earnest consideration to any appropriation measure at any time. I think the hearings, if read, will disclose this conclusively. There are, however, a couple of matters to which I should like to draw the attention of the House, not to change the present bill but that we may be better advised when this measure comes up again, providing we still are members of this committee, because an election does intervene.

The first thing to which I call attention is an item in the bill making appropriation for the stationery account of Members, $125 for each Member. As the present law and regulations thereunder stand, a Member can buy $125 worth of stationery or by proper procedure can withdraw the entire $125 and even play poker with it if he wishes. Some Members, a few, do not use $125 of stationery in a year; but there are many Members, in fact, most of the Members, who use not only $125 worth of stationery but $225, and some $525 a year for legitimate congressional business in order to serve their constituents as they are entitled to be served.

I made the suggestion, and the suggestion was discussed a great deal, that this amount be increased from $125 to at least $200 a year, but withdrawing the privilege of drawing down money. In other words, if a Member with a $200 stationery account draws but $50, he cannot get the other $150 in cash. If he does not use it, the money reverts to the Treasury of the United States. I think that is a suggestion worthy of consideration. Even TOM BLANTON uses more than $125 worth of stationery for his speeches.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Do not get obstreperous. I withdraw the remark.

Mr. MAVERICK. I object to the remark the gentleman made to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington will proceed in order and avoid the mention of the given name of any Member of the House.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, I amend that immediately by saying the gentleman from Texas, and if I offended the gentleman from Texas, why I am sorry—indeed sorry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, you know I do not think this House is a circus despite the fact that some of you may think that I think so. The fact of the matter is I even object to a person clapping on this floor and hooting down Members who try to express their sincere convictions on the floor of the House. The ones who are shouting the loudest for order are the ones who do most of this ballyhoo and make—well, I will not use the word. Why can there not be dignity to this House?

There are 435 Members here representing 130,000,000 people, or, at least, they should be representing them. You know, when someone talks for a little 5-percent-interest group, the Economy League, or the other league that proceeded to oust the President out of the Democratic Party, with the help of Alfred E. Smith—and I refer to the Liberty League—there is a respectful audience and everything is quiet, but when you start to talk for the people you are a radical. Well, I am a radical, and I am damn proud of it! What do you think of that? If I were not, I would not be honest with my constituents. I try to work and help these people to see if they can get a job, so that they can live with dignity and live while they work. Enough of that.

Another matter that I should like to call the Committee's attention to is that in this legislative bill there is an appropriation of $50,000 for the purchase of books for the Congressional Law Library. Last year there was an appropriation of $90,000, but $40,000 was used for the purchase of law books for the sanctum sanctorum known as the Supreme Court of the United States, the holy of holies.

Mr. KNUTSON rose.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman from Minnesota object to that?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe one body of the Government should criticize another.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Well, I am going to criticize the Supreme Court until they start representing the people for a change, and I am going to do it as long as I want to. What do you think of that?

There is provided in this bill $50,000 for law books for the greatest library in the country, our library, the judiciary library, when, as a matter of fact, Harvard University alone, one institution, spends $75,000 a year for their lawbooks. We are going to pinch pennies and save upon our congressional law library. It just does not make sense to me, although I am going to vote for this. I think in the future, however, we should discuss these things realistically. We should look at the cold facts. We should be dignified to ourselves, have a little pride in ourselves, and not start pinching pennies just because the Senators buy soda pop and have ice delivered to their offices every morning and have a beauty parlor down there with operators in it. Why should we get a complex? Even the gentleman from Texas objects to that.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Dockweiler].

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I have several items to discuss relating to the legislative appropriation bill. First of all I call attention to the fact that this bill provides $100,000 to be supplied the Committee on Accounts to take care of the expenditures and expenses of special committees as they may be selected by the House through resolution; $100,000 in this bill is supposed to cover the expenses of these special committees for the year 1937.

I read recently in the press that a special committee that has just been selected by resolution of the House intends to request the sum of $50,000 from the Committee on Accounts. Of course, if this particular committee, organized for the purpose of investigating the Townsend plan, succeeds in securing $50,000 from the Committee on Accounts, only half that sum will be left for the rest of the special committees. If I could see any reason for $50,000 being spent in this way, I might not object, but I cannot see any reason, and in anticipation of the moment when we will be asked to vote upon such an expenditure I shall register my vote against it.

It is not a question of whether we believe in the Townsend plan or not. The question is whether we have the right, considering all the circumstances of the case, to appropriate $50,000 of the taxpayers' money in this manner, when you have all of the central Townsend organizations here in Washington—Dr. Clements, Mr. Townsend, his three regional organizers, his auditors, and all of the records of his corporation that has returned income taxes. You have the whole shooting match right here in Washington, and why this committee needs $50,000 I am at a loss to understand.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. No; not for the moment.

Now, on another matter, this House, conjointly with the Senate, has to appropriate money for other special committees organized either by the Senate or by the House. There is a special committee of the Senate known as the Committee to Investigate Lobbies, or the lobby activities that have occurred, particularly with reference to the utility bill that was pending in the last session of the Congress. This committee, during the interim of the vacation, utilized the agency of the Federal Communications Commission to go out, hither and yon, in the offices of the communications agencies of the country, the Western Union and the like, and corral, so we are told, hundreds of thousands of telegrams.

Since when, Mr. Chairman, has the House of Representatives or the Senate acquired the right to transcend the Constitution of the United States? It might be well to remind ourselves that article IV of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, the so-called Bill of Rights, reads as follows:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

As a member of that distinguished profession known as the law, what lawyer would have the hardihood to issue a subpoena duces tecum that did not in some way adequately describe the messages or the communications that he sought by court order to obtain?

Mr. Chairman, we have a written Constitution and we have, if I may use the term, an unwritten constitution—those Anglo-Saxon concepts that have come down to us that were not actually transcribed in so many words in the Constitution of our land.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. I cannot yield at this moment.

The concept that a man's home is his castle comes down to us from Anglo-Saxon-Norman times, and is as well founded in the jurisprudence of this country as in any specific language of the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, there are certain things that we have always held sacred, the communications between husband and wife, the communications between confessor and penitent, the communications between lawyer and client, and every State in the Union has written this safeguard in its own particular constitution.

Now, for a committee of this House or of the Senate to go broadcast into the country and without any specification or direction to collect everybody's personal telegrams and communications in various law firms, Mr. Chairman, is not only illegal but is a severe violation of the original concepts of the people of this country.

I hold no brief for the utility crowds that were here last year, but as a member of the profession of the law—and there is pending today before the Supreme Court an appropriate writ that has been requested by one of the distinguished law firms of this country, a writ to prevent the use of this information that was gathered in what I regard as an illegal fashion—I think I have no right to sit supinely by in this House as a Member of the Congress, or, I may say, sit spinelessly by, and permit any committee of this House or Senate to transcend the authority of the Constitution and to trespass upon the rights of individuals.

Considering the type and character of communications that have been corralled by this committee through the use of the agency of the Federal Communications Commission, I am reminded of the time when I used to read some of the old Latin classics, including the Ciceronian speeches in the Roman Senate, one particularly, as you may recall, in defense of Milo. Why, Mr. Chairman, in those Roman days a senator was allowed to go back, not only to cover the entire history of the man who was charged with an offense but he even went so far as to delve into the personal history and conduct of the parents of such a man. Why, it is like a Roman holiday we are having here if we can use any method or means to secure this information.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am coming back to a particular committee that has just been appointed—the committee to investigate the Townsend plan. I hope it confines its investigation to the jurisdiction it has been granted specifically by virtue of the resolution and that it will not have the right to investigate and display before the world the personal conduct or the personal misadventures, if I may say so, of any of those involved.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Except as that conduct might be directed to the activities of the Townsend clubs and organizations.

I am going to pass to another subject right now, and I do not want to be interrupted on the subject I have just discussed. I have just expressed my views, and I am fearful if I am interrupted I might be diverted to some other train of thought.

Now, my friends, we are providing for the Library of Congress in this bill $2,225,000 for the annex. There has already been spent $175,000 and the Public Works has granted to the project $2,800,000.

With these three funds and more the annex will be completed. This will give to the Library of Congress 50 percent more space than it now has.

The Library of Congress is a distinctive institution, one which we have every reason to be proud of. It is, I think, without fear of contradiction, the greatest library in this country.

It now contains over 5,000,000 books, most of which are worth while.

It has an endowment to date of $780,936, and from this endowment they have an annual revenue of $35,000. There are other gifts that total the value of $2,500,000, such as books and collections of art works.

So it is not inappropriate for Congress to pay serious attention in its supply bill to the needs of the Library of Congress. It was created several decades ago as an agent for Members of Congress. It was not an agency for the public originally, but was intended for the men of Congress, that is to say, the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives; and, secondly, for other departments of the Government. The record will show that all of the departments of the Government utilize the Library of Congress to an excessive extent.

Naturally the law division has received considerable attention. The law library, as well as the rest of the Library, is most serviceable. It was not until 1930 that several Justices of the Supreme Court appeared before the Legislative Appropriation Committee and requested that a substantial sum be appropriated for accumulations of law books, and from that time as much as $50,000 annually has been appropriated for that purpose.

There is another activity of the Library which should interest us. By general statute enacted by Congress the Library has been used as an agency for the dissemination of books for the blind. These books are, of course, Braille books.

(The time of Mr. DOCKWEILER having expired, he was given 5 minutes more.)

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Dr. Putnam, the distinguished curator of our Library, testifies as follows, page 245 of the hearings. He says:

We have been able to provide, out of this appropriation, about 130 new titles of Braille, books in Braille, and thus far a little over 30, between 30 and 40, sets of disks for talking books. We could have bought more of them if they had been produced, but the production of those is very slow, and then the talking machines, that is, the apparatus for reproducing the disks, without which the disks are useless, are thus far in the hands of only about 2,500 blind people in this country; but that is proceeding. Mr. SNYDER. You do not buy the machines, then? You just buy the disks?

Dr. PUTNAM. Under this appropriation, yes, sir; but under the emergency appropriations they decided to put $211,000 into the manufacture of these machines and committed to us the task of spending it.

Now, these machines, which are manufactured under the direction of the American Foundation for the Blind, consist of a phonograph apparatus and also incidentally of a radio receiving set.

He goes on to testify that under the emergency appropriations they received $211,000 for the manufacture of machines for the reproduction of these disk machines. These machines cost approximately $42 each, and 5,000 such machines can be manufactured with the appropriation of $211,000.

I call attention to the fact, as I did last year in my address on this subject matter when this same bill was under consideration, that a very fine avenue of charity could be developed throughout the country in every community by those who are inspired to do charity, by purchasing one of these machines and giving it to a blind institution in the separate communities, so that the disks which are disseminated by the Library of Congress upon request, and upon which are recorded the fine pieces of literature, drama, and poetry, could be utilized in the blind institutions in the various communities and thus avoid the necessity of some blind people acquiring knowledge of the Braille method. I do not know whether blindness in this country has increased or decreased, but I suppose, like the poor, the blind will be always with us, and I trust that my remarks will be read by those who might be inspired to do this bit of charity for the blind people of separate communities throughout the country.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Yes.

Mr. MILLARD. What do these machines cost?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Forty-two dollars. They are just like a phonograph which operates at a slower revolution.

The disk is a very large record, and the machine is a combination phonograph and radio. I myself inspected one of these in the Congressional Library and have seen it operate and heard it. It is a method of not only building up the mind but provides wholesome recreation to the blind people, because when one of these disks is used any number of people can hear it, whereas a Braille book, which is costly to disseminate and prepare, can be read by only one person at a time.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the committee for its work, and particularly to I commend the chairman for his indefatigable efforts in endeavoring to report a bill to the House that will at least save some money from the Budget reported to us. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, the American merchant marine is a subject of tremendous concern and interest to this particular Congress.

First, let us start with one basic fact on which agreement is universal, and that is that the American merchant marine is in a deplorable condition today. Individuals may differ as to the remedy, but no one disputes that fact. As of January 1, 1935, the United States possessed only 10 percent of the vessels of 2,000 gross tons and over, engaged in international trade. That is not the worst of it. Most of the few ships we do have are old and obsolete; only 4½ percent of our ships are 10 years of age and under. In addition to that, there is practically no construction work now in American shipyards; for the quarter ended March 31, 1935, the United States was constructing only 1½ percent of the ships under construction. To summarize, we have a very small proportion of the ships engaged in international trade; most of the few we do have are obsolete, and we are making no effort to build up our merchant marine even by replacements, let alone additional tonnage construction. Under the present policy we will not have any merchant marine at all within a very short period. The Jones-White Act of 1928 has proven a dismal failure.

Second, let us recall a second basic fact upon which there is universal agreement; namely, that our American merchant marine has not been and probably cannot be made self-sustaining without some assistance; that if we want a merchant marine, we must subsidize it by some method, at the expense of the taxpayers. This is due to differences in construction costs, operation costs, and to competitive disadvantages caused by the subsidy policies of our competitors. Right here some persons argue that if a merchant marine cannot pay its own way, we do not want a merchant marine, and there are plausible arguments along that line, such as permitting our competitors, who can perform this service cheaper, to perform it, on the ground that it would be to our ultimate benefit as consumers of the service, and facilitate international trade. But I am inclined to agree with President Roosevelt's message to Congress on March 4, 1935, when he said that there are three reasons why we need an adequate merchant marine: (1) For the maintenance of fair competition in time of peace; (2) to carry on neutral peaceful foreign trade in the event of a major war in which we are not engaged; and (3) for the maintenance of necessary commercial intercourse in the event of a war in which we are engaged and also for naval auxiliaries. We all remember the exorbitant freight rates we were obliged to pay during the World War when we had insufficient tonnage to move our goods, and when other nations diverted their tonnage to war purposes. War again threatens in Europe, and again we find our merchant fleet in much the same condition as in 1916.

If you agree with me that an adequate merchant marine is essential, even though the taxpayer must stand a part of the cost, then there are four possible methods or policies, namely:

First. Subsidized private ownership and subsidized private operation.

Second. Government ownership and Government operation.

Third. Government ownership and private operation.

Fourth. Combination or compromise of these policies.

Let us consider these four possible methods in order:

1. SUBSIDIZED PRIVATE OWNERSHIP AND SUBSIDIZED PRIVATE OPERATION

This is the method now being used; the result has been and is now a complete failure. Shortly after the World War we decided upon private operation and practically gave away our World War constructed merchant ships; we sold some of the ships for around 2 cents for every dollar they cost us. As a result of the 1920 and 1928 acts we started out in earnest to obtain a merchant marine under this system. The taxpayers, in addition to giving away the ships, have been paying $30,000,000 a year in disguised subsidies to operate them. The only result of our vast losses and expenditures is an antiquated merchant marine that is fast disappearing from the seas. Advocates of this method admit the failure but say the system is right; that what is needed is more and bigger subsidies. Let me give you, by a concrete example, what the shipping interests ask now of the taxpayer. Assume that it costs $1,000,000 to build a certain cargo ship in an American shipyard; it is contended that the same ship can be constructed abroad for $600,000; the taxpayers are asked to make a cash grant of that $400,000 difference, to be known as a construction subsidy. Next, the Government is asked to loan in addition 75 percent of the foreign construction cost, or $450,000; that operation is called a construction loan. That makes a total grant and loan amounting to $850,000, leaving only $150,000 balance on that million-dollar ship, which may be met by a "trade-in" of an obsolete ship for which the Government will get next to nothing, being obliged to scrap it; and thus for little and perhaps no cash outlay whatever the so-called shipowner gets a million-dollar ship. And this is what they call private ownership. Expressed another way the proposed system of those who are in theory to become the private owners calculate this way: "2 and 2 are 4; the Government should give us 2, and inasmuch as we do not have the other 2, the Government should loan us that 2 also."

With the Government granting and loaning at least 85 percent of the money, and perhaps the full 100 percent, you see in full bloom that type of spurious Americanism and individualism and private initiative which enables these shipowners and operators to let the taxpayer buy their ships and pay most of the cost of operating them, while they wave the flag, pocket the profits, and argue that Government ownership is bolshevistic and un-American.

As a matter of real fact we have Government ownership now, even if not in name. The Government's investment in mail-contract ships—excluding the industrial United Fruit Co.—is one and thirty-nine hundredths times the stockholders' interest in all assets. Under the present system, is it bolshevistic to suggest that since the Government has the equity it should also have the title? And under the proposed new system, is it bolshevistic for the Government to provide 100 percent of the cash, but the good old American system if the Government provides 85 percent of the cash? Does only 15 percent measure the difference between communism and democracy?

Every conceivable form of subsidy has already been advanced to private shipping interests—sale of Government vessels at gift prices, sometimes as low as 2 cents on a dollar; big loans at low interest, as low as one-eighth of 1 percent; and ridiculously extravagant mail contracts. These financial aids were granted on the theory that they were needed to build an adequate merchant marine, but they were not used for that purpose. They have been drained off into the pockets of promoters—men who have been much more interested in high finance than in the high seas. Holding companies have been superimposed upon holding companies to drain off the taxpayers' money into high salaries for these flag-waving promoters.

One of the scandals has been due to the scheme of making women members of the family dummy stockholders in subsidiary companies, to whom the profits are piped out. Women and children first has always been the rule of the sea, but this is the first time that the able and astute gentllemen who have been so successful in milking the Treasury have managed to apply this wisdom to the financial aspects of shipping by having their wives and children as dummy stockholders in these profit-absorbing subsidiaries.

The shipping molasses barrel has long been recognized as the sweetest that ever existed in Washington. Innumerable flies have fed upon its contents—selfish businessmen, promoters, lobbyists, attorneys, agents, and plain politicians. For years it has been guarded by the Shipping Board, and more recently by the Department of Commerce. But the Government has become weary of attempting to create a merchant marine by pouring money into the shipping molasses barrel through the bung hole, only to have it drained off through the numerous spigots subsidiary companies have inserted in the barrel head.

There is no time tonight to detail the abuses under this system. For instance, right now the taxpayers are paying money subsidies to industrial giants that transport their own products in their own ships. With that black picture before us, the only remedy the shipping crowd offers is give them more money.

I wish my good New England neighbors could be in Washington day after day and see what we are up against here. There never was a more powerful lobby than the shipping lobby. I read into the Record a letter sent by one shipbuilder to another, bragging about obtaining passage of the 1928 Jones-White law and listing how $150,000 was spent in lobbying. One of the items was $23,000 for "hotel expenses in Washington." You can use your own judgment as to what that means. These shipping people are very clever, and they keep us hunting all the time for the "niggers in the woodpile" in the bills they have introduced. One shipping company paid over $750,000 to Washington representatives for legal and special fees. These shipping boys even chip in a certain percentage of the subsidy payments they receive from the taxpayers, thus creating a pool for lobbying, whereby they use the taxpayers' own money against him.

We fought them to a standstill in the last session of Congress, but it was a mighty close call. Congressman WEARIN, of Iowa, and I led the fight for 3 days on the floor of the House against the Bland-Copeland bill, which not only perpetuates the flagrant abuses of the past, but intensifies, magnifies, and aggravates them. The Bland-Copeland bill is the same old racket, played with jokers and aces up the sleeves of those who have received millions and given to the American people next to nothing in return.

2. GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP AND GOVERNMENT OPERATION

Time prevents dealing exhaustively with this possible method. I will simply say that I do not favor it.

3. GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP AND PRIVATE OPERATION

Because I believe America must have an adequate merchant marine, and because I know that all the shipping crowd together have not money enough of their own to build one single ship of the Manhattan type, it is my belief that this is the only system under present conditions which will actually produce a merchant marine. I have introduced a bill, known as the Moran bill, providing that the Government shall build and own the ships and let them out for private operation under a charter system. Operators can bid competitively for the charters, and in this way the public interest will be protected against the frauds which are practically unavoidable under the present system or under the new system proposed by the shipping crowd. In event of war we would then own the ships for our military use without paying outrageous prices for them. Also, the Government could work out a regular replacement policy, so vital to an adequate merchant marine. If we can build warships, we can build a merchant marine; both are vital for national defense.

4. COMBINATION OR COMPROMISE PLAN

I would be perfectly willing to aid private interests in obtaining a privately owned merchant marine if it can be done without robbing the taxpayers. Also, I would be agreeable to selling Government-owned ships at any time to private interests at a fair price. At the same time I want to see enacted into law the alternative that if private ownership cannot be worked out on a basis equitable to the taxpayer, that the Government will go ahead and build ships, because I want to see, one way or the other, an adequate merchant marine. In this way I differ from the shipping crowd, who, despite their patriotic protestations, have no interest whatever in the creation of an American merchant marine unless they are the ones to own and operate it. Such a compromise, containing both plans, is offered to Congress at this session by the Guffey bill. With its fundamental principles I am in hearty agreement.

To date every shipping measure passed by Congress has been written by private interests, their attorneys or lobbyists. Two measures now before Congress were not so written—the Moran bill and the Guffey bill. Can the spell be broken and one of them passed?

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, let me express the hope that the people of New England realize how vital to them is the matter of an adequate merchant marine. Our people have always "gone down to the sea in ships." With a splendid shipping heritage and tradition behind us, and with a determination that the glories of the past shall be projected into the future, let us work unitedly to the end that American ships, flying the American flag and manned by sturdy New England sailors, may again be seen in all the ports of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN. Yes; I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman is obviously making a very carefully prepared statement with reference to merchant-marine policy, and I consider him unusually well qualified to do that because of his careful study of the subject and the excellent bill he introduced in the last session of Congress. The point I particularly wish to raise at this juncture is this: The gentleman referred to the deplorable state of the American merchant marine at the present time. I want the gentleman to make this point clear, if he agrees with me, that it comes at the end of a period of years extending from 1928 to the present time, under which we have had one of the most liberal subsidy policies that has ever been known in the history of American shipping, obviously intended to develop a merchant marine and certainly costing enough to have done so.

Mr. MORAN. That is certainly correct, but even under the liberal policy of the last few years the advocates of that type of legislation today say that even that liberal policy is not enough in their opinion to produce a merchant marine, and certainly the millions of dollars paid out in subsidies have not in fact produced a merchant marine. Our shipping men have been more interested in building private fortunes for themselves than in building a merchant marine. The bill I have introduced will end that system entirely and will produce a real American merchant marine at nowhere near the losses or the cost to the American people imposed upon them by the present system.

Mr. WEARIN. It seems strange to me that we do not have a merchant marine at present, which state of affairs is admitted by the subsidized shippers themselves, even though we have practically given them a fleet and paid them over one hundred and sixty millions since 1928 to operate it. Now we are being presented through the press and through other propaganda agencies, such as this little sheet, entitled "Foreign Trade-Merchant Marine News", published in Cincinnati and circulated among the Members of Congress, with articles to the effect that we ought to go on and advance more subsidy to an ostensibly privately owned merchant marine, which in reality is not privately owned at all, because of the fact that the United States Government holds the principal portion of the obligations against the ships.

Mr. MORAN. I refer to the present system as a subsidized private ownership and subsidized private operation, because when one looks at the figures today, no one can contend that we actually have private ownership. The Government has the equity and merely lacks the title.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABOR].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, about a week ago the President of the United States presented a message to the Congress asking for a large amount of new taxes. At that time he stated that there was a considerable loss in the original Budget that he submitted to Congress because of the decision of the Supreme Court invalidating the A. A. A. As a matter of fact, his Budget for 1937 was improved by the difference between $619,000,000 and about $547,000,000, because the disbursements would have exceeded under his estimates the tax receipts by $72,000,000.

Now, that situation results in just this: We do not have the tax requirements that we would have if the statement had been correct. He submitted a group of tax proposals, amongst others a tax upon the surpluses of corporations that have not been declared in dividends. What is the result of that and what is the situation? The Ways and Means Committee began hearings and it found out that the biggest part of the result of that proposal would be to tax the surpluses of mutual savings banks which belong to the depositors, and the surpluses of mutual insurance companies which belong to the policyholders, and the surpluses of National and State corporation banks, which those banks are required to build up so as to make proper reserves for the deposits that are made in those banks; that the ordinary business corporation was accustomed to declaring dividends which ran up to 75 or 80 percent of their earnings, and sometimes, in years of depression, ran even above that figure, and that the source of revenue from that proposition was going to be very small unless they got into the taxing of mutual savings banks, mutual building and loan associations, mutual life-insurance companies and banks. I understand that the Ways and Means Committee has been conducting hearings on this subject and that the state of confusion is growing worse every day, as it could be expected to grow worse with that kind of a proposition.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I think the gentleman intended to say that a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means was listening to the so-called experts of the Department and not that the Ways and Means Committee was conducting hearings. There have been no hearings called on the tax measure to date within the knowledge of the Republican members.

Mr. TABER. I supposed that was "hearings"—the kind of hearings we get these days. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, it is a question of definition, possibly.

Mr. TABER. I think so.

Mr. TREADWAY. The so-called experts are laying before the subcommittee certain figures, and they are making progress rapidly backward.

Mr. TABER. Well, that is to be expected. [Laughter.] In addition to that there was a suggestion that we might have some more processing taxes by levying a tax on the food that the poor must eat. I do not believe the situation in this country is such that we ought to levy large taxes on the poor and large taxes on the institutions that mainly cater to the poor, such as mutual insurance companies, mutual savings banks, and the banks themselves. I do not believe that is the place to put taxes.

The situation is about this: There is not a single appropriation bill for any department of the Government which, if it were approached from the standpoint of just exactly what was needed to carry it on, with no frills and no trimmings, could not be cut from 20 to 25 percent. Some of our committees have done a fairly good job of cutting. On some of the bills I have offered amendments which have received considerable support from those in the House who believe in economy, in an attempt to save money. On the Treasury-Post Office Departments appropriation bill they cut it as far as it was possible with the general situation that was presented. On the Interior Department appropriation bill I offered a motion to recommit, to cut off about $4,700,000, to bring it down to last year's figure. There was absolutely no excuse for the increase in that amount. When the War Department appropriation bill was being considered I offered a motion to recommit in an attempt to save about $60,000,000. That money was not sought to be spent for national defense, but for river and harbor projects which had absolutely no merit, and most of which had never been properly approved by the Congress. When the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill was being considered I offered an amendment which would have reduced that bill upward of $25,000,000 without hurting a single decent appropriation which was required to take care of the interests of the Government or the people.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would the gentleman inform the Committee of the Whole, now considering the state of the Union, if his suggestion of a 25-percent cut in all these appropriation bills were put into effect, how much saving there would have been in the aggregate amount?

Mr. TABER. Close to a billion dollars.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. The tax measure to which the gentleman has just referred, so far as suggestions have been presented by the Treasury Department, seems, by their figures, which, of course, have not been verified other than by their own experts, to call for additional taxation of something like $620,000,000. If the gentleman's savings were put into effect, there would therefore be no need of this additional tax money, would there?

Mr. TABER. Not a bit.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. BACON. As a matter of fact, the expenses for the ordinary departments of the Government, the ordinary housekeeping departments of the Government, are up over a billion dollars during the past year?

Mr. TABER. That is correct.

Mr. BACON. That does not take into consideration the different emergency appropriations for the various alphabetical set-ups?

Mr. TABER. That is true. In addition to that, at the same time that that tax message arrived here, right on the heels of it was a messenger from the Senate with the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, with an increase of $62,000,000 over what it was when it passed the House, and every single thing in there, except about $3,000,000, was with a Budget estimate from the President of the United States.

Mr. BACON. As a matter of fact, if we appropriate only what we appropriated last year for the fiscal year 1936, and cut a billion dollars off, this tax bill might not be necessary?

Mr. TABER. It would not be necessary at all. There have also been funds appropriated which have not been expended. I want to read to you some of them and let you judge of the ability of Congress to take those funds.

There is $1,790,000,000 for the R. F. C. not expended and no possibility they can ever use over $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 under any circumstances.

One hundred and eighty-three million dollars has been allocated to the Resettlement Administration for just plain foolishness.

A tremendous amount, $108,000,000, has been allotted for this so-called emergency housing, to waste the money and build buildings the poor cannot live in and absolutely destroy the market for high-grade residential apartments, not in the least catering to slum clearance or to the poor.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman be kind enough to give us the aggregate figures of the amount available for these various projects in the last 2 years, the amount remaining available? I do not think it is cash.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman refers to the so-called emergency appropriations?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I do not think it is actual cash, but there has been allocated—in some way there is money available for doing certain things. How much does it amount to?

Mr. TABER. It amounts to $5,973,000,000, according to the statement that came to me this morning from the Treasury Department.

Mr. TREADWAY. Let me understand the gentleman, Mr. Chairman—$5,973,000,000?

Mr. TABER. That is it.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman think that, in view of this enormous balance, there is any occasion whatsoever to make a further tax assessment on the American people of any kind or description?

Mr. TABER. If we spend the money that has already been appropriated, of course we have got to raise it somehow, either by bond issues or by taxation; but we should not spend very much more of this because there is absolutely no need for it. We should spend what we need for legitimate relief and cut out the rest of the operations.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not included in this $5,973,000,000 there is any amount allocated to the Passamaquoddy Bay project?

Mr. TABER. I think there is, but I cannot say exactly because I cannot tell whether they have spent on this Quoddy project all that has been allocated to it; but I understand they are going ahead with the project and I understand its own sponsors say it has no practical or commercial value; that the only value of it is that it puts people to work. Whether they have any relief roll up there which justifies the spending of this money just to put people to work, I doubt.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would the gentleman classify the Quoddy project in what he describes as the useless outfits?

Mr. TABER. There is no question about it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Our Republican friends seem to be playing a little game all by themselves without interruption. The gentleman from New York does not mean to say he is absolutely in favor of reducing every appropriation we have made 25 percent?

Mr. TABER. Not every appropriation, but I think on the average the departments in Washington and in the field could get along with a 25-percent cut if it were properly and reasonably distributed; a 25-percent cut below the appropriations that are asked for the fiscal year 1937 by the Budget.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman knows, of course, that there are certain appropriations which neither he nor I would cut; for instance, the public debt, the veterans' appropriations; and appropriations of this character must be reduced when he comes to talk about a reduction of 25 percent, unless he reduces some appropriations 50 or 75 percent. Is not this correct?

Mr. TABER. Yes; but when it is remembered that a 25-percent reduction would only bring the figure to what they were spending in 1935, the gentleman has not very much of an argument to urge their being put up above that figure.

Mr. COCHRAN. I agree with the gentleman in some respects, but remember we restored some of the items eliminated in the economy law. If the gentleman is going to talk about cutting the total appropriations 25 percent, he is not basing his argument on a sound premise, for he admits we cannot cut the veterans' appropriation, and he admits we cannot cut the public-debt appropriation. Why not eliminate these from the total before starting to make the estimate in amount of money of what could be saved?

Mr. TABER. The basis for my figures show it can be done, because the estimates for 1937 are at least $1,000,000,000 above the 1935 expenditures. This makes the total so high that we can in almost every case cut 25 percent from them and be all right.

Mr. COCHRAN. In other words, it will be necessary to cut some activities 50 percent or more and some none; is that it?

Mr. TABER. That would have to be done.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. I was very much interested in the gentleman's statement about Passamaquoddy Bay project, and that brought to my mind the Florida canal project. Am I correct in my impression with reference to the proposed canal across Florida that, although the Board of Army Engineers turned it down, yet large sums of money are now being spent on a preliminary survey for the canal? Does the gentleman know how much has been expended?

Mr. TABER. I understand they are spending large sums. I understand they have dug a ditch right in the middle of where the thing is supposed to go, but they have not the slightest idea whether the ditch will be in the right place if they should dig the canal. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield for just one more question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman place in his remarks the 1937 estimates which he would cut 25 percent or more?

Mr. TABER. I will be glad to do that.

Mr. COCHRAN. I should be very pleased to read those figures tomorrow or the next day whenever the gentleman puts them in.

Mr. TABER. I will not put them in my remarks today, but I shall include them in an extension of remarks later. It will take a day or two to figure up all the details.

Mr. COCHRAN. It would be very valuable to have the figures before we start considering this and other appropriation bills. We may at that time take into account the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. TABER. I would like to have the suggestion considered.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the bill is passed by the House we are not going to reduce the amount. The time to take action is before we pass the bill and therefore I would like to see the figures before the remaining bills are passed.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Does the gentleman from Missouri say he is in favor of the $6,500,000 set apart for the Jefferson Memorial in the city of St. Louis?

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say in reply to the gentleman's question that the city of St. Louis put up over $2,250,000 toward the project which is to create a park along the river front. The gentleman has not put me on the spot, for I am willing to be placed on the spot. The commission desires as the total sum for the complete memorial $30,000,000. I say to the gentleman and to the Members of the House, as well as to the people in the city of St. Louis, that I am not in favor of a $30,000,000 memorial being built on the river front of the city of St. Louis. I am in favor of going along with what we have now and establish the park, but I will never vote for an authorization or appropriation to place a $20,000,000 memorial building on the river front of my city or for that matter any place in the United States.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I would like to clear up the misapprehension in the mind of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The memorial referred to is a $30,000,000 memorial, and the Federal share is $22,500,000.

Mr. COCHRAN. That was proposed by a commission, but no such authorization was ever made and, in my opinion, this Congress will never vote for such an authorization. I know I will not.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield further.

Mr. Chairman, may I say to the Members of the House that the Passamaquoddy project and the Florida ship-canal project are included in those cases where a small allotment has been made, as I understand it, out of relief money in order to go ahead and get started in a sort of half-baked way. They will get their nose under the tent and then the Congress later may feel obliged to appropriate the rest of the money. I hope the Congress of the United States will have courage enough to refuse to appropriate the balance of the money for projects of that kind.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Has the gentleman informed the Committee what has become of that timber belt approximately 100 miles wide and something like 1,000 miles long that we heard so much about some time ago?

Mr. TABER. That turned out to be a complete farce. We had that matter up when the agricultural appropriation bill was being considered, and it was conceded even by the folks out in that country where it was supposed to be created in that the trees would not live. It was also conceded that it was a foolish thing, a waste of money, and a colossal scandal.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Does the gentleman mean to tell the Committee it was so bad that the people who originated the idea have now abandoned it?

Mr. TABER. I would not accuse them of abandoning the idea. I may say that the gentlemen who represented the districts in which it was to be created found such a bad feeling resulted that they themselves insisted upon its abandonment.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. FIESINGER. The gentleman has said something about the Florida ship canal and the Army engineers digging down there, but did not know where they would locate the ditch, or something to that effect. I do not know what the status of that proposition is, but that item was eliminated from the War Department appropriation bill, as I understand the situation.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct, and very properly so.

Mr. FIESINGER. So there probably is nothing being done because there will be no appropriation to carry out the work?

Mr. TABER. But I want to put the Members of the House on guard. There is an agitation going on over in the Senate now to put that farce back into the War Department appropriation bill. I hope the Members of the House will be on their guard, and if that sort of amendment comes back here they will insist on its being eliminated from the bill.

Mr. FIESINGER. I am in perfect accord with the gentleman on that proposition.

Mr. TABER. That is why I believe in referring to it and keeping the people awake on that subject.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. Since the House cut that item out of the bill I understand that some relief money has been allocated with which to carry on this project until such time as the Senate proposal may override the House proposal. This brings up a very serious tendency to start new functions of government with relief money, only allocating relief money to carry on a small part, then dropping it and coming along later with a plea to Congress to appropriate in the regular appropriation bills a sufficient sum of money to complete the job begun with relief money. That, to my mind, is a very serious and dangerous tendency.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. FIESINGER. May I ask the gentleman from New York if the matter to which he refers has anything specifically to do with the Florida canal?

Mr. BACON. It has.

Mr. TABER. Now, I want to go into one or two other matters that have come up in the same way in the Interior bill.

There is a scheme to go into what they call the Big Thompson-Grand Lake project, and I believe this project will cost $40,000,000 and open up another million acres of land.

On top of this, we have been spending a lot of money on what they call the Rocky Mountain National Park, which covers the biggest part of this section of the map I have here, and provides for an underground canal 11¼ miles long, under a mountain 11,000 feet high, and the canal is to be 9 feet in diameter, pumping the stone or whatever they get out of it out of the end of the canal from which they are digging. Just think of it. It is the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of, and there is an authorization to start this project in this Interior Department appropriation bill.

This is some of the stuff your Interior Department appropriation bill conferees have got to fight when they get over to the Senate.

On top of this, there are new irrigation projects amounting to $57,000,000 that are recommended in the Budget that are in this bill and ought not to be there.

If I had an hour I could take the time and analyze them so that, I believe, every Member of the House would realize that this is nothing more than a raid on the Treasury and something to hurt agriculture and to destroy the financial standing of the Government, because some of these projects will cost five or six times the amount carried in the appropriation.

Another one of these projects I want to call particular attention to is the Grand Coulee, where $63,000,000, if I recall the figures correctly, was allocated and all of it was pulled away except $15,000,000, and then they let contracts, mind you, without authority of law, without having the money appropriated, or without any contract authorization, for $29,000,000, and to cover up this situation there is an appropriation in the Interior bill of $20,000,000. We ought not to allow such things as this to go on.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Will the gentleman incorporate in his remarks the total ultimate cost of these projects he is speaking about that were started out of funds other than those appropriated by the Congress?

Mr. TABER. I will. I think the Members of Congress ought to have the figures in front of them. I think they ought to be aroused to the situation that is confronting them, because we can never raise the taxes to balance the Budget or meet the expenses of the Government if we go on with such expenditures.

I hope that what little I have been able to say here this afternoon will do something toward stirring up the membership of the House to their responsibilities here to keep down these appropriations.

There has been a tendency on the part of the Committee on Appropriations in the House to bring in bills with some cuts. There has been a tendency on the part of that committee to show some economy, but, frankly, when these bills have come back from the other body, any thought of economy is the furthest from what must have inspired them. They are so far beyond reason, so far beyond any legitimate thought of running the Government of the United States and meeting our responsibility here as legislators and our responsibilities to the ordinary folks back home who have to pay the taxes, that it is absolutely discouraging and absolutely disgusting.

I hope this House will stand against these increases. [Applause.]

The total cost of projects, together with the present appropriation and the future costs that are contained in the Interior Department appropriation bill, is set forth in the following table, namely:

Name of project	Total cost Department's estimate	Present appropriation	Future cost
Grand Lake-Big Thompson.....	$22,000,000		$22,000,000
Gila project.....	20,000,000	$2,500,000	18,425,000
Salt River, Ariz.....	6,844,000	2,300,000	200,000
Central Valley, Calif.....	170,000,000	16,000,000	139,000,000
Grand Valley, Colo.....		200,000
Boise project, Idaho.....	5,800,000	1,800,000	3,000,000
Boise project, Idaho, drainage.....	200,000	160,000	40,000
Carlsbad project, New Mexico.....	2,500,000	900,000	600,000
Deschutes project, Oregon.....	1,065,000	450,000	50,000
Owyhee project, Oregon.....	18,000,000	400,000	1,500,000
Grand Coulee.....	60,000,000	20,000,000	3,000,000
Columbia Basin.....	389,000,000	250,000	388,500,000
Yakima project.....	14,446,600	2,500,000	7,633,000
Provo River project.....	10,000,000	1,750,000	5,000,000
Casper-Alcova project, Wyoming.....	20,000,000	4,000,000	1,000,000
Riverton project, Wyoming.....	8,670,000	9,000,000	2,870,000
Shoshone project, Wyoming.....	6,500,000	1,000,000	4,000,000
Total.....	773,025,600	54,110,000	574,815,000

¹ This will just about build the tunnel; total cost will be $40,000,000.

This covers only new projects which are included in the Senate bill but were not in the bill as it passed the House. The House Appropriations Committee absolutely refused to consider these estimates.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the remarks made by my colleague from New York [Mr. TABER] on the mounting appropriations. It is well for him to call the attention of the Congress to the fact that all this spending must be met by taxes, and he rendered a real service by showing where the waste and extravagance exists. It is one of our great problems.

I propose to take a few minutes this afternoon to speak of world problems—the problems of France, Germany, Great Britain, and Italy, who are on the verge of war and on the precipice of mutual destruction occasioned by the march of German troops into the Rhineland that was demilitarized by the Versailles and Locarno Treaties.

Perhaps there is some moral justification for the German troops entering the demilitarized zone along the Rhine. I know American troops would enter California if it had been taken away from us or if any of the Canadian border States had been demilitarized by an enforced war treaty a generation ago.

I am not here to defend the aggressive and provocative policy of Germany. Of course, it does mean repudiation of the Versailles Treaty as well as the Locarno Treaty. However, the United States never approved of the Versailles Treaty, and as a veteran of the World War, I have always considered that the Versailles Treaty was conceived in hatred, cupidity, and revenge. I have always known that it was unworkable and would be abrogated by force within our generation, and that it was a breeder of war instead of preserving peace and good will among nations.

On the other hand, this problem is not our problem. Our problem is to mind our own business and to keep out of all European boundary disputes and ancient blood feuds and stop passing moral judgment on European nations. As I have said before, if they want to arm to the teeth and go to war, that is their war and not our war.

The time, however, to wage war on war is in time of peace. The Congress a little while ago—and I commend those Democratic Members who refused to take their orders from the White House or the Secretary of State or the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. McREYNOLDS], who tried to force on this Congress a bill under his own name and backed up by the Secretary of State and the President of the United States, giving the President the power to lay economic sanctions against warring nations, which would have been the first step toward war by involving us in all European controversies.

I am making this statement now because when the neutrality bill came up a few weeks ago extending the embargo on munitions of war to belligerent nations I was unable to get any time to speak. The bill as passed was really written by independent Democratic members of the committee, with the aid of all the Republican members, and repudiated completely the recommendations made in the bill introduced and previously reported by Chairman McREYNOLDS with the blessings of the State Department and the President.

Imagine bringing a bill of that kind, affecting, possibly, the lives of millions of Americans, into the House under a gag rule with 20 minutes' debate on a side. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. McREYNOLDS], upon which I have served for 15 years and am the ranking member, not only of my party but I have served on it longer than anyone else, offered to give me 4 minutes' time to speak on the neutrality bill. I accepted the 4 minutes. Then he repudiated his offer and gave me none at all, because I proposed to state the facts and to show that this bill was a complete disavowal, retreat, and rout from the demands of the Secretary of State and of the President, to give them power to lay economic sanctions, and I point out here and now that that was the most discourteous act that has happened to me since I have been a Member of this House for the past 16 years. I was not allowed 4 minutes', or even a minute's, time to express my views on such a vital bill which was passed under suspension of rules, without opportunity for amendment or adequate discussion. That is one of the reasons why I have taken this time today. I have every confidence in the Democratic Members of this House on foreign affairs, because they have proved themselves worthy of it recently. I have no confidence in this administration as far as the President is concerned, or the Secretary of State, or the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, because they are internationalists, because at heart they are for the League of Nations, the World Court, for giving the President power to determine the aggressor nation, and for placing economic sanctions. A year ago the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. McREYNOLDS], under his own name, brought into the House a bill giving the President power to determine the aggressor nation, a hostile act, an act of war, and not an act of peace, but thank God the Senate of the United States voted it down. That is why I have no confidence in these internationalists, who want to involve us in foreign affairs, in entangling alliances, in world disputes, and in foreign boundary disputes.

But as long as most of the Democrats in the House take the position they have in the last month the country has nothing to fear, because they have served notice on the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Secretary of State, and upon the President that they refuse to give President Roosevelt any more power to involve us in any foreign wars or boundary disputes of any kind. It seems to me this is the time to stop, look, and listen.

We went into the World War to make the world safe for democracy and to end wars, but today democracy is a laughing stock in a large part of Europe and in the military dictatorships of the Old World. Mussolini, Hitler, and Stalin all tell us free Americans that our democracy has failed, that we are no longer able to govern ourselves, that we must import some foreign form of dictatorship to replace our free institutions.

We went into the World War because we were forced into the war against our will. We are a peaceful and a peace-loving Nation. Our ships flying American flags were attacked by German submarines without warning. Against our will we went into that war, and we did our part and turned the tide of defeat into victory. We asked for nothing, and we got exactly what we asked—nothing at all; no plunder, no reparations, no indemnities, and no conquered territory. Then we brought our troops home, and soon after we brought our troops home our former allies whom we have saved began to repudiate their war debts; and finally, now, today, they are not even paying the interest on the war debts; they are not even paying interest on the money that we loaned them after the armistice. You remember what President-elect Roosevelt said when former President Hoover asked him to cooperate with him between November and the time the President would take office on March 4, 1933. He said, "No; I propose to solve this problem myself; I refuse to cooperate." This administration has been in power for 3 years, and it has not received a penny on war-debts payments except from Finland. I suggest that after 3 years and before this next election in November the President take some steps before he goes to the people to recover some of these war debts. We all know the settlement was fair—probably the fairest ever made—but we also know that these nations have welched and repudiated their debts; and it may be necessary for us to take 10 cents on the dollar if we are to get anything at all.

I would like to see a commission appointed to open up this whole question, and even if we can get enough money nowadays to pay the adjusted-service certificates of our World War veterans. That would be something. That would be half a loaf instead of nothing at all. They took this money of ours after the armistice and paid their own soldiers with it, and why should not we ask for the repayment of the money that we loaned them after the armistice, and that alone would be enough to pay for the adjusted-service certificates?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a short question.

Mr. RANKIN. Did not the gentleman from New York vote to fund those debts whereby we gave those European countries $6,200,000,000 of American money?

Mr. FISH. Certainly I voted for that on the recommendation of the World War Debt Funding Commission, upon which were two very prominent Democrats, a unanimous recommendation; but we have not got anything out of it under this administration. I would rather take 10 cents on the dollar than nothing at all.

As Germany, France, Italy, and Great Britain have been driven to the precipice of war, I want to ask what about the McSwain bill to take the profit out of war? I have already paid all the tribute I can to the Democratic side for helping to extend the embargo on arms and munitions of war, but what about the universal-service bill backed by the American Legion, where, in case of a future war, labor, capital, and manpower will be drafted equally? I honestly believe if the Democratic leadership in the Congress would bring up that bill and give it a chance to be voted upon it would have 90 percent of the Members behind it, both in the Congress and without; but what is holding it up?

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield briefly, certainly.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does not the gentleman know that we passed that legislation last session, and it is buried in a pigeonhole over in the Senate, where it will probably die?

Mr. FISH. I knew that. I am glad the gentleman stated it; but, after all, you have a Democratic Congress and a Democratic Senate. You say to me, "Bring it out." How could I bring it out? You are responsible for legislation. You have a 3 to 1 vote in the Senate and a 3 to 1 vote here. I believe that bill would be a great deterrent to war. I do not mind saying that I loathe and abhor war. There is almost nothing that I would not do to prevent war or to make it less likely. Take the profit out of war, so in another war industry will not make all these unlimited millions. I believe there were 23 new millionaires made in the United States during the last war. They will not have that incentive to go to war, if the universal-service or draft bill is enacted into law. I believe in the incentive of the profit system and in the American industrial system based upon private initiative and reasonable profit; but, if we do not take the profit out of war in future wars, particularly the munition industry, then I am for Government ownership and operation of the munition industry in America. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman is making a most interesting and illuminating address. I wonder if he would tell the House what he thinks of a popular vote on the declaration of war.

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman that I introduced such a resolution 5 or 6 years ago in the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I am still for it.

Mr. LUDLOW. Does not the gentleman think that would be a deterrent to war?

Mr. FISH. I certainly do. I will vote for it. Such a man as Ambassador Houghton, of New York, a former Member of this House, an ultraconservative, if there is one, Ambassador to both Germany and Great Britain, advocated the very same thing. I see some objections to it, but it ought to be brought up and discussed, because at least the people ought to have a right to say whether we go to war or not.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman indulge me further?

Mr. FISH. Very briefly; yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I would like, with the gentleman's indulgence, to say that I have introduced such a resolution, House Joint Resolution 167, and there is a petition, no. 28, pending at the Speaker's desk, to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from consideration of that resolution. I wish every Member would sign that petition.

Mr. FISH. I will say to the gentleman that I will be glad to sign it. I did not know it was before our committee. At least we ought to discuss such a proposal and vote on it. I do not believe anybody has discussed the question of war or peace since this session of Congress began, and yet it is the greatest problem in the world today, even greater than our own problems, making some of them appear very small when we hear them discussed. I am with the gentleman, but pending that I am for national defense. I am for an adequate national defense. I am for a navy second to none. I stand with Bourke Cockran when he made the statement that "a second best navy is like a second best hand in poker—it is not worth a damn."

I believe in national defense for purposes of defense but not for aggression. We have no selfish or ulterior motives in America. There is no Member of this House, Republican or Democrat, who would vote to take an inch of territory anywhere in the world; yet all these old nations of the world look upon us as imperialistic and militaristic. Let us be fair. We are a peaceful, peace-loving Nation. We have a few jingoes in our midst, even in Congress and among the people back home, but 99 percent are peace loving. They want to keep out of these European entanglements. We have had one World War, and that is enough. My remarks today are aimed at asking the Congress to take up these war debts, to take up the McSwain bill, to consider a referendum vote on war, to urge a multilateral treaty against the sale of munitions of war. We have agreed not to sell them to belligerent nations. Why should we not ask other nations of the world not to sell them? We have entered into the Kellogg-Briand Pact to arbitrate our international disputes. That is a multilateral treaty agreeing not to go to war as an instrument of national policy except in defense of our own territory. Is not the next logical step to ask those same nations, since we refuse to sell munitions of war, to sign a multilateral pact likewise not to sell munitions of war? If you outlaw war, you ought to outlaw munitions and the sale of munitions of war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] has expired.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey for granting me this time. There are just two matters to which I wish to direct attention. First, I have here a communication from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] calling attention to the fact that some of the C. C. C. camps are to be abandoned and enrollment curtailed.

Mr. Chairman, I want to join with my colleague the Honorable JACK NICHOLS, of Oklahoma, in his protest against reduction of Civilian Conservation Corps. The activities of this branch of the Government are worth while, and money expended on C. C. C. camps does return dividends. It is reported that many of these camps are to be abandoned and the number of young men enrolled in this Civilian Conservation Corps is to be reduced.

Many of us have expressed vigorous objection to the waste of public funds, but I do not know of anyone who has considered the activities of the C. C. C. camps subject to that criticism. The C. C. C. work ought to be continued, and instead of a reduction in enrollment, additional young men should be permitted to join this organization, and the scope of its activity should be enlarged. If this order to abandon camps where money has already been spent to construct the same, and to discharge many young men already in these camps, many of whose families are on relief rolls, it will be just another example of governmental inefficiency. I do not know who is responsible for the bad advice that has been given the executive officials. I do say that they have had bad advice from someone, because the abandonment of these camps and the reduction of the personnel is not an economy at all, and will serve to add to the present ranks of the unemployed, and will make the relief problems of our communities more complicated and burdensome.

I sincerely hope that this order may be rescinded, and that the worth while work now being carried on by the Civilian Conservation Corps may be continued. [Applause.]

THE GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY PROJECT

Mr. Chairman, I wish now to speak of the St. Lawrence waterway project. A group of public-spirited citizens are in session today at Detroit, Mich., for the purpose of furthering efforts to complete the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project. I think it fitting to call attention to this important conference which is now in progress. A treaty has been negotiated with Canada, and is now pending before the Senate of the United States. This treaty has failed of ratification.

The conference now in session at Detroit has met to discuss the reasons for the failure of the treaty, and to devise new means and methods of having a treaty made with Canada, which can and will be ratified by the Senate of the United States.

It is not my purpose to go into detail about the St. Lawrence waterway project. Most of you are familiar with the fact that the St. Lawrence waterway project is a plan to improve the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River so as to permit ocean-going boats to enter the Great Lakes, and likewise permit boats to leave the harbors of the Great Lakes and go direct to the ocean. In other words, the people of the Midwest would have the ocean literally moved several hundred miles inland. The St. Lawrence project, when completed, will give 40,000,000 people an ocean port. It will give them access to the markets of their own country and of foreign nations. It will give them cheap water transportation.

Powerful opposition has developed against this worth-while plan. I do not here go into detail as to the causes and sources of that opposition. On some other occasion I expect to discuss them.

It is to be regretted that during this period of time, when the Government is spending enormous sums of money, and when millions of people are out of work, that a treaty cannot be negotiated with Canada, because thousands of unemployed people could be given employment in completing one of the greatest projects of modern times.

I want to wish for the people who are attending the seaway conference all possible success in their efforts to overcome the opposition to the seaway treaty, and to bring about an early ratification. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, on the 7th of February, in my home city of Wausau, Wis., which is the county seat of Marathon County, a large dairy-producing county, there was a meeting of interested parties, including farmers, businessmen, and dairymen, at which time resolutions were adopted protesting against the Canadian and Swiss reciprocal-trade agreements. The resolutions adopted at this meeting protested against what they claimed to be a reduction in the tariff rates on butter and other dairy products. The preamble of the resolution contained the statement that the tariff on butter coming in from Canada had been reduced from 14 cents to 8 cents. The persons who wrote this particular part of the resolutions were in error, because reciprocal-trade agreements thus far negotiated do not specifically reduce the tariff on butter but do reduce the tariff on other dairy products.

However, in closing their resolution they expressed themselves as follows:

Resolved, That the tariff on butter, cheese, and all other dairy products be restored to such a figure as will furnish adequate protection to our dairy farmers.

They made their position very clear that they wanted more protection for dairy products. Taking the resolution as a whole, no one can come to any other conclusion than that this group of dairy farmers and other citizens were protesting against the provisions of the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement, which reduced the tariff on dairy products.

This resolution was forwarded on the 10th of February by Mr. E. J. Benson, who is chairman of the Marathon County Board of Supervisors and one of those participating in the meeting, to both United States Senators and to the 10 Members of the House representing the State of Wisconsin in the United States Congress.

The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY] apparently forwarded this letter to Secretary of State Hull, because on last Saturday the Milwaukee Sentinel carried an Associated Press dispatch in which it quoted at length from the reply of Secretary Cordell Hull to Senator DUFFY. In this reply an attempt was made to justify the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement. I have not seen the letter that was sent by Secretary Hull to Senator DUFFY. I have only the newspaper dispatch I referred to a moment ago. I do not know whether the information was released to the newspapers by the Secretary of State or by the junior Senator from Wisconsin. In the newspaper article no reference is made to the fact that there was a reduction made by the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada in the tariff on cheese. No reference was made at all to the fact that 1,500,000 gallons of cream, either fresh or sour, can be imported, practically all of which will come from Canada at a rate reduced from 56.6 cents per gallon under the tariff act to 35 cents a gallon under the reciprocal-trade agreement. This amount of cream could be used to manufacture more than 6,000,000 pounds of butter; and, if used for that purpose, such butter would actually go on the American market with a tariff reduction which would approximate the reduction of from 14 cents to 8 cents a pound referred to in the resolution. No mention was made of that in this news release. Neither did this letter refer to the fact that the tariff on Cheddar cheese which is generally known as American cheese, was reduced from 7 cents to 5 cents and the ad-valorem duty from not less than 35 percent to not less than 25 percent. No reference was made of these provisions in this newspaper dispatch; but the Secretary of State is quoted as having stated in his letter to Senator DUFFY, as follows:

"No reduction has been made in the duty on butter in any trade agreement negotiated with a foreign country under the Trade Agreement Act of June 12, 1934," Hull wrote. "On the other hand, the trade agreement with Canada has resulted in a tariff reduction from 14 to 12 cents per pound on butter imported into Canada from the United States.

"Thus the trade-agreement program as consummated so far has, in relation to butter, done the exact reverse of what the Marathon County Board of Supervisors believe it has."

He makes quite a point of the fact—and that is the only point in this newspaper article and, I presume, the main point of his letter—that Canada agreed to permit our butter to go into Canada at a 12-cent rate instead of at the rate of 14 cents. He apparently believes this should be a great boon to the dairy industry.

Mr. Chairman, last week I had occasion to look up the price of butter on the Montreal and Chicago markets. The Montreal market on butter that day was 22½ cents and the Chicago market was 35½ cents. If we were to export butter into Canada and pay the duty of 12 cents, it would mean that the American exporters would receive only 10½ cents a pound for such butter as went to Canada after paying the 12 cents tariff under this act. Let us take the Montreal price of 22½ cents. Deducting the 12 cents tariff, there is left a net of 10½ cents, without any deduction for transportation, which our exporters would receive for the butter.

Mr. Chairman, when butter is selling on the Chicago market for 35½ cents a pound, does anyone think an American exporter would be foolish enough to take the same butter and export it to Canada and receive only 10½ cents a pound? It is ridiculous to assume such a thing could possibly take place.

They try to make some point of the fact we are exporting butter to foreign countries. We export very little. Do you know how much butter we exported to Canada in 1934? One thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine pounds. There were 1,789 pounds of butter exported from this country to Canada in 1934, having a total value of $617. During the same year we imported 8,809 pounds of butter from Canada, having a value of $2,151. In 1935 we exported a little more butter to Canada. During the first 11 months of that year we exported to Canada 29,432 pounds of butter, having a total value of $4,395; but I call attention to the fact that of the 29,432 pounds exported to Canada in the first 11 months of 1935, about 28,000 pounds were exported in the months of August and October.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I may say further that of this total amount of 29,432 pounds there was exported to Canada in the month of October alone 22,560 pounds, so that the very great percentage of all the butter exported from the United States to Canada in 1935 was exported in the month of October.

Do you know what American exporters received for this butter sent over to Canada? For 22,560 pounds of butter exported to Canada in the month of October 1935 they received a total of $2,506. That is about 11 cents a pound for butter exported to Canada in October of last year, and at the same time the average price for butter on the Chicago market was 25.39 cents.

New Zealand butter on the London market sold for 25.81 cents at that time. Practically all of the butter sent over to Canada during the year 1935 was exported during the month of October at a price of 11 cents, and at the same time the Chicago market was 25 cents, showing conclusively that this butter was sent over there under abnormal conditions. It was not an ordinary transaction. During the following month, in November 1935, we exported only 3 pounds of butter to Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I have tried to ascertain the facts, but there does not seem to be an explanation forthcoming. We who have been studying this matter have come to the conclusion that the exports in October 1935 must have been of some butter that had been shipped in here from a foreign country, and because of price conditions or something else, the importers got a tariff draw-back and exported it into Canada. The point I am trying to make by the use of these figures is that Canada does not ordinarily buy our butter. The Canadian price is always too low for them to buy any appreciable amount of our butter. The only time they will buy our butter, whether there be a 12 or 14 cent tariff duty, is when our price is so low that we cannot afford to sell it to them. It is impossible at the present time for our farmers to sell butter in Canada and receive more than 10 or 11 cents a pound. We cannot afford to enter that kind of a market. Therefore the reduction from 14 to 12 cents a pound on butter going from this country to Canada is absolutely of no benefit to us. There is no sense to it. We cannot take advantage of it.

Mr. Chairman, I call attention further to the fact that New Zealand as a part of the United Kingdom has certain trade preferentials with Canada, which will prevent Canada at all times from being a large user of our dairy products.

It cannot buy American dairy butter even with a 12-cent tariff. Canada is not going to buy any of our dairy products, and consequently our dairy farmers will derive no benefits from the trade agreement. It does not help us.

I should like to point out also that this trade agreement with Canada in every respect is detrimental to the dairy interests of this country. There are no concessions for the dairy industry in its provisions. The ridiculous, foolish provision which reduces the tariff on butter from 14 to 12 cents means nothing, because under no condition will they ever buy a large amount of our butter. Even now our price is about 13 cents higher than theirs, and in a short time you will find a great amount of butter coming into the United States, even though we have a tariff rate of 14 cents on such importations. It is silly. Whoever put that so-called concession on butter into the agreement must have thought that we were a lot more gullible than we really are. We are not accepting that as a concession to us. [Applause.] Our farmers realize that there is no benefit to be derived by them as a result of this trade agreement. They realize, however, that when you reduce the tariff on Cheddar cheese from 7 cents to 5 cents a pound that it does mean an awful lot of harm to our farmers.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. LAMBETH].

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, I requested this time in order to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] a question or two. The gentleman has just made a very earnest and impassioned statement on behalf of his dairy farmers. We all know the gentleman from Wisconsin has assumed a rather nonpartisan viewpoint with regard to legislation dealing with farm problems and has helped us in the tobacco- and cotton-growing States so far as legislation is concerned. In fact, I know of no Member of the House who has heretofore taken a more national viewpoint relative to the problems of agriculture.

Mr. BOILEAU. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LAMBETH. The gentleman has spoken here and attacked our reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada. He made particular reference to its effect on the dairy producers of his State. I should like to ask the gentleman one or two questions.

In the first place, I think the gentleman will agree with me that we have got to look at this problem from a national viewpoint; that is to say, that tariff legislation in the past has been built up along lines of logrolling. This is the question I want to put to the gentleman. Does he not think that if this trade agreement with Canada will result in increased employment in this country, due to a restoration of trade with Canada to more nearly normal levels, as existed prior to the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, this will mean more buying power in the United States for the products of the dairies of Wisconsin?

Mr. BOILEAU. I may say to the gentleman that he refers to logrolling; and I want to say to him further that this logrolling is going on under the reciprocal-trade agreements, only the logs are being rolled off of our skids and put on the skids of the industrialists. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMBETH. I want the gentleman to answer my question. I do not believe the gentleman has answered the question.

Mr. BOILEAU. I will say to the gentleman that this country, by and large, will be worse off rather than better off if American agriculture is traded off for American industry.

Mr. LAMBETH. Will the gentleman permit me in my own time to ask him another question?

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman has not given me time to answer.

Mr. LAMBETH. The gentleman comes from a section of the country which produces much wheat, and he must be aware of the fact that in 1929 the United States exported to Canada wheat in the value of $27,308,190, while in 1934, after the passage of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, the value of our wheat exported to Canada was only $15,758. Under the trade agreement, Canada has reduced duty on wheat imported from the United States from 30 to 12 cents per bushel.

The farming industry is dependent on foreign markets if the farms of America are to produce in anything like normal quantities. It is to be regretted that the dairy industry does not feel that it has received fair treatment, but if farming conditions are to improve the problem must be considered from the national viewpoint. It would be extremely unwise to revise our trade agreements in the interest of some special industry and thus start tearing down the structure that promises to be of such great help to the agricultural and business interests of the country as a whole. The reduction of crops is necessary because we have lost our foreign markets. The trade agreements give promise of bringing back these markets and in this way making unnecessary further and continued drastic curtailment of farming operations.

The same selfish interests—termed the "hog combine"—which wrote the Hawley-Smoot prohibitive tariff bill are now seeking to wreck this reciprocal-trade policy of the Roosevelt administration, a national program in the interest of all the people, particularly the unemployed and consumers. I am confident the gentleman will not aline himself with that group.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the rural sections of my congressional district, like many of yours, are made up almost exclusively of small farms. We produce no cotton, very little wheat, and perhaps not more than one-fourth of the corn we consume. Much of the income of our farmers is derived from stock raising, poultry, dairy products, fruits, vegetables, and so forth.

I have had hundreds of complaints from the farmers of my district against the A. A. A. They contended that the A. A. A. helped the big farmer, but was very little benefit to the small farmer, as benefits were extended almost exclusively to the big cotton planters of the South and the great wheat, corn, and hog raisers of the North and West. The other day when what I termed as the political, dictatorial, and unconstitutional so-called farm-conservation program was before the House proposing to put into the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture approximately $500,000,000 to build up a political machine and to pay out this money to the big cotton planters of the South and the wheat and corn growers of the North and West, an amendment was offered by the Republicans to limit the amount that any farmer could receive in any 1 year of this relief to $2,000. This amendment was objected to by the Democrats. Motion was made by the Republicans to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions that they report it back with an amendment limiting the amount of benefits any one farmer could receive in any 1 year to $2,000, and on a roll call, of course, I voted for this motion, as did nearly every other Republican, but the Democrats, having a big majority in the House, defeated it.

Congressman TABER, of New York, a Republican, introduced a resolution, House Resolution 426, on February 21, 1936, which provided that the Secretary of Agriculture be required to furnish to the House of Representatives the names and post-office addresses and the amount paid to each farm producer receiving $2,000 or more in each calendar year under the A. A. A. This resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, which is about 3 to 1 Democratic.

This Committee on Agriculture, controlled by our Democratic friends, made an unfavorable report on this resolution and recommended that the resolution be not passed. On March 2, 1936, this resolution was called up in the House and, as I recall, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, a good Democrat, made a motion to table the resolution. The roll was called, and 101 Members voted against the motion to table—these were practically all Republicans—and 244 voted to table the resolution; and, as I recall, all of these were good Democrats, and, of course, the resolution was defeated—and the Secretary of Agriculture will not be required to furnish the representatives in Congress of the American people the names and post-office addresses of the persons who have been paid $2,000 or more a year of benefits under the A. A. A. The adverse report of the Committee on Agriculture filed with their report a letter from Hon. Chester C. Davis, who was the Administrator of the A. A. A. He is the man who distributed more than $1,100,000,000 benefits under the A. A. A. He says in his letter that this information cannot be had, that it is not available; but he makes a more remarkable statement than that in his letter wherein he says "in addition to the fact that the suggested material is not available—the A. A. A. has protected the interests of the individual contract signers by withholding public announcement of individual contract figures. These contracts were agreements between the Secretary of Agriculture and the individual contract signer, and it has been held that the individual producer was entitled to confidential treatment of the contract information." Is not that a very remarkable statement? In the first instance he says that the information is not available and in the second he says that it would not be furnished if it were available because he desires to keep secret all of these contracts for these benefits. He has paid out $1,100,000,000 and yet he says that he is unable to furnish information of the names and post-office addresses of the persons who received $2,000 or more of these benefits in a single year. Have they destroyed the records? I have always understood that the Federal Government kept a record of every penny that has been paid out by the Government. Are there no records of this $1,100,000,000 that have been handed out, and a big part of it just before election time? If the records are not available, why not? Who has them? Why keep these contracts secret? Will they not bear the light of day? Who is being shielded by this secrecy?

BIG FELLOWS GOT THE MONEY

Of this $500,000,000 that the New Deal administration is turning over to Mr. Wallace with dictatorial powers and with practically no strings on it at all, the farmers themselves will not receive as much as $400,000,000. It is claimed that Mr. Wallace, the Secretary of Agriculture, has under him an army of more than 140,000 officeholders. Of course, they will get a big slice of this money. These officeholders will be relieved before the farmers.

Now, there are approximately 7,000,000 farmers in this country. If this fund should be divided equally it would only give each farm about $60. Were we Republicans wrong when we were demanding that no person could be paid more than $2,000 in any one year? It has been freely talked on the floor of this House for some time that last year one big landowner in Texas received over $200,000 of the A. A. A. money not to produce cotton, and so forth. I heard a gentleman, whom I regard to be truthful, say that he saw a check for more than $113,000 to a man under the hog contract. This man had 4½ acres of ground. He was one of these garbage-can hog raisers. He was paid $113,000 not to raise hogs. Yet the New Dealers say that these funds are to help the farmers. There are many rumors of persons receiving $10,000, $40,000, $50,000, and as high as $75,000 of these so-called farm benefits. A short time ago a distinguished Democratic Congressman, representing one of the city districts of Boston, stated on the floor of this House that some firm or individual in his district received a check for $10,000 or more for not raising hogs right in the great city of Boston.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I cannot yield, I do not have the time. I am sorry. Now, if we are going to help the farmers of America this help should be distributed as widely as possible. You cannot help the small farmers of my district and your district unless you place a limit on the fund so that the big fellows will not gobble it all up. I cannot understand the attitude of my Democratic friends in this House refusing to put a limit of $2,000 on the amount that any one farmer shall receive of this money in a year, and I was greatly disappointed when our Democratic friends voted, almost solidly, to defeat the resolution requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to report to the House the names and postoffice addresses of all persons who have received more than $2,000 a year of this farm-relief money. The small farmers in my district and in your district have been receiving nothing, or only a few crumbs that have fallen from the tables of the great cotton planters and the great wheat and corn farmers of the North and West.

How was this money spent in 1933, 1934, and 1935 raised? By heavy processing taxes—sales tax—on cotton, wheat, corn, rice, rye, pork, and so forth. Who paid it? The consumers of flour, meal, meat, and other necessities of life. Who were these consumers? The small farmers of your district and mine, miners, the railroad workers, shop and mill workers, and our other citizens. They have a right to know if the tax dollars taken from their sweat was paid to the amount of $200,000 to one great plantation of thousands and thousands of acres. They have a right to know if $113,000 was paid to one garbage-can hog raiser and $10,000 was paid to another so-called hog raiser not to raise hogs in the middle of a great city.

Now the President has asked Congress to put $500,000,000 of new taxes on the American people to raise the money to turn over to Mr. Wallace to spend in this good election year of 1936. Two-thirds of all taxes are paid by the common people. The big fellow puts his taxes on his products and hands the taxes to the consumer. Now these taxpayers have a right, through their Members of Congress, to see that no farmer shall receive more than $2,000 in benefits from this fund, because if you are going to pay a part of the big fellow's $10,000, $113,000, and $200,000 the money will give out and the millions of little farmers will receive nothing. As we have shown, if this fund were equally distributed among all the farmers of the Nation they would get on an average of less than $60 apiece.

If we are going to pay these huge sums to a chosen few, of course, the ordinary and small farmers of your district and mine will not even get crumbs. To limit the amount to $2,000 that any person may receive of these benefits is so manifestly right and fair that I cannot understand why our Democratic friends oppose it. The farmer, with his thousands of acres, and the garbage-can fellows can take care of themselves. They do not need this relief. I want to bring relief to the ordinary and small farmer of my district and the Nation.

The Democrats voted down the proposition for the Secretary of Agriculture to give the post-office addresses and names of those who had received $2,000 or more of the $1,100,000,000 paid out under the A. A. A. in 1933, 1934, and 1935, and the administration has kept these matters secret and refuses to give out the information, because, in my honest opinion, if the American people should learn the facts and see what abuses have been made and the favoritism practiced, this administration would be denounced from one end of the land to the other.

Nearly $700,000,000 of this $1,100,000,000 were paid out to the great wheat growers of the North and West. A few, and only a few, of the farmers of my district and yours received any of these benefits, and they only received crumbs; but the people of your district and mine did pay the high processing taxes—sales taxes—to make these funds available. I want the Republicans in the House and Senate to fight and to continue to fight until this information is forthcoming, so that the American people, who have paid these sales taxes, may know the facts. The small farmers of our Nation have been outraged and discriminated against, and, in my opinion, the publication of this information will clearly demonstrate that fact. [Applause.]

PARTISAN POLITICS

It is most interesting to study the record showing the disbursement of this A. A. A. money. Very little was sent out in July and August in any year. In 1934, when there were many races on for Senators, Congressmen, and Governors, countless millions of dollars were sent out in checks in October. These checks reached the beneficiaries—I cannot say the farmers, because they were not all farmers; many of them were garbage-can, so-called hog raisers and others were imposing upon the Government—just before the November election. There was a tremendous fall-off in the checks sent out in November after the elections. The Democrats know that this is a political bill. They have given Mr. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, dictatorial powers. They are turning over to him approximately $500,000,000 without any strings. A good Democrat Congressman from my own State said on the floor of the House when this measure was up that "Mr. Wallace was given greater powers in the spending of this $500,000,000 than had been given to any man in this country. He had dictatorial powers over the farms and farmers of this country", and this good Kentucky Democrat voted against the bill. They did not want Mr. Wallace to have any strings on this big sum of money. They did not want the benefits to any one person limited to $2,000. They wanted him to be able to go out and play Santa Claus in his own way, and, in my opinion, in such a manner as would promote the candidacy of Mr. Roosevelt. These Democrats know that this so-called farm bill will be knocked out as being unconstitutional when it reaches the Supreme Court; but, of course, this cannot happen until the money has been spent and the election is over. If we are going to give out money to help the farmers, I wanted a provision in the bill to make it possible for the ordinary and small farmers of my district to get their part of the money. A man who is such a big farmer that he will receive more than $2,000 of benefits out of this fund does not need the help. Let us help those who need the help. [Applause.]

AMERICAN MARKETS TURNED OVER TO FOREIGN FARMERS

My good friend, Mr. BOILEAU, from Wisconsin, who made such a valiant fight to prevent the discrimination against dairy farmers and stock raisers in this so-called farm-relief bill, just concluded a speech pointing out how the reciprocal-trade agreement between this country and Canada has adversely affected the dairy interest in this country. These reciprocal-trade agreements entered into between this administration and the various countries of the world have taken a big part of the American markets from our own farmers and turned it over to the farmers of foreign countries. We have put heavy sales taxes—processing taxes—on our farm products and raised the price of them, and we have paid our farmers to cut out about 40,000,000 acres of productive lands and produced a scarcity of farm products in this country. The scarcity of farm products and the high prices have produced a very attractive market in this country for the cheaply produced products of foreign countries, and I wish to again emphasize what these sales taxes and reciprocal-trade agreements have done to our import and export trade. In 1935 the importations of wheat from foreign countries into our country increased 2,500 percent over 1934. The importation of pork products from foreign lands increased 3,200 percent in 1935 over 1934, and importations of beef products from various foreign countries into our own country increased 6,000 percent in 1935 over 1934. In other words, we have simply turned over this fine American domestic market for farm products to foreign countries.

I favor a farm program that will protect this American market for American farmers and encourage American farmers to produce sufficient wheat, meat, rye, corn, butter, eggs, poultry, and so forth, to supply our American market; and if we have a surplus, and it would lower the price to sell that surplus in foreign markets, for this country to compensate American farmers for that loss. In my opinion, that would be a sane farm policy. It would insure good markets and good prices for our farmers, and that policy would be a small burden on the American taxpayers as compared with the policy we have been pursuing, and this would be a permanent policy and the American farmer would be free. There would be no favoritism and partisanism shown to a few of the great cotton planters of the South, the wheat and corn growers of the North and West. All farmers would receive a square deal. [Applause.]

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I have not the time. I am sorry.

SHALL WE PAY MINERS AND OTHER WORKERS NOT TO PRODUCE?

I have pointed out that we have collected in all about $1,500,000,000 in sales taxes—processing taxes—to pay out mostly to big landowners not to produce. At the same time, we have and are paying out other millions of dollars to bring unproductive land into production by reclamation and irrigation projects. What would the people think of the proposition to pay coal miners not to dig coal, to pay railroad workers not to run trains, to pay the shop workers not to build engines and cars and other machinery, to pay the factory workers not to make furniture, clothing, and to pay the millions of other unemployed people not to make toys, dresses, and thousands of other articles? The policy to tax the people to pay the cotton planter, the great wheat and corn grower, and the garbage-can man not to raise hogs, not to produce, cannot be right until we tax the people to pay the miners and these other workers—factory, shop, and mill workers—not to produce. No country every enjoyed prosperity with scarcity. At this time, when there are 12,625,000 unemployed, according to William Green, president, American Federation of Labor, and 20,000,000 Americans needing relief, according to Harry Hopkins, the Relief Administrator, is certainly no time to destroy the necessities of life and then have them shipped in from foreign countries. The policies of the present administration have contributed to unemployment and have added to the relief rolls.

Let us do the sane, sensible, constitutional, and permanent thing for agriculture, industry, commerce, and labor. For one, I am unwilling to follow this group of political "brain trusters" into the swamps and bogs of paternalism and socialism.

The other nations of the world have come out of the depression and have very little unemployment. The New Deal is not in charge of those countries. Most of them are reaping the benefits of the folly of the New Deal policies in turning over our great American market to the producers of farm and industrial products of foreign countries.

These other countries still believe self-reliance, industry, thrift, and economy are virtues not to be despised. In our own land we not only see unemployment on the increase and relief still at its peak after we have increased the deficits of our country more than $13,000,000,000 and will at the end of this administration see a national debt of more than $35,000,000,000.

It is time that we begin to think in terms of the great American policies and ideals that made us the finest, the richest, and most wonderful Nation on earth.

MR. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [MR. MARCANTONIO].

MR. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, a great deal has been said and a great deal has been attempted with reference to legislation for the protection of organized labor in the United States. We passed the Wagner-Connery bill last year, and prior to that a half-hearted defeatist effort had been made to enforce section 7 (a) of the N. R. A. With all this talk about protecting labor in the United States, we find, however, that the Government of the United States has been guilty of giving out contracts for Government work to builders in the shipbuilding industry, such as the Bethlehem Co., which has a contract to do some work for the Navy out in San Francisco, where there is now raging a strike; and, also, for instance, last year a contract to the New York Shipbuilding Co. in Camden, N. J., where a strike was in existence for 13 weeks, settled only after the President stepped in. We have now in Rutland, Vt., and the towns adjoining Rutland, the Vermont Marble Co., doing Government work and subjecting its workers to the worst form of terrorism and exploitation. The Vermont Marble Co. furnished the marble for the United States Supreme Court Building, as well as for the Sailors and Soldiers Monument, and it has at present $5,000,000 worth of Government contracts. The employees of the Vermont Marble Co. are out on strike. Just what is this Vermont Marble Co. strike? It is a strike which has been in existence since November. It is a strike upon the part of the workers of the Vermont Marble Co., about 800 of them, who are demanding a decent living wage, and I take this opportunity to present to my colleagues and to call the attention of the country to the nature of the conditions these men have been working under in Rutland, Vt. Incidentally, a committee of prominent citizens in many of the Eastern States went up to Rutland, Vt., to conduct an investigation, and this investigation brought forth many interesting facts.

For instance, the workers in this Vermont Marble Co. received as little as 50 cents and 20 cents a week. That may sound very, very strange, it may sound like fiction, and it sounds unbelievable, but nevertheless the evidence reveals that the men there were receiving 30 cents an hour and receiving $13.30 per week. They were living in company buildings, and they had to pay rent, light, water charges, and pasturage charges. The company took out the charges for rent, the charges for light, the charges for water, the charges for pasturage, and the heads of those families went home on Saturday night, in many instances, with 50 cents a week, and never did that pay envelope have a balance of more than $5 a week. Sometimes those families consisted of 7, 8, or 10 people. I submit that even the most conservative gentlemen of this House cannot disagree with men going out on strike when they are receiving at the end of the week not more than $5 a week, and in many instances, 50 cents and 30 cents per week. Of course, the company was very charitable to those men. They extended their charity in the following respects: When the charges due to the company exceeded the sum of $13.30 per week, the company would voluntarily give to the worker 20 cents, so that he could travel back home. They also established a hospital. The family which owns the Vermont Marble Co. is one of the oldest dynasties in the State of Vermont. There have been three or four governors from that family. Naturally they go in for charity. They established a hospital there. This hospital gives the workers a very great benefit, to wit, the employees of the Vermont Marble Co. may use that hospital at the rate of only $3 per day, while those who are not employees may use that hospital at $3.50 per day. It is just like a salesman for the Lincoln automobile going up to an unemployed man on relief and informing him that he can buy a Lincoln car for $500 less than it actually costs. [Laughter.]

Now, what is more vicious than this is that while those men were on strike—and they still are—they naturally have applied for relief and have been unable to obtain it. The State of Vermont does not spend one penny for relief. Relief is provided by the towns. The distribution of relief is in the hands of the so-called overseer of the poor, a left-over of rugged individualism. Incidentally the law of the State of Vermont provides, among other things, that when the superintendent of schools finds that a child cannot come to school because of lack of clothing or food, he directs the overseer of the poor to supply that family with proper food and clothing. In many instances this was refused, and it was repeatedly refused. The workers who are on strike have received practically no relief at all from the various overseers of the poor in that community. In one case, one decent district attorney took up the case and he indicted the overseer of the poor. The man who testified against him was the superintendent of schools. A jury trial was held and the overseer of the poor was found guilty, but it is very, very interesting indeed that the overseer of the poor, a certain John F. Dwyer, was the foreman of the Vermont Marble Co. at Central Rutland, Vt., who was represented by the law firm of Lawrence, Stafford & O'Brien, attorneys for the Vermont Marble Co., and that same law firm of Lawrence, Stafford & O'Brien also represents the town of Rutland, Vt., and of Central Rutland, and they also represent the body of selectmen of those towns. So that the strikers in Rutland, Vt., the strikers in the Vermont Marble Co. plant, are even deprived of relief due to this close tie-up between the overseers of the poor and the company, which refuses to pay these people more than a maximum wage of $5 per week, and in many instances 50, 20, and 30 cents per week.

However, this same State which refuses to help these strikers by means of relief, has not hesitated at all in spending from $800 to $1,700 per week for deputies. They have 16 deputies employed, and the State pays those 16 deputies from $800 to $1,700 per week. The company which refuses to give any increase in wages at all is paying $5 a day to 80 men who have been deputized by the State. Many of those deputies have been found guilty of drunkenness, assault, and reckless driving. They have terrorized those communities. In one instance a man of 70 years of age, a peddler, was beaten by these deputies. He had no connection at all with the strike, but he was almost beaten to death. It may be asked, "Why does this situation concern the Congress?" I say it does concern the Congress, because the Vermont Marble Co. today actually has $5,000,000 worth of contracts with the Government of the United States. The marble in that Supreme Court building has been furnished by the Vermont Marble Co. This company, incidentally, which claims poverty, and which says it cannot pay any decent wages, according to the statistics given us by the Standard Statistics, which is a reliable authority and accepted by all business firms in the United States, has accounts payable $119,000 against an inventory of $1,000,000; cash on hand, $65,000; accounts receivable, $1,100,000, mostly from the United States Government; land and buildings, $5,000,000; investments in subsidiary concerns, $3,000,000. This same company, which refuses decent wages, has been paying a 5-percent dividend regularly on its preferred stock.

We can talk about the Wagner-Connelly bill, we can demagogue about labor all we please, we can make speeches for home consumption, about the protection of labor, but I submit that the administration cannot in one breath say it intends to protect labor and in the other breath hand out contracts to people like the Vermont Marble Co. which is exploiting labor. I do not mean to insult the dignity of the Supreme Court, but I say that the marble with which the Supreme Court building has been built is stained with the blood of the exploited wage slaves of Vermont.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Let me complete my thought first and then I shall yield.

When we passed the N. R. A. and the Wagner-Connelly Act, employers went into court and tried to have them declared unconstitutional. One thing these companies cannot have declared unconstitutional is the power of Congress to require that before a Government contract is let, the bidders shall agree to proper labor conditions and a decent standard of wages as conditions precedent. The hours of labor and the wages should be fixed in these contracts, and every bidder awarded a contract for any kind of work should be compelled to sign an agreement as to hours and wages. We cannot ask industry in one breath to give labor a square deal when in the next breath we let our contracts running into millions of dollars to people and to groups who are exploiting labor, not only profiteering on labor but the profiteering made possible by money furnished by the Government of the United States.

I believe a law should be passed by Congress compelling the Executive and the various Cabinet officers to include in every contract they let, terms as to wages and as to hours. In this manner only can we prevent exploiters from exploiting labor with Government money. In other words, we should stop demagoguing here about protecting labor's rights on the one hand when on the other we permit the administration and many of its Cabinet officers to let out contracts that disregard the rights of labor.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman is correct in his statement as to the power of Congress to impose conditions precedent to the granting of a contract. I have listened with great interest to what the gentleman has said, and if those facts are true, of course nobody can escape agreeing with the gentleman in his observations. I have always felt, however, that the mandatory provision of the law compelling department heads to award contracts to the lowest responsible bidder has worked a hardship in this respect that might be obviated by giving some discretion to a department head where a bidder has satisfied him as to the payment of the prevailing wages and compliance with other conditions with reference to labor.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I thank the gentleman for his observation.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. The gentleman spoke about exploiting labor and stated that the Supreme Court Building was built with the blood of wage slaves—

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I did not say that. What I said was that the marble in it was stained with the blood of wage slaves.

Mr. FIESINGER. Is it not a fact that the fault lies with Congress rather than with the Executive and the administration?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It is the fault of both. The following is a report of impartial citizens, headed by Mr. Rockwell Kent, made after a thorough investigation of the cruel exploitation of labor carried on by the Vermont Marble Co., a beneficiary under United States contracts.

We find the conditions prior to the strike as follows:

First. That the wages received by the men working for the Vermont Marble Co. in those occupations represented by the unions were inadequate to sustain a decent standard of living.

Second. The company had continued to pay regular dividends on its preferred stock at the rate of 5 percent and has continued to pay on its common stock. The company's statement shows as of December 31, 1935, total assets of $11,203,376 against liabilities of $119,043, nearly half of assets being in liquid condition such as investments, cash, and accounts receivable.

Third. The company is adequately able to increase wages to its employees.

Fourth. The company has refused to bargain collectively with the union although it at all times represented a majority of the employees in quarrying and marble work, including carpenters, electricians, and railroad workers.

Fifth. The company, in refusing to sign an agreement with the union, could not have legitimately done so on the ground that the union demanded a closed shop, since that demand was waived early in the negotiations.

Sixth. The company refused even to incorporate in a working agreement provisions as to working conditions.

Seventh. The company refused to consider the question of a pay raise. It did not merely refuse to grant the demands of the strikers, but utterly refused any increase, even though the company has recently had large contracts with the United States Government, including the supplying of stone for the United States Supreme Court Building.

We find the following facts as to the period since the strike was declared:

Eighth. The strike was conducted in an orderly and lawful way by the strikers.

Ninth. We find that the company employed deputy sheriffs and paid for them out of its own funds; that such practice is not conducive to fair and impartial execution of the law, and in this case has led to abuse of authority. Subsequently the State of Vermont retained deputy sheriffs at its expense. The State of Vermont, while contributing $800 to $1,700 a week for the pay of deputy sheriffs to the number of 16 employed by it, gave nothing and never has given anything in the form of relief to the strikers. We find that the employment of these unneeded deputies on behalf of the company and the refusal to grant relief to strikers constitutes discrimination.

Tenth. The Vermont Marble Co. is employing upward of 80 deputy sheriffs and paying them at the rate of $5 per day and maintenance, although the company pleaded inability to increase the wages of its workers.

Eleventh. The deputies called into the situation and employed by the company were called in reality in the capacity of professional strikebreakers, having earned that character during the Barre strike in the granite industry. They were persons of unfit character to preserve law and order. They acted in a provocative manner and for the purpose of provoking strikers into unlawful action.

Twelfth. With the exception of one demonstration following immediately after provocation by strikebreakers under protection of deputies, there has been no disorder by the strikers. There is no evidence whatsoever to show any connection between the strikers and certain alleged dynamitings, and no substantiation for the accusation by the company against the strikers.

Thirteenth. During the strike strikers though in dire need of relief to maintain a subsistence level of life, have been denied relief, and one relief official, who is also a supervisor employee of the company, has been convicted after a jury trial of illegally refusing relief to the family of a striker.

We find that no adequate system of relief can be devised until the relief problem is faced and handled by the State itself rather than by local officials. We find that the relief situation in the communities is too closely tied up with and controlled by the Vermont Marble Co. to give the basis for any reasonable expectation that relief conditions will be improved without State and Federal intervention.

Fourteenth. We find that the company has threatened to evict at least 186 of its striking employees from their houses on April 1. We find this to be a provocative act, calculated to stir the strikers to unlawful action.

Fifteenth. We find that the company has embarked upon a policy of stirring up feeling as between the various nationalities among these workers for the purpose of creating animosities among its workers, particularly toward non-native-born employees.

Sixteenth. We find that the sheriff of the county is incapable and unfit to protect the rights of strikers.

Seventeenth. We find that the Governor of the State of Vermont has already too long failed to intervene officially in the situation and to require the company to meet with the union in an honest effort to negotiate a settlement of the controversy, and has failed to require the commissioner of industry to investigate the dispute, hold public hearings thereon, inquire into wage conditions, and offer to arbitrate the dispute, though the law of Vermont makes express provision for such action by the Governor and/or the commissioner. The commissioner, who was appointed to this office by a protégé of the persons controlling the company, has signally failed to perform his duties.

We find that the Conciliation Service of the United States Department of Labor has delayed unreasonably in making any report public of what it has found through the investigations of Conciliator Post as available in Washington.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, so long as I am a member of a committee and that committee takes unanimous action on a bill, you will find me on the floor ready at all times to defend that committee against any unjust attack anyone may make on it.

Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand a copy of the Washington Star for March 8, 1936, where practically a whole page is used in attacking the Committee on Appropriations respecting the District appropriation bill, and this attack is made under the heading "Errors and Half-truths." If you will compare the assertions and contentions made by the Star under this heading with the admissions made by the District Commissioners in their testimony before our committee, you will agree that the heading is proper, because every criticizing assertion made by the Star is an error or a half-truth.

As a metropolitan newspaper that purveys news generally to the people, outside of the one subject of taxation in Washington, and its continued efforts to get rid of me, there is no better paper in the United States than the Washington Star. It is otherwise accurate and reliable, but when it comes to fighting for nominal taxes in the District of Columbia and trying to make the Government pay most of the local civic expenses here, and when it comes to getting their tremendously valuable paper here assessed as low as possible and paying as little tax on it as possible, and trying to down me because I oppose them, you cannot rely on a single statement it puts in its pages, not one.

UNANIMOUSLY REPORTED BY COMMITTEE OF 39 MEMBERS

First, I want to call your attention to the fact that the District of Columbia appropriation bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Appropriations. It is the largest committee in the House of Representatives. No other House committee has more than 28 members. The Committee on Appropriations is composed of 39 Members of this House.

Some of these Members have been here for years, many of them have served here over 20 years. You will not find a more valuable Member of Congress on any committee here than our friend from New York [Mr. TABER], even if he is a partisan Republican. I fight across the aisle with him, but he is an outstanding, valuable Member of this Congress. Do you think he would stand for anything that was not fair and right to the people? He ably represents the minority. He is the ranking outstanding minority member of that big Committee on Appropriations, consisting of 39 members. Why, it is his privilege and his prerogative on this floor when a bill is brought in that is not just and fair to everyone, to get up here and denounce it. We had nearly 3 days of general debate on that bill. Every member who asked to speak on it was given time, everyone. Not a single member of that big committee of 39 members spoke against the bill. That bill came here with a unanimous report from the subcommittee that held the hearings and framed the bill. It came here with a unanimous report from the full committee—the 39 members of the Committee on Appropriations.

EIGHTY-THREE PAGES READ AND ADOPTED WITHOUT ANY AMENDMENT

Not one of the 39 members of that committee rose to attack it during the time the 83 pages of that bill were read and approved. There was not a single amendment adopted by the membership of the House.

As each paragraph of the bill was read, any Member could have offered an amendment to it. After each paragraph any Member could have spoken against it by moving to strike out the last word. The Washington Star made a ridiculous assertion here about the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House who presided in the chair while the bill was read, and who once presided over his own State legislature in Missouri. He was fair and square. When he left the chair, upon the Speaker resuming it, he received applause from the membership because of his ability and fairness. I have reference to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON].

Yet the Washington Star said that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] offered an amendment there was but one vote against the amendment, yet the Chair declared the amendment lost. Does the Star not know that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] knows the rules of this House? Does the Star not know that he is an able Member of this House and knows how to preserve his rights? Does the Star not know that if he had had any idea he could have gotten over 8 or 10 votes for his amendment he would have asked for a division? The fact he did not ask for a division showed that he realized his amendment would receive only a few votes and had no chance whatever of passing.

VOTE 290 FOR, ONLY 26 AGAINST

The Star also stated that we would not allow the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] to speak on her amendment to add $3,000,000 to the Federal contribution. She did not ask to speak. She asked for no time. She could have gotten 30 minutes in general debate if she had asked for the time. If she had asked for it on the floor, before debate had been closed, she could have been granted 5 minutes on every single paragraph of the bill by moving to strike out the last word. She did not ask for even a minute. So that neither the Washington Star nor any other newspaper may again misrepresent the facts, I quote from the RECORD just what happened, which is shown on pages 3374 and 3375 of the RECORD for March 5, 1936, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.
The motion was agreed to.

Then after debate had been exhausted, and there was no further time left for debate, the following occurred:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amendment offered by Mrs. NORTON: On page 2, line 7, after the word 'addition', strike out the figures '$2,700,000' and insert in lieu thereof '$5,700,000.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mrs. NORTON) there were—ayes 17, noes 54.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present, and I object to the vote on that ground.

Mr. BLANTON. That will not secure a vote on the amendment, I will say to the gentlewoman from New Jersey. It will produce a quorum only.

Mrs. NORTON. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on that vote I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentlewoman from New Jersey withdraw her point of no quorum?

Mrs. NORTON. No. I insist on the point of order. I made the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixteen Members are present, a quorum.

The amendment was rejected.

It will be noted from the above that the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON] did not even ask for any time.

Then the next day, when the bill was finally passed, I quote from page 3399 of the RECORD for March 6, 1936, as to what actually occurred, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey demands the yeas and nays. All in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Seven Members have arisen; not a sufficient number.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 138, noes 11.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty Members present; not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 290, nays 26, answered "present" 1, not voting 113.

Hence, it will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that not one thing was done by anyone to prevent the gentlewoman from New Jersey from speaking. She did not speak because she did not take advantage of her opportunities. For, as previously stated, she could have spoken at length in general debate had she requested time. She could have moved to strike out the last word after the reading of any paragraph on any of the 83 pages of the bill.

When the paragraph she sought to amend was read, by asking for time before motion for debate had been passed, it would have been granted her, but she did not ask for time. When the Washington newspapers assert that she could not get any time to speak on her amendment they are imposing upon the credulity of the Washington people. She could have arranged for time very easily if she had asked for it at the time the chairman in charge of the bill moved to close debate. But she did not ask for it. It was her fault. She can blame no one but herself when she failed to ask for time. Even if she had spoken an hour, she would not have changed results. Every Member present knew exactly what was the issue. Every Member knew that the issue was whether the people of the United States, in the 48 States, who have to pay all of their own taxes at home, were to be forced to pay $2,700,000 or $5,700,000 on the expenses of the Washington people in the District of Columbia. The lady was able to get only 16 Members to vote with her to add $3,000,000 to the amount the people in the 48 States would have to pay on Washington local civic expenses. And when she forced a roll-call vote in the House on the passage of the bill she could get only 25 Members to vote with her against the passage of the bill, while 290 Members voted to pass the bill.

LAW REQUIRING FULL-VALUE ASSESSMENT GENERALLY VIOLATED

While the law requires all real property in the District of Columbia to be assessed at full value, this law is generally ignored and violated, and in most cases property is assessed at about one-half, or less than one-half, of full value.

I invite the attention of my colleagues, and of the people of Washington, to the renditions of prominent officials and citizens of Washington, shown on pages 19 to 48 of the hearings on the District of Columbia appropriation bill for 1937. Some of these citizens would not sell their property for three times the amount at which it is rendered for taxes.

I challenge the Washington Star to publish a list of its properties and assessed values set forth on pages 20, 21, and 22 of said hearings. It will not dare to do it. The owners of the Star know full well that they would not under any circumstances sell the Washington Star for twice the sum at which it is assessed.

TAXES OF ONLY $2.97 PAID ON TWO PACKARD AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Fleming Newbold is the business manager of the Washington Star. His two family automobiles are both Packards, yet on the two of them he pays only $2.97 annual taxes. This business manager of the Washington Star pays only $1 per year for registration and license number tags on each of his Packard limousines. Is not that ridiculous? There is no other city in the United States that would permit it. This business manager of the Washington Star renders for taxes intangible property at an assessed value of $40,728, upon which he has to pay an annual tax of only $203.64, because the rate here is only one-half of 1 percent—cheaper than the rate in any other city in the whole United States—and he gets away with it because this is the Nation's seat of government; and his big $5,000,000 newspaper, by condemning every Congressman who dares to oppose it, has been able to influence Congress each year to provide a large Federal contribution out of the people's Treasury to pay much of the local civic expenses here that ought to be borne by Washington people; and he and his Washington Star and other Washingtonians are thus relieved of paying a just and fair tax that the people everywhere else in the United States have to pay.

This business manager of the Washington Star has his family library exempt from taxes, no matter how much money it is worth. He has his family wearing apparel exempt from taxes, no matter how much money it is worth. He has $1,000 of household furniture exempt from taxes. He renders all of his tangible personal property at an assessed valuation of only $4,500, upon which he pays an annual tax of only $67.50. This business manager of the Washington Star renders his fine residential property at 1720 Massachusetts Avenue NW. at an assessed value of only $31,543, upon which he pays an annual tax of only $471.82. He has his water for his above properties furnished to him for the nominal charge of only $10.45 per year, less than a dollar per month. Where in the United States, outside of Washington, would this business manager of the Star be able to pay such nominal taxes on his properties? He cannot find another city in the United States that would let him get away with it. Yet his salary, or net income, last year was $31,543, as published recently by several Washington newspapers. Here in Washington he pays only 2 cents gasoline tax. He pays no income tax. He pays no estate tax. He pays no inheritance tax. He pays no gift tax. He pays no sales tax. Yet people in some other nearby cities have all of these taxes to pay.

This business manager of the Washington Star has no county tax to pay. He has no State tax to pay. He has no special school tax to pay. He has no special courthouse or jail tax to pay. He has no special water tax to pay. Yet citizens in other cities of the United States have to pay all of the above taxes in addition to their city tax. He pays only one tax on real estate, and that is $1.50 per $100, or $15 on the $1,000, with the property here in Washington generally assessed at about one-half of its real value. This business manager of the Washington Star has no sewer-service charge to pay each month. Not since sewer connection was first installed in his residence, and then at less than its cost, has he paid one cent for sewer service throughout all the years he has occupied his residence. He paid not one cent extra for the trees contiguous to his property. They were furnished without charge to him, were planted without charge to him, were protected with lumber frames around them until their growth started, have been pruned every year, have been sprayed every year, and have been replaced when any have died, all without any charge to him, notwithstanding the fact that in every other city in the United States the owner of the property, in addition to his regular taxes, has to pay for all of the above services.

ASSESSED BELOW REAL VALUE, EVEN PRIOR TO 1934

If you will look on pages 63 and 64 of our printed hearings, you will see that a citizen bought a piece of property for $4,500 and made the Government pay $11,500 for it; another citizen bought property for $12,000 and made the Government pay $25,000 for it; another bought a lot for $3,800 and then made the Government pay $8,250 for it; another citizen bought two lots for $16,500 and then made the Government pay $37,500 for them; another citizen bought a lot for $11,000 and then made the Government pay $28,500 for it; another citizen bought a lot for $3,500 and then made the Government pay $12,500 for it.

TAX ASSESSOR RICHARDS ADMITTED LOW ASSESSMENTS

I quote from the printed hearings on pages 64 and 65 the following:

PRICE ASKED FOR JEFFERSON JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL SITE

Mr. BLANTON. Now, concerning the Jefferson Junior High School, at the time the first jury was empaneled for fixing the value of that site, that jury fixed a value of $105,000. That was several times the value at which it was assessed at that time, was it not?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir. That was the part, the auditor just reminds me, that was in one ownership.

Mr. BLANTON. That was in one ownership.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government refused to pay that $105,000. They thought it was outrageous.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the second jury that was empaneled to condemn that property for the Government awarded $294,000.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And they fixed the amount the Government should pay for it at $105,000. Then it was condemned in a second proceeding and Washington citizens then fixed its value at $294,000, but we didn't take it.

I wish you would state to the committee the facts in regard to the property that was purchased in the block upon which the New House Office Building was built, and as to the manner in which the Government was held up on the value of that property. You have made a statement on this particular land in that particular condemnation and as to the different ownerships.

Mr. RICHARDS. A part of the land was purchased outright. I appeared before the committee consisting, I think, of the Speaker of the House, the minority leader, and someone else, and made a statement as to what that property was worth, but I do not think it went to condemnation. I think it was finally purchased.

Mr. BLANTON. All of the property that was purchased outright was purchased at a price far in excess of what it was assessed for taxes at that time.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of it at several times its assessed value.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

AMOUNTS FAR IN EXCESS OF ASSESSED VALUES PAID

I now want to call your attention to what the Government had to pay for the lots upon which the new Supreme Court Building was constructed, and I quote from page 78 of the printed hearings:

SALE PRICE AND SUBSEQUENT AWARDS BY JURY FOR SUPREME COURT SITE

Mr. RICHARDS. These are some figures in regard to the site of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLANTON. This data refers to the properties acquired, through condemnation, for the new Supreme Court Building.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. I read from the tax assessor's data. The following lots are in square 727: Lot no. 18 had sold for $4,500, and the jury awarded for it $11,500; lot 19 had sold for $5,500, and the jury awarded $8,500; lot no. 39 sold for $11,000, and the jury awarded $16,000; lot no. 40 sold for $12,000, and the jury awarded for it $25,000; lot no. 41 sold for $10,500, and the jury awarded for it $16,000; lot no. 804 sold for $8,000, and the jury awarded for it $14,500; lot no. 32 sold for $3,800, and the jury awarded for it $8,250.

The following lots are in square 728:

Lot no. 801, sold for $4,800, and the jury awarded for it $7,500; lot no. 802 sold for $6,000, and the jury awarded for it $12,000; lot no. 807 sold for $15,000, and the jury awarded for it $26,000; lots nos. 809 and 810 were sold for $16,500, and the jury awarded for them $37,500; lot no. 814 was sold for $11,000, and the jury awarded for it $28,500; lot no. 822 was sold for $5,650, and the jury awarded for it $10,000; lot no. 823 was sold for $8,500, and the jury awarded for it $17,000; lot no. 826 was sold for $14,500, and the jury awarded for it $19,500; lot no. 827 was sold for $15,000, and the jury awarded for it $19,500; lot no. 31 was sold for $5,100, and the jury awarded for it $13,000; lot no. 832 was sold for $3,500, and the jury awarded for it $12,500.

This statement shows that in the case of property which had sold for $163,850, a jury of Washington citizens, who passed on the matter, required the Government to pay $302,750 in order to secure the property for the Supreme Court Building.

SUGGESTION FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CAPITOL

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that from the one somewhere else who is always insisting on the United States making a large Federal contribution to the civic expenses of Washington, the newspapers carried a suggestion in the early part of 1934 that one way the Commissioners could lower the amount Washington people would have to pay would be to lower the assessed valuation of the property. The Commissioners took the cue immediately. Notwithstanding that it was already assessed at about one-half of its real value, the Commissioners thereafter in 2 years arbitrarily lowered the assessed value of real property $130,000,000. This is admitted by the testimony of the president of the Board of Commissioners, and I quote his testimony given before us in March 1934 from the printed hearings:

Commissioner HAZEN. The Commissioners would like to call attention to the fact that in the fiscal year 1934 the tax rate of $1.70, which had been in effect during the fiscal years between 1928 and 1933, inclusive, has been reduced to $1.50. This reduction represents a saving to taxpayers in the fiscal year 1934 of $2,445,000.

Moreover, in the fiscal year 1934 the assessed valuation of real estate has been reduced by $80,000,000—a saving to property owners of $1,200,000. The District budget for the fiscal year 1935 is based upon continuing the $1.50 tax rate in that fiscal year.

It is also contemplated that a further reduction in the assessed valuation of real estate of approximately $50,000,000 will be made in 1935.

The Commissioners also invite attention to the recommendation under the chapter for the water service for a 25-percent reduction in water rates for 1935, and an increase in the metered allowance now 7,500 cubic feet to 10,000 cubic feet. This means a saving to water users of about $600,000. In the fiscal year 1934 Congress allowed a discount of 10 percent of the amount of any bill for water charges paid within 15 days after the date of the rendition thereof. It is estimated that this will mean a saving of about $100,000 to water users.

Mr. BLANTON. By a reduction in the assessed valuation of real estate to the extent of $80,000,000, you meant that you distributed that over the general assessments?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you further state:

"It is also contemplated that a further reduction in the assessed value of real estate of approximately $50,000,000 will be made in 1935."

Did you make that further reduction?

Commissioner HAZEN. There was further reduction.

Mr. BLANTON. And you did make another reduction, approximately $50,000,000, in assessed values, as noted by the assessor, Mr. Richards, of 10 percent in the assessed valuations?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And that was general all over the District?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. So that property owners, generally, got the benefit of that additional $50,000,000 reduction?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is quite right.

Mr. BLANTON. Then this year and last year you have given the property owners in the District a reduction in the assessed values of real estate of $130,000,000, or 15 percent, have you not?

Commissioner HAZEN. Approximately; yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you also say:

"The Commissioners also invite attention to the recommendation under the chapter for the water service for a 25-percent reduction in water rates for 1935 and an increase in the metered allowance, now 7,500 cubic feet, to 10,000 cubic feet. This means a saving to water users of about $600,000."

That was provided?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. So that the property owners of the District got a saving of $600,000 through a decrease in water charges?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. In addition to that $600,000 decrease in water charges, they also got the benefit of the increased metered allowance of 2,500 cubic feet of water?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Without extra charge?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. So that they got a double benefit in the matter of the water charges?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Then you further say:

"In the fiscal year 1934 Congress allowed a discount of 10 percent of the amount of any bill for water charges paid within 15 days after the date of the rendition thereof. It is estimated that this will mean a saving of about $100,000 to water users."

That was a saving of $100,000 additional approximately?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. To water users here in Washington?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a fact, Mr. Commissioner, that the tax rate this year, the fiscal year 1935, is only $1.50 per 100 on real estate and only $1.50 per 100 on personal property, is it not?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no contemplation in the minds of the Commissioners to increase that tax for next year, 1936? You do not contemplate increasing it?

Commissioner HAZEN. We do not contemplate increasing it.

Mr. BLANTON. With that $1.50 tax rate, you stated in your preliminary general statement, that you carried over from the last fiscal year to the present fiscal year a surplus of $4,600,000?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And you say that you will inherit next July 1 a surplus of—

Commissioner HAZEN. $2,450,000.

Mr. BLANTON. You have also, for this coming fiscal year, a trust fund, as you said in your general statement, of $1,430,000.

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a fund to which you have access, which you get out of the Treasury, regardless of what Congress does in this bill, is it not?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. You have no income tax for the District of Columbia?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is true.

Mr. BLANTON. . . . The tax on intangibles in the District is now what, Mr. Donovan?

Mr. DONOVAN. $5 per thousand.

Mr. BLANTON. That is one-half of 1 percent, is it not?

Mr. DONOVAN. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia there is a gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia there is a license-tag tax that people pay in order to get their license plates each year. That amounts to only $1 per car.

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. That would be $1 per car for an $8,000 Rolls-Royce limousine as well as a dollar per car for a Ford or a Chevrolet?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia the average water tax per family is now approximately what?

Mr. DONOVAN. It is about $8.75.

Mr. BLANTON. Was not that the tax before Congress reduced it?

Mr. DONOVAN. It was that before Congress reduced it.

Mr. BLANTON. But Congress reduced it?

Mr. DONOVAN. You mean the 25-percent reduction?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia a man who built a house 25 years ago, and then paid for having his house connected with the sewer system of the District, has not in the last 25 years had to pay a single additional monthly service charge for sewers, has he?

Commissioner HAZEN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. And he will not have to pay any in the future, will he?

Commissioner HAZEN. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Commissioner, you have been a public servant for a long time, and you are intimately acquainted with every detail of Washington business and history. On the whole, can you cite the people of any city of the United States who have better privileges, who are better cared for, than those in the city of Washington?

Commissioner HAZEN. I think that it is the greatest city in the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. And Washington people are better cared for, are least taxed, and have greater privileges than any other people in the United States?

Commissioner HAZEN. I believe they do.

NOT INTERESTED ABOUT RAISING ANY ADDITIONAL REVENUE

If you colleagues will look on page 9 et sequentia of our printed hearings for the 1937 appropriation bill, you will see why the Commissioners are not interested in the Mapes bills, to increase the 2-cent gasoline tax, to increase the $1 license tags tax, to pass an income tax, and other taxes that people in other cities pay, and from such hearings, I quote the following:

Mr. BLANTON. You are acquainted with the four Mapes bills?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir; somewhat.

Mr. BLANTON. One of those bills has for its purpose to increase the gasoline tax from 2 to 4 cents, to make it comparable with the gasoline tax in other cities.

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

The answer is that we have a surplus, and we did not feel we could justifiably increase taxes as long as we had a surplus.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is because you have a large surplus—$3,059,748.70—that you are against that increase-of-gasoline-tax bill?

Commissioner HAZEN. We have to consider the surplus.

Mr. BLANTON. What surplus do you expect to have in the general fund on July 1?

Commissioner HAZEN. $1,992,748.70.

Mr. DONOVAN. That is only in the general fund.

Mr. BLANTON. That is in the general fund. Now, what about the water fund?

Commissioner HAZEN. In the water fund we will have $504,000.

Mr. BLANTON. And in your gasoline-tax fund?

Commissioner HAZEN. $563,000.

Mr. BLANTON. So that aggregates a surplus of $3,059,748.70 on July 1.

GASOLINE TAX IN VARIOUS STATES

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Commissioner, I call attention to the gasoline tax that is now effective in the cities of various States:

Alabama, 6 cents; Arizona, 5 cents; Arkansas, 6 cents; Colorado, 4 cents; Florida, 7 cents; Georgia, 6 cents; Idaho, 5 cents; Indiana, 4 cents; Kentucky, 5 cents; Louisiana, 5 cents; Maine, 4 cents; Maryland, 4 cents; Nebraska, 4 cents; Nevada, 4 cents; New Hampshire, 4 cents; New Mexico, 5 cents; North Carolina, 6 cents; Ohio, 4 cents; Oklahoma, 4 cents; Oregon, 4 cents; Pennsylvania, 3 cents; South Carolina, 6 cents; Tennessee, 7 cents; Texas, 4 cents; Utah, 4 cents; Vermont, 4 cents; Virginia, 5 cents; Washington (State), 5 cents; West Virginia, 4 cents; Wisconsin, 4 cents; and Wyoming, 4 cents.

But in the District of Columbia the tax is 2 cents per gallon.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for just a slight observation?

Mr. BLANTON. Please let me give these facts first, without interruption. I cannot yield at this time.

Mr. Chairman, for fear I shall not have the time to conclude, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert some data and excerpts that I want to use.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Here are some figures that the President of the United States had gathered last year, which were gathered under his direction, and you can take them as authentic.

TAX RATE IN DISTRICT COMPARED WITH CITIES OF SIMILAR SIZE

This report of the President's committee which he appointed to investigate the tax rate in the District of Columbia as compared with that in other comparable cities, which is entitled "Comparative Tax Burdens in the District of Columbia and Other Cities", and which was filed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury on April 8, 1935, states that their analysis is based upon data available January 12, 1935, and from which I quote:

"The following cities of between 300,000 to 825,000 population show Washington to pay the lowest tax rate on $1,000, to wit:

	Tax rate on $1,000
Jersey City, N. J.	$40.69
Boston, Mass.	37.10
Minneapolis, Minn.	30.10
Newark, N. J.	29.20
Seattle, Wash.	28.13
New Orleans, La.	27.58
Baltimore, Md.	26.70
Portland, Oreg.	26.50
Milwaukee, Wis.	26.26
Buffalo, N. Y.	25.56
Kansas City, Mo.	25.23
Louisville, Ky.	24.48
San Francisco, Calif.	20.09
Cincinnati, Ohio.	18.22
Washington, D. C.	15.00

"Table 1, appended, clearly demonstrates that the District of Columbia general property-tax rate of $15 per $1,000 is the lowest obtaining in any city of 300,000 or more population, and that a number of cities have adjusted tax rates of more than twice that obtaining in the District."

In our hearings, Mr. Chairman, it was disclosed that the city officials are wholly inactive and unconcerned about the back real-estate taxes that remain unpaid for each year back to 1877. They were not enough concerned to insist on a law being passed to allow the District of Columbia to take good title under proper sale for delinquent taxes. I had to go to the District Legislative Committee and urge the chairman to report such a bill, and we got her to have the bill reported and passed it here in the House a few days ago. I quote the following from the printed hearings:

UNCOLLECTED REAL-ESTATE TAXES, 1877-1935

Now, Mr. Towers, you are familiar, are you, with the statement that has been furnished by Mr. Richards here, and which came through you, I understand?

Mr. TOWERS. Yes; I got that up for him.

Mr. BLANTON. It shows an uncollected balance of real-estate taxes from 1877 to 1935 of $1,599,568.47.

Mr. TOWERS. Yes, sir.

UNCOLLECTED TAXES FROM 1877 TO 1936

The following is an official statement of a list of uncollected balances of real-estate taxes by years from 1877 to January 1, 1936, furnished by Tax Assessor Richards under the official order of Commissioner Hazen:

Mr. BLANTON. Colonel Sultan, this list of unpaid taxes on real estate, dating back as far as 1877, shows uncollected, for 1877, real-estate taxes amounting to $8,706.55, and all the way up, every year, there is an uncollected tax balance.

Are there any steps being taken to collect those taxes?

Colonel SULTAN. Oh, yes, sir. Just why there should be an uncollected balance going back as far as that, frankly, I cannot say.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, there remains now, previous to the present tax year, from 1877 to 1935, uncollected real-estate taxes of $1,599,568.47.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, remember, Commissioner Hazen admitted that last year and the year before they had given property owners a reduction of $130,000,000 below the then already low assessed valuation.

Mr. NICHOLS. They do that against the law.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; they arbitrarily reduced it, in violation of the law.

Yet with these conditions prevailing, where the people of Washington, D. C., are the best treated, have the greatest advantages, and are the least taxed, the Washington newspapers are asserting that certain statesmen elsewhere than in this House are assuring these newspapers that they will restore this $3,000,000 the House has cut off of the Federal contribution, and will restore the unconscionable high salaries that some officials here in Washington have been receiving.

Let them do it! But they are not going to do it without their people back home finding it out. And in my judgment their people back home are going to hold them responsible for such action. Their people back home are getting tired of having to pay their own high taxes in the States and then having to help the overpampered people of Washington pay their local civic expenses here. The time has come when this House of Representatives must stop being the goat. It must stop having to carry the load. It must place the responsibility where it rightfully belongs. It must let the taxpayers of the United States know exactly who it is that is annually placing this burden upon them. And I am going to take upon my shoulders the duty of letting the people of the United States know about it. The people of Washington, D. C., receive the most for their money and pay less taxes than the people in any other city in the whole wide world. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. EKWALL].

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may read my manuscript and revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. EKWALL. Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the various differences of opinion of our Members from time to time, I believe that the Members of the House of Representatives are actuated by a desire to enact such laws as will be beneficial to the whole country. We have endeavored for the past few years to alleviate the suffering and privation incident to the business depression, and to devise ways and means to bring the United States out of the economic slough of despond. Our big problem is, of course, to find a method of supplying work for the ten or twelve million of our unemployed men and women. If we could do this, the depression would be over, and prosperity would be a splendid reality. It is a fact, which every economist of any standing will vouch for, that employment at a fair wage of all who are now unemployed would bring such a revival of business that the wheels of industry would hum in order to supply the demand for goods of every nature. Millions upon millions of dollars would be put in circulation, and business stagnation would be a thing of the past.

AMERICA ALWAYS LAND OF OPPORTUNITY

One thing, above every other, which has made America great, and which has made her the envy of the other nations, has been the golden opportunities which have always been open to everyone here. From the time of the War of the Revolution there have been opportunities for the poor boy or girl to start in business, and, by thrift and application, to make a success of life. A healthy body, a clear brain, and the will to win have been the open sesame to success and fortune. Innumerable men and women throughout the life of our Republic have made a very meager and inauspicious start in business, and, by dint of hard work and application and honest endeavor, have become business leaders in their respective communities. We are proud of such Americans, and the records of their achievements has filled some of the brightest pages in our business history. They have been the inspiration to countless others who have profited by their example. These people have not endeavored to find some short cut to fame and fortune, nor have they tried to invent some lotion to take the place of sweat.

Our country's wealth and prosperity have been largely built up in this manner. Real-estate values have been enhanced manifold by reason of the fact that many small, honestly conducted lines of business have brought demands for stores and good locations. This has, in turn, been most beneficial to every section of our country. It has made it possible for the owners of real estate to receive fair returns on their real-property investments, thus enabling such owners to pay their taxes to the political subdivisions. A great number of varied lines of business in the various communities must necessarily employ many men and women, and thus create a corresponding local circulation of buying power. When the Republic was much younger, the manufacturers of articles of various types sold their goods on merit and left to the individual merchants the problem of making a success or failure of merchandising. Strict application to business, scrupulous honesty, the ability to devise economical methods of handling, proper and humane treatment of employees, and the various other human attributes possessed by some and lacking in others since the beginning of time constituted the broad road between success and failure.

MONOPOLIES ARE CREATED

As time went on, however, shrewd men and women began to create methods of combining various lines of business, and huge monopolies came into being. The obvious reason for the creation of such monopolies was to corner as much business as possible and to force competition to the wall. At first those who devised such combinations were hailed as clever financiers. Our country was still comparatively young, and there was work for all who desired it. As the full realization of the effects of these huge monopolies dawned upon the consciousness of our people, and it was observed that they exercised very powerful influence upon the manufacturers of goods by reason of their large buying power, to the detriment of smaller merchants, serious thought was given to the problem of holding them within reasonable limits. As Frankenstein fashioned a man monster which finally slew his master, so did the monster of monopoly threaten to destroy business itself.

Many years ago, Congress, realizing the seriousness of the situation, undertook to legislate on this subject effectively. Various antitrust laws were enacted, and, in a measure, reached the seat of the abuses. Theodore Roosevelt, at the height of his public career, declared monopoly the enemy, not only of the average citizen, but of free institutions. Woodrow Wilson declared private monopoly intolerable, and that those who would preserve democracy must find the way to be rid of it. Congress passed the Sherman Act, commonly known as the antitrust law, to prevent combinations or trusts in restraint of trade. The Clayton Act was passed to prevent price discrimination. The Federal Trade Commission Act was passed to prevent unfair methods of competition, but neither of these laws has been wholly effective.

ROBINSON-PATMAN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY BILL

There is now before Congress a bill known as the Robinson-Patman bill, being S. 3154 and H. R. 8442, which has for its purpose the amendment of section 2 of the Clayton Act. The bill is designed to accomplish what so far the Clayton Act has done in an impotent manner, namely, to protect the independent merchant, the public which he serves, and the manufacturer from whom he buys, from exploitation by his monopolistic competitor.

Section 2 of the Clayton Act as it now stands raises a feeble gesture against price discrimination. That gesture is futile because it still permits quantity discounts without suggesting any measure or standard to limit their abuse; because, further, it permits price discriminations to meet local competition. For enforcement the act relies upon the cumbersome procedure of the Federal Trade Commission, upon civil suits for injunction to be brought by overloaded United States attorneys, and upon private suits for injunction and for the recovery of triple damages. The latter have seldom proved effective, first, because of the weakness of the prohibition in the act itself; second, because of the difficulty of obtaining evidence; and third, because of the difficulty of proving specific damages to competitors, where damages are so obvious in fact but so indeterminable in amount.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EKWALL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. I appreciate the contribution the gentleman is making toward the success of the passage of the bill he mentions. In addition to what the gentleman has already said is the purpose of the act, it is to make the Clayton Act more effective by taking some of the weasel words out.

Mr. EKWALL. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. And putting some teeth back where they have been extracted by the Supreme Court.

Mr. EKWALL. The gentleman's remarks are correct.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT

These difficulties, the proposed amendment meets in this way:

Section (a) prohibits generally price discrimination between purchasers of goods of like grade and quality, but permits differentials between wholesalers, retailers, consumers, and those who purchase for further manufacture. It also permits differentials representing differences in cost resulting from the differing methods or quantities involved in the sales and deliveries to the particular purchasers involved in the discrimination. It thus throws upon the manufacturer or chain, in case of controversy, the burden of showing that a particular discrimination falls within one of these exceptions, a requirement that is obviously fair, since he knows best what his costs are, and who his customers are, and has at his peculiar command the cost and other record data by which to justify such discriminations if such justification exists.

WHEN BROKERAGE AND COMMISSION ALLOWED

Section (b) prohibits the payment of brokerage or commission in any sales transaction where the broker is acting in fact or under the control not of the one who would pay him the commission but of the other party to the transaction. It is directed against the corruption of the true brokerage function as a real and valuable servant of commerce into a subterfuge for those unfair and coercive price discriminations which constitute such a real menace to commerce. It does not prevent or hamper anyone in rendering real brokerage services, but does not require anyone to pay brokerage; it does not forbid anyone to invest or continue his investment in a brokerage business; but it does forbid the abuse of this or other methods of control whereby the broker is converted into a servant of one part to the transaction at the cost of the other.

PSEUDO-ADVERTISING ALLOWANCES

Section (c) is aimed at the suppression of pseudo-advertising allowances, a favorite disguise for price discriminations which will not bear publicly being named as such. Again, it in no way impairs or obstructs legitimate advertising or the selection and use of such means as are economical and effective for that purpose. Where it is advantageous in these respects to do so it permits the manufacturer, for example, to employ or engage the services of his customers in their respective local communities in lieu of sending out a force of his salaried representatives to handle local advertising. It only imposes upon him two requirements, which are sufficient to remove the competitive wolf from this sheep's clothing. It requires the manufacturer either to make that allowance available on proportionally equal terms to all of his customers within the same competitive sphere or to keep the services concerned divorced from any reference to the business of the particular customer whom the manufacturer selects for the purpose.

PRESUMPTION OF DAMAGES

Section (d) is designed to aid enforcement by providing a presumptive measure of damages, thus avoiding the difficulty of proving specific damages that has afflicted this remedy under the Clayton Act heretofore. It makes the amount of the unlawful discrimination itself the measure of such damages as applied either to the volume of sales on which it is given or to the volume of the competitor's business in the same product, which is the business naturally injured thereby. It is only a presumptive rule, however, and when circumstances are such that greater damages can actually be proven the law would still permit their recovery.

This bill is designed to protect and to secure in the field of merchandising fair and decent competition. It establishes again the birthright of every free American to equal opportunity—equal opportunity to devote his talents and resources to the service of the public, where the homely attributes of honesty and fair dealing, of personality and good name, upon which his forebears build so well, will once again come into their own; equal opportunity to secure for himself that reasonable return which is commensurate with the service, devotion, and quality value of his contribution to the public.

THIS BILL FOUNDED ON GOLDEN RULE

This bill imposes no obstacles to legitimate and productive human endeavor in any path, nor to the utilization of such economical methods or processes as may be devised by the wit of man, nor to the appropriate division of the fruits of those economies between those who make them possible and those whom they serve. It leaves every person free to make what price or terms he will, to use what services or facilities he has available; but where he might otherwise do so in prejudice to the equal opportunity of his fellows, it requires him to treat all alike. It is founded on principles of human conduct as simple as the Golden Rule—it is fair and right and wholesome—it will wrong no one, and, as surely as day follows the night, it will end the retreat in the face of the business depression. The day this law goes into effect will be recorded as the low-water mark in unemployment, and from that date we will begin in earnest the trek to the mountain top where the sunshine of happiness and opportunity and prosperity will once again shine with full force upon us.

In establishing our great Republic our forefathers set forth in the Declaration of Independence a principle that—

All men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights, among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

This has been the keystone of our political structure, without which there would have been no republic. In order to keep our people contented and happy and to preserve for posterity the blessings which we enjoy in this country, we must not only recognize that all men are created equal; we must also, by just and equitable laws, insure to all a square deal, an equal opportunity to live and prosper; we must eliminate favoritism and special privilege wherever possible and thus perpetuate equality and fair dealing. In this manner, and this manner only, will democratic government survive. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I am most reluctant to trespass upon the time of the House at this late hour in the afternoon, but I shall avail myself of one of the prerogatives of a Member by inserting in the RECORD some tables with respect to reciprocal-trade treaties as they affect the State of Illinois, and in connection therewith I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include, in the language of my good friend from Texas, certain excerpts and data.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks and to include therein certain excerpts and data. Is there objection?

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. Do they relate to this banking bill now pending?

Mr. DIRKSEN. No; they relate to reciprocal-trade treaties in their effect upon the State of Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a long time ago a Greek or Roman philosopher said: "Remember, oh stranger, arithmetic is the first of sciences and the mother of invention." That is a pretty good rule to bear in mind, because I suppose it was the inspiration of this old adage that gets around so much about liars being able to figure but figures not lying. One can use figures and distort them to his own use and probably exemplify what Shakespeare once said, that the Devil can cite Scripture for his purpose, but in the final analysis one proves exactly nothing.

When I journey from Washington to Illinois and go through Ohio I see a huge signboard out there along Route 40 which says, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth will set ye free." Occasionally we nail truth down, but do not do a very good job, and it comes up again, and when we discuss this matter of reciprocal-trade treaties and bandy figures about, if they are distorted and if they are not founded in fact, they prove just exactly nothing. So the opponents and proponents of the reciprocal-trade treaties are going to prove their case only in proportion as they adhere strictly to the facts and reliable figures. I have undertaken to do that in connection with some tables that I have assembled, dealing with the effect of reciprocal-trade treaties upon the State of Illinois. This Chamber has resounded with a lot of oratory and rhetoric with respect to reciprocal-trade treaties ever since 1933.

Much of the argument that has been advanced has been ineffective because it has been too local, and some of the argument that has been advanced is ineffective because it is too abstract. I thought it might be a rather interesting thing if one took the whole schedule of reciprocal-trade treaties and related them to every item with which imported goods might be in competition with the items manufactured in a State like Illinois or that are produced and grown on the farms in Illinois. First of all, I want the RECORD to show the number of treaties in effect, and with what countries. Up to and including the 1st of March 1936, 10 trade agreements had been completed, the first one with Cuba on the 3d of September 1934; with Belgium on May 1, 1935; with Haiti on June 3, 1935; with Sweden, August 5, 1935; with Brazil, January 1, 1936; with Canada, January 1, 1936; with the Netherlands, February 1, 1936; with Switzerland, February 15; and with Honduras, March 2. An agreement has been signed with our little sister republic of South America, Colombia, on the 3d of September 1935, but it does not become effective until 30 days after the signature of the President of the Republic of Colombia, attached, and that signature has not yet been attached. Incidentally, agreements are pending at the present time with Costa Rica, El Salvador, Finland, France, Guatemala, Italy, Nicaragua, and Spain. With exception of the trade treaty that is in effect with Cuba, concessions that are made under this reciprocal-trade program obtain alike for virtually all of the nations with which we have any kind of a trade status, with the exception of Germany.

So that all the concessions that the United States has made thus far under these treaties to the respective countries named in the 10 treaties that have been signed will run alike to all countries everywhere in the world, with the exception of Germany. Now, how do these agreements affect Illinois? That is the whole purpose of what I want to insert in the RECORD. I am not trying to be persuasive this afternoon, because, after all, the figures are far more persuasive than any rhetoric that I may be able to advance.

The first table I am going to insert deals with Illinois industries as reported by the census of manufactures. It shows all manufacturing industries in Illinois, the number of wage earners in 1933, and the value of the products produced. In addition thereto it will show a total of 38 select industries, with the number of wage earners employed and the value of the product.

The second table will deal with Illinois crops, livestock, and livestock products; showing, first of all, the total income to the farmers in 1933 and 1934 for a total of 78 crops. Then the total of seven major crops.

The next table will show livestock and livestock products, with special emphasis upon six different items that constitute the majority portion of the income of Illinois farmers.

The next table will deal with names of imported commodities and the countries from which they are imported. It is all set up so that at a glance you can tell exactly from what countries these items are imported that are in competition with the products grown or produced in Illinois.

The next table will deal with a select group of 45 products, showing the quantity and value of the imports for 1933, 1934, and 1935. It occurs to me that if these tables are examined with any degree of application by the Members of Congress they are in themselves going to present a rather persuasive picture. But they do not go far enough unless we also show the wage scales that obtain in the different countries where the products are manufactured, that are in competition with the fabricated products from my own State. To make it more persuasive, I have included tables of wages paid in selected German industries, Swiss industries, Swedish industries, wages paid in Canada, wages paid to agricultural workers in Poland, wages paid in selected French industries, wages paid in the United Kingdom, various daily wages paid in Tokyo. These figures have been converted so as to take account of the difference in exchange on the basis of the last figure available, so that no proponent of trade agreements can say that we have left out something by which they can establish some point of dissimilarity when they undertake to make an argument.

About the only thing I want to emphasize in connection with these tables is that the meat-packing industry is not only one of the principal industries in Illinois, but that hogs and cattle make up more than half the income of Illinois farmers. However, despite that fact, the importation of meat products jumped from 62,476,133 pounds in 1933 to 115,059,114 pounds in 1935. That is a jump of over 100 percent.

We have three watch and clock factories in Illinois, yet the value of imported watch and clock movements jumped from $1,656,000 in 1933 to $4,359,247 in 1935.

Corn is the principal cereal grain grown in Illinois. Yet the imports of corn jumped from a mere 160,228 bushels in 1933 to 43,242,296 bushels in 1935. That is a rather healthy increase.

Wheat ranks second as a major cereal grain grown in our State, yet the imports of wheat jumped from 31,383 bushels in 1933 to 27,438,870 bushels in 1935.

I might say in connection with corn that a friend of mine by the name of Ralph T. Ainsworth, of Mason City, Ill., who operates the Ainsworth Financial Service and who has spent a lifetime gathering farm statistics right in the Corn Belt, which he sends to farmers, farm-market operators, and others, had this to say with respect to the importations of Argentine corn. I quote him:

Argentine corn is sifting its way farther into the interior as each week goes by. The Southern Hemisphere flint corn may now be had as far north as Memphis, as far east as Buffalo, and in all that territory west of the Rocky Mountains—at prices far below the price of domestic corn.

And then get this significant fact—

If we can ship corn by the boatload from the Argentine and unload it at Baltimore or Galveston and then send it by rail out into the Corn Belt where we grow millions and millions of bushels of corn, and the price is below the domestic market for corn, you can see what will happen. Mr. Wallace can pass that off by saying that the total importation of corn for 1935 does not exceed the corn grown in a single Iowa county, but that is quite beside the point, for if that flinty Argentine corn comes into the corn market it has a most disastrous effect upon the price, and you will see a recession. I am not a market prophet, but I venture to say that within the next 60 days you are likely to see a 10-cent drop in the price of corn largely because of this low-priced Argentine corn. If the starch factories, farmers, feeders, and others can buy this corn cheaper than they can buy domestic corn, you know what will happen to the domestic price.

Oats is the third largest cereal crop in Illinois. The importation of oats jumped from 132,337 bushels in 1933 to over 10,106,903 bushels in 1935.

It is one of the most amazing things in the history of our internal economy that we have to import so much corn, wheat, and oats when we pay good cash out of Uncle Sam's Treasury to take the most fertile acres in the United States of America out of cultivation in the Prairie State and the Illinois Valley.

Nearly one-third of the cash income of our farmers comes from milk, butter, and dairy products, yet importations of butter jumped from 1,021,806 pounds in 1933 to 22,674,643 pounds in 1935.

I am going to wind up my remarks by this very abrupt observation: That I shall be very much interested in the reactions of laboring men and farmers in Illinois when these authentic, authoritative figures come to their attention. It requires no argument and no persuasion on my part. The figures will speak for themselves.

Now, how do these agreements affect Illinois? The Census of Manufactures, published by the Department of Commerce, shows that in 1933 the manufacturing industries in Illinois, which employed more than 2,500 wage earners, had a total pay roll of 420,334 persons, and that the value of the product of such industries was $2,502,175,233. Sixty-nine percent of these wage earners were employed in the 38 industries listed in the table which I am inserting in the RECORD, and the value of the products of these 38 industries was $1,548,343,441. A glance at this table will indicate what these industries are, what they produce, the number of wage earners employed, and the total value of their products for 1933:

Now consider the agricultural picture in Illinois. The following table is a tabulation of the principal crops and animal products for 1933 and 1934. The values stated represent cash income and do not include the value of goods consumed on the producing farm nor the amount of benefits received from the A. A. A. The crops listed below constitute 82 percent of the cash income for all Illinois crops for 1933, while livestock products listed represent 99 percent of the cash income for livestock and livestock products for 1933. The figures are taken from the United States Department of Agriculture's Income from Farm Production in the United States, 1934:

Illinois crops and livestock and livestock products

A mere glance at the following tables will show the names of 45 different imported manufactured and agricultural commodities, together with the names of the principal countries from which they are imported. Similar or identical items are produced in the State of Illinois. Hence importations of these commodities make them directly competitive with the products produced in my own State. These importations therefore have a direct bearing upon Illinois industries and upon Illinois labor:

Name of imported commodity	Countries from which imported
1. Meat products.....	Argentina, Uruguay, New Zealand, Australia.
2. Castings and forgings (not elsewhere specified).....	United Kingdom, Germany.
3. Steel ingots, blooms, slabs, etc.....	Belgium, Sweden.
4. Sheets and plates of iron or steel.....	Belgium, Germany, United Kingdom, Sweden.

Now glance briefly at the following list of agricultural products which are imported, together with the name of the country from whence imported, and you get a conclusive idea of the imports which are in direct competition with the farmers of Illinois. Commodities, identical or similar to the commodities listed as imported, are produced on Illinois farms, as indicated by second table in this series:

Name of imported commodity	Countries from whence imported
28. Corn.....	Argentina, Canada, Mexico.
29. Wheat (for consumption).....	Canada.
30. Oats.....	Argentina, Canada.
31. Hay.....	Canada.
32. Barley, hulled or unhulled.....	Do.
33. Rye.....	Poland, Argentina, Latvia.
34. Hogs (live).....	Canada.
35. Fresh pork.....	Do.
36. Pork, hams, shoulders, and bacon.....	Poland, Canada, Germany.
37. Milk and cream.....	Canada.
38. Butter.....	New Zealand, Netherlands, Denmark.
39. Cheese.....	Italy, Switzerland.
40. Cattle (live).....	Mexico.
41. Fresh beef.....	Canada.
42. Canned meats.....	Uruguay, Argentina.
43. Eggs: Whole dried; yolks, dried; albumen, dried.....	China.
44. All poultry, dead or alive.....	Canada, Argentina.
45. Sheep and goats (live).....	Mexico, Canada.

Now, let your eye run up and down the following table and you will note this same list of 45 groups of commodities which are being imported, every one of which is in direct competition with commodities that are manufactured or produced in the factories or on the farms of Illinois. This table will indicate, without much waste of time, what quantities and the value of such commodities that were imported for the 3 years 1933, 1934, and 1935. By referring to the preceding table you can tell at a glance from what countries these items are imported.

This factual picture, as far as I have gone, is rather persuasive in itself; but to make it conclusive, it would be both effective and informative to show what the daily wage scales are in some of the countries from which we receive these imported products. These figures have been assembled from the different numbers of the Monthly Labor Review, published by the United States Department of Labor, and the conversions which are shown from foreign into United States currencies are based on the average exchange rates for 1935. I am sure that when the Illinois wage earners become conscious of the kind of competition which they have from imported products of all kinds, produced at the following wage scales, they will appreciate how impossible it is for Illinois industry to compete with this sort of thing and quickly take up the cudgels in defense of their own jobs and their own wage levels. Similarly will the farmers rise to their own defense when they become conscious of the kind of competition which they are facing. The following wage tables will, therefore, be highly enlightening:

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the 21 Members who have remained to hear me deliver this speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there has been some criticism against the Columbia Broadcasting System for permitting various speakers representing various sects to use its facilities, but it can be said of the Columbia System that it does not sell out its time before a political convention to one party alone. If it sells $100 worth of time to one side of a question, it sells an equal amount of time to the other side, and I am glad to know that they have never taken any stand other than a stand against the control of the air by money. I had the experience in my own State of seeing the air controlled by the opposition entirely. They bought up the time for 3 weeks in advance, but I think it worked to my advantage, because I got larger crowds when I told them I had been shut off the air. I want to say for the Columbia Broadcasting System that they have been fair, that they treat everybody alike, and do not want the air controlled by cash.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. In regard to whether broadcasting stations are used and how they are using their time, let me ask the gentleman if he does not believe that all speeches broadcast should be made a matter of record subject to public inspection? As it is now it is not possible for anyone to get those speeches, for a record of them is not required by law. Any speech may be read before a microphone and it is impossible for the public to get a copy of it or to tell what kind of a speech it was. I think we should require by law that a record be kept of speeches made over the radio.

Mr. BURDICK. I think the gentleman is correct.

There are Members of this House and many other leaders of the Nation who apparently have the "jitters" when the word "communism" is mentioned. Some Members have already suggested that we must at all costs stamp out this vicious system by preventing anyone, old or young, from having any information about it. I think I am perfectly safe in asserting that there are not 10 Members of this House who know what the word "communism" means.

As we hear the matter discussed around this Capitol, we find that every class of our citizens who demand free speech and the right to assemble and petition and criticize the Government are sooner or later placed in a class with Communists.

If people demand radical changes in the Government, they are at once classed by those who insist upon no change as Communists. This appellation placed against them by the reactionaries of both parties is supposed to squelch them in the court of public opinion. Any unrest is termed the beginning of communistic activities. Many good people would have us believe that every strike, every demonstration against a foreclosure of a home, is led by Communists.

The people of the United States can be driven to a mental state where they will demand some other form of government; they can be driven to rebel against this Government, and yet have no communistic intentions at all. We had a revolution once in this country. We rebelled against the established government, and I, for one, belong to the order known as the Sons of the American Revolution. We set up a form of government that suited us, but it was not communism. The Government set up was the United States of America, operating with many State and Territorial governments under one common Constitution for the General Government. There is no doubt but that the British Government dubbed us Communists. There is no doubt but that the Tories in this country thought likewise.

At the present moment there is much unrest in this country and there will be very much more. This unrest is not communism at all. It is the expression of a great mass of dissatisfied people, and, in my judgment, they have every reason to be dissatisfied. There is a cause for it. Remove that cause and there will be no unrest.

Every person who reads knows that we have enough, and more than enough, food in this country to feed everyone. Yes; we have too much, so much that we permit our Secretary of Agriculture to devise ways and means of destroying food products or in limiting the amount of food products than can be raised normally. Yet, in spite of that, there are millions in this country who today are not getting enough to eat. In the midst of plenty we have wholesale destitution. Maybe Members of Congress are smart enough to explain why this is so, but hungry people cannot explain it.

Our debts, public and private, in the United States today amount to almost twice as much as the value of all our property. If we pursue the policy of scarce money, which we are pursuing, every thinking person knows that this debt cannot be paid. The Supreme Court says we cannot cut the debts down without the consent of the creditors, because we cannot impair the obligations of a contract under the Constitution. We here in Congress refuse to change our monetary policy, so the whole Nation is up against an impossible barrier. One-third of our national income is lost in the payment of interest on a debt that is beyond our ability to pay. One-third of the Nation's buying power is thus destroyed.

Money is high-priced and hard to get; products of the farm are low-priced, labor is low-priced because of high-priced money. We have listened to scholastic advisors, who would die of starvation on a farm in 2 years, who would not be worth 25 cents a day as a laborer. They advise to leave our monetary policy alone with a high-priced dollar, and bring up the price of agricultural products by a process tax, 60 percent of which comes out of the farmers themselves. No matter what process tax they impose on the farmer and everyone else, they cannot bring agricultural products up to a parity with the present dollar.

No small farmer in America ever has or ever will be able to pay his farm mortgage under any A. A. A. bill proposed by these hairbrained theorists. Nothing short of a full value of the farmers' dollar will ever pay the mortgage, and we have now delayed so long in doing this that the accumulated interest has pushed the debt up beyond any ability to pay even under a system of the cost of production.

In other words, unless we have an increase in the volume of money in this country—so much so that money becomes cheap—these debts can never be paid. Mills will never start, men will not be put back to work because the buying power of the American people cannot be restored while they are struggling in a sea of debt and interest.

But those who hold the obligations will not give up. They demand—and they have a right to demand under the Constitution—that the terms of the contract be fulfilled. They are not inclined to wait until the debtors can scrape up enough high-priced money to pay the debt. So there we are—each day more helpless than the day before.

Do you wonder that people become uneasy? Do you wonder there are more strikes? Do you wonder that farmers gather in huge masses to protest foreclosure sales?

We can cure this unrest; we can stop these foreclosures, we can stop this interest burden; we can lower the price of a dollar and increase the value of agricultural products and the price of labor; we can bring back purchasing power; we can open the mills; we can put men to work; we can start up our dead business structure, if we will.

If we have the foresight and the statesmanship to do this, we will hear nothing more about communism.

I openly charge now that if there is any considerable movement toward communism in America that many of those who raise their voices the loudest against it are at the same time doing the most toward its growth. Reactionary business America has been for several years doing yeoman service in the cause of communism. In the meantime those of us who honestly wish to perpetuate this form of government and have the independence to point out clearly and logically those causes which have produced unrest and misery must understand that the forces of reaction will brand us as "reds," "undesirables," "demagogues," or any other name calculated to lessen our influence with the people of the United States.

America needs a new philosophy. We have grown selfish or have become slaves to greed and avarice. We have passed laws, and more laws, in a mad whirl of legislation, but it has been to no avail. Let us get back to first principles. America should reenact the Golden Rule, practice it, and live it in and out of business. We should follow the teachings of Christ and repudiate Mammon. We should melt down the golden calf and worship the God of Abraham. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, Tuesday, March 17, omnibus claims bills will be considered under the rule. There are many meritorious bills in the omnibus bills, but sandwiched in between these meritorious bills, in my opinion, are many bills that should be defeated.

I have spent a great deal of time going over the bills and reports, have contacted various Government officials, and it is my purpose to briefly refer to the measures that I propose to oppose. I realize it is absolutely impossible for a Member to give special consideration to these measures, and some Members depend largely in voting for or against a bill upon the action of the committee. I have done this myself on numerous occasions.

It so happens, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures, my attention was called to some of the bills that have been included in the omnibus bills.

There is no good reason in my opinion why a Member who has a bill included in an omnibus bill should support every bill in the measure, and I hope that even though a Member has a bill in which he or she is personally interested that will not in itself warrant a vote for the entire bill. Let us eliminate the bad and support the meritorious bills, and we will be protecting the Treasury and the taxpayer. I have tried to be fair in briefing the bills. The job is not a pleasant one, either from the standpoint of work or opposing a measure which one of my personal friends is interested in, but I feel it is a duty that must be performed. My comments on bills that are included in the omnibus bills to which I object follow:

H. R. 8236 (OMNIBUS)

TITLE I—H. R. 1366—STANLEY A. JERMAN, RECEIVER FOR A. J. PETERS CO., INC.

This bill would waive the statute of limitations to permit the Court of Claims to adjudicate a claim arising out of contracts for delivery of forage to the War Department during the years 1917 to 1919.

The fact that criminal proceedings were pending against officials of the company and others would not have prevented the seasonable filing of a civil suit. Furthermore, I understand all contracts of this company with the Government during the years involved have long since been audited by the Departments of War and Justice and the Comptroller General's office, and a net balance ($2,428.36) found due the company. This audit included the accounts here in question and the company was given credit for the value of all the forage delivered by it.

Does the Congress wish to have still another audit of these accounts by a fourth agency? Does the Congress wish such an audit to be made now, despite the laches of the claimant and at a time when the Government may not have available all of the pertinent documents and necessary witnesses? The amount involved cannot be determined, but is certainly above $31,000.

TITLE II—H. R. 4147—CLAIMS OF EMPLOYEES OF MINNEAPOLIS STEEL & MACHINERY CO. AND OTHER CONCERNS

This bill proposes to pay additional compensation to employees of certain private concerns for work performed in the manufacture of war materials furnished the War Department under contracts during the late World War.

The bill does not cover employees engaged upon work under Navy Department contracts. Does the Congress wish to discriminate between employees engaged upon work under contracts with different departments of the Government?

The War Department did not request and, in fact, was not consulted in connection with the award made by the National War Labor Board in these cases—as was done in the Bethlehem Steel Co. matter; act of March 4, 1925 (43 Stat. 1603), as amended—and what legal or other obligation rests upon the Congress now to authorize expenditures approximating $1,200,000 as gratuities to these employees of private concerns? Would not this be establishing a precedent which will induce the advancement of other similar claims?

Aside from other objections, section 5 of the bill proposes to establish a dangerous precedent whereby the paying agency would pass upon the propriety and legality of its own disbursements with no check or review by any other agency of the Government. Is not this contrary to the procedure established by the Budget and Accounting Act of June 10, 1921, requiring an independent audit of such expenditures? This bill will cost the Government $1,200,000.

TITLE III—ST. LUDGERS CHURCH

This bill passed the Congress and was vetoed by President Roosevelt. It provides for the payment of $3,000 to reimburse St. Ludgers Church, of Germantown, Mo., for occupation and damage caused by Government troops during the Civil War. I considered this bill a legitimate claim and voted for it, but in view of the fact that President Roosevelt once vetoed it why should it be sent back to him again.

TITLE IV—H. R. 2706—VELIE MOTORS CO.

This is another bill proposing to waive the statute of limitations to permit the Court of Claims to adjudicate claims arising out of contracts for supplies furnished the War Department during the late World War.

Not only this contract but all similar contracts with other concerns required the contractor to make deliveries of the supplies, suitably packed, boxed, and marked as instructed by the contracting officer of the Government. Crating these gun carts for export entailed no more expense than crating for domestic delivery. This company did no more in this respect than its contract called for. Does the fact that the claim, even though seasonably filed with the Department, was voluntarily abandoned at a time when the company might have filed suit in the court, justify waiving the statute of limitations at this late date when Government records and witnesses may no longer be available? Does the Congress wish to invite all other World War contractors to present similar requests by waiving the statute of limitations in this case? At least $37,816 is involved.

TITLE V—H. R. 3101—A. C. MESSLER CO.

This bill also proposes to waive the statute of limitations to permit the Court of Claims to adjudicate a claim arising out of a contract with the War Department during the late World War.

Notwithstanding the fact that this claim had been rejected by the War Department on several occasions as being entirely without merit, this company negligently failed to avail itself of its legal right to file suit seasonably in the Court of Claims seeking to recover the amount believed to be due. Does the Congress wish to encourage such laxity in the conduct of concerns doing business with the Government by extending the time within which to file suit to have another adjudication of a claim which a Government department has rejected time and time again, and the claimant has stood idly by without exercising its right of recourse to the courts within the time allowed by law? What extenuating circumstances are there which would entitle this claimant to such preferential treatment? Of what real value is a statute of limitations if so many exceptions are to be made in such cases?

This claim is for $16,378.68.

H. R. 8524 (OMNIBUS)

TITLE I—S. 941—WILLIAM J. COCKE

This bill proposes to pay a contractor for alleged losses arising out of World War contracts with the War Department for the delivery of garbage to the claimant. The Court of Claims has already denied the claim (62 Ct. Cls. 108, 114).

Does the Congress wish to overrule judicial findings merely because the claimant suffered a loss or did not make anticipated profits under a contract which the Government did not breach? Does Congress wish to establish the policy of insuring that every contractor will not sustain a loss in its dealings with the Government? Is it not the rule that in the making of contracts the risk of loss thereunder must be anticipated and guarded against by appropriate covenants or insurance? Who will say the War Department would make a contract agreeing to furnish sufficient garbage to feed a given number of pigs a contractor bought?

TITLE II—S. 929—SOUTHERN PRODUCTS CO.

Under this bill the claimant would be reimbursed for expenses incurred in removing and reconditioning and for damages to a quantity of cotton taken from a warehouse commandeered by the Government under power of eminent domain during the World War.

The claim has been denied by the Court of Claims (No. A-97, decided Mar. 8, 1926) under the well-established rule that the removal of personal property from real estate taken under power of eminent domain is one of the consequences incident to the exercise of such power and for which compensation is not allowable.

Does Congress wish to overrule the court's decision under this established principle of law and invite a flood of similar claims? The bill says pay $13,000 direct from Treasury.

TITLE III—H. R. 402—UNITED SHIPPING & TRADES CO.

The request to authorize suit against the Government by the United Shipping & Trading Co., against the Government, growing out of a collision at sea in 1918, involves $85,000. Each Secretary of War for the past 15 years has recommended against the passage of the bill.

TITLE IV—H. R. 2713—DAVID A. WRIGHT

This bill would direct the Court of Claims to readjudicate a claim, heretofore denied by both the court and the War Department, for costs incurred by the claimant in its endeavor to secure and preparation for a contract for furnishing supplies to the War Department in 1918.

The War Department officers named in the bill as having negotiated with the claimant had no authority to enter into such a contract and none was in fact entered into as required by law (sec. 3744, Rev. Stat.). Does the Congress wish to modify this law in a particular case and thereby invite other requests for similar modifications? Does Congress wish to modify the established rule that the Government is not bound by the unauthorized acts of its agents? Is it not a fact that every person or concern, hoping to receive large contracts with the Government, incurs such expenses in varying amounts, whether or not contracts are secured? No amount listed, but undoubtedly very large.

TITLE VI—H. R. 4408—SOUTHERN OVERALL CO.

This bill would confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate a claim upon the basis of the fair and reasonable value of articles delivered to the War Department under a contract of November 23, 1917. This claim is for $6,000.

Does Congress wish to waive the statute of limitations, when this claimant negligently failed to file suit seasonably in the Court of Claims, after the claim had been rejected by both the War Department and the Comptroller General? What extenuating circumstances would justify such an exception? The claimant has already been paid the fair and reasonable value of the articles delivered exactly as provided in its contract. Are the terms of the contract to be wholly ignored? As Mr. Justice Bradley said:

If the contract did not express the true intention of the parties, it was the claimant's folly to have signed it (Brawley v. United States, 96 U. S. 168).

TITLE VIII—S. 281—FRED G. CLARK CO.

This bill proposes to pay losses sustained due to claimant's compliance with an order of the War Industries Board issued in 1918 directing that stock of wool grease on hand be withheld from sale or delivery pending further instructions. The amount is $13,000.

Why should this claimant be granted such preferential treatment when other similar dealers are not likewise given relief? Did the Government take any property of claimant? Is there any evidence of a contract, express or implied, obligating the Government to pay for these supplies? Does Congress wish to pay a claim which both the War Department and the Court of Claims—71 Ct. Cls. 662—have denied as being without merit?

TITLE IX—H. R. 3075—MACK COPPER CO.

This bill proposes to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to reopen and readjudicate a claim arising out of the use and occupancy by the Government during the World War of a tract of land situated in California.

A similar bill, S. 1878, was vetoed by the President on September 7, 1935.

This land was purchased by the claimant for a little over $300,000. The claimant has already been paid, pursuant to judgment of the Court of Claims—rendered on June 6, 1927, No. D-134—the sum of $229,500, with interest on $150,000, for the taking, use, and damages to this property. Does the Congress wish to again have this claim examined and settled, with the possibility of ultimately paying an amount in excess of the cost of the property without acquiring the title to it? Is it not fundamental that damages for use and occupancy shall not exceed the value of the land? Is there to be no end to the number of times a claim is settled and adjusted?

TITLE X—H. R. 2213—CHARLES P. SHIPLEY SADDLERY & MERCANTILE CO.

This bill to pay direct from the Treasury is for the cancellation of a lease held by Charles P. Shipley Saddlery & Mercantile Co., at Camp Funston. The original claim was for $17,000 and the bill authorizes payment of $11,902. The report shows the War Department considered this claim allowed and paid $3,579. The War Department strongly opposes payment of the claim.

H. R. 8664 (OMNIBUS)

S. 267—MATTHEW E. HANNA (DECEASED), WILLARD L. BEAULAC, MARION P. HOOVER

This bill as reported carries separate items for the relief of three Foreign Service officers and employees for losses of personal property suffered by reason of an earthquake at Managua, Nicaragua, and fire immediately following the earthquake.

Earthquakes and fires resulting therefrom are not uncommon in Nicaragua, and no showing has been made that these officers and employees could not have insured their personal property against such hazards. Does the Congress wish to place the United States in the position of an insurer of the personal property of its employees? Or should they be held to provide such insurance themselves; and if they do not, should not the loss be theirs? Why should Foreign Service personnel be afforded relief of this nature and the same protection denied other officers and employees of the Government? There are no legal or equitable obligations on the United States to pay these claims, except the item of $153.03 in the claim of Mr. Hanna, representing the amount of public money and vouchers lost during the fire resulting from the earthquake, which would appear to be meritorious and proper for relief. Are the United States Treasury and taxpayers to be held responsible for an act of God?

H. R. 8750 (OMNIBUS)

TITLE I—H. R. 796—A. E. CLARK

This bill proposes to pay a per-diem allowance to an employee of the Census Bureau which was disallowed under the provisions of the Standardized Government Travel Regulations promulgated by the President pursuant to law. Under these regulations, there was no authority to pay Mr. Clark travel per diem while at his official station at Longview and no authority in any Government officer to bind the Government to an agreement to do so.

Does Congress wish to give one employee benefits denied thousands of others? When a person enters the Government service, does he or she not agree to be bound by a contract of employment which, if travel is to be performed, includes the provisions of the Standardized Government Travel Regulations? Does Congress wish to cause dissatisfaction and discontent among other employees by ignoring these regulations in a particular case of no more merit than thousands of others? This is a small claim, $566, but it would be setting a dangerous precedent to pass it.

TITLE IV—H. R. 2087—DELAWARE BAY SHIP BUILDING CO.

The bill to permit the Delaware Bay Ship Building Co. to enter suit against the Government is strongly opposed by the Treasury Department, which holds it was the duty of this company to properly protect its property. The damage was the result of a collision with a Coast Guard vessel. The Government department holds there is no reasonable ground for holding the Government responsible but, on the contrary, holds the corporation is responsible to the Government for the damage to the Government vessel.

TITLE VIII—H. R. 2674—G. ELIAS & BRO., INC.

This bill proposes to pay the claimant $24,139.28 for alleged losses in connection with changes in plans and specifications for airplane parts furnished under contracts with the War Department in 1926 and 1927.

The contracts provided for such changes in plans and specifications and required the contractor to "submit evidence to the contracting officer of the amount involved by such change or changes", and that for any change increasing the cost of performance "an equitable adjustment will be made at the time such change or changes are made." Instead of the contractor submitting evidence of increased cost at the time the changes were made, the contractor accepted the changes with the statements thereon that "Contract price and terms of delivery not affected."

Does Congress wish to allow extra compensation for losses alleged to have been sustained over 9 years ago, when no claim therefor was requested or made at the time the changes were agreed upon? Is it not a condition precedent to the payment of increased costs under a contract that claim therefor, supported by proper evidence, be filed at the time changes are made? (Plumley v. United States, 43 Ct. Cls. 266, 226 U. S. 545.) Are the terms of the contracts and the principles of contract law to be disregarded entirely?

TITLE X—H. R. 3218—FRED HERRICK

A similar bill, S. 491, became Private Act No. 335, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 27, 1935, after this title was included in the omnibus bill, H. R. 8750.

TITLE XIX—H. R. 6661—MAJ. JOSEPH H. HICKEY

A similar bill, S. 2741, became Private Act No. 388, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved February 11, 1936, after this title was included in the omnibus bill, H. R. 8750.

TITLE XX—S. 753—WALES ISLAND PACKING CO.

The claim of the Wales Island Packing Co. for $100,000 results from a favorable decision of the Court of Claims. However, it originated before any Member of this House was ever elected to Congress.

TITLE XXIII—S. 921—C. J. MAST

This bill proposes to pay for damages to claimant's crops from 1924 to 1928 by reason of breaks in a Government irrigation dike caused by muskrats burrowing in the bank of the dike.

Does Congress wish to obligate the Government to pay for damages resulting from ravages of muskrats when the Government was exercising due care in trying to eliminate such predatory pests and was not otherwise negligent in operating the irrigation project? Are not such damages one of the risks assumed by farmers using water from irrigation projects? Is it not just as logical to say that the Government would be obligated to pay a farmer the value of chickens killed by a fox straying from a national forest? Only $255 is involved, but if you pass this bill, how many more will follow?

TITLE XXIV—S. 998—GEORGE LAWLEY & SON CORPORATION

This bill, if enacted, would pay a contractor $92,781 in excess of the contract price of two torpedo boats constructed for the Navy under contracts entered into in 1898. Delivery of the boats was delayed several years due to contractor's inability to secure certain materials promptly and to strikes in contractor's plant. The amount claimed represents increases in wages and cost of materials during the period of delay. It also appears claimant had had no prior experience in constructing torpedo boats. Congress has heretofore referred the matter to the Court of Claims, which has held that the claim is for a gratuity and therefore without legal or equitable merit. Case no. 15005, congressional, decided January 8, 1934.

Does Congress wish to adopt the policy of referring claims to the Court of Claims for hearing and adjudication and then refuse to accept the findings of said court? Are the terms of contracts and established principles of contract law to be disregarded in settling claims against the United States? Will this not encourage other concerns without experience in particular work to secure Government contracts in the belief that the Government will pay any losses sustained by them in the performance thereof?

Include conclusion of law, page 2280.

TITLE XXV—S. 1036—DR. GEORGE W. RITCHEY

This identical bill became Private Act No. 153, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved July 22, 1935. Hence the pending bill, if enacted, would authorize payment of a claim already satisfied in full.

TAX REFUNDS

There are in this bill numerous cases where it is provided to pay certain claimants or to refer their cases to the Court of Claims growing out of payment of taxes, and so forth, which cannot now be paid due to the statute of limitations, and so forth.

It has long been the established policy of Congress by its action on similar bills to refuse to act favorably on such legislation, no matter how meritorious the claim might be. I have had several such claims where the Treasury admitted an overpayment, but the relief bills were never passed.

The Treasury repeatedly has held—

The position which this Department has taken and which Congress has sanctioned is that it is a sound policy to have statutes of limitation and that the policy upon which statutes are based must be adhered to, notwithstanding hardship in particular cases.

Then, again, I quote from a Treasury report:

The Treasury Department has consistently opposed the enactment of special legislation designed to remove the bar of limitations on refunds as unfair to other taxpayers with equally meritorious claims.

One dislikes to deny a taxpayer money illegally paid or money due as an overpayment of income and other taxes, but to open the door would mean claims involving hundreds of millions of dollars. Then again some attention must be paid to the position the Government finds itself in. In making audits the Government has found where money is due, but it cannot collect because of the statute of limitations. This likewise involves hundreds of millions of dollars. It is only in fraud cases where the Government can go beyond the statute of limitations.

H. R. 9054 (OMNIBUS)

TITLE II—H. R. 3559—JOHN L. ALCOCK

Under this bill the Court of Claims would be given jurisdiction to adjudicate a claim for anticipated profits under executory contracts between claimant and foreign buyers covering spruce lumber, which the United States commandeered for war purposes. Claimant has heretofore recovered damages for the loss on lumber in his possession at the time the Government took over all spruce timber.

Does Congress wish to obligate the Government to pay anticipated and speculative profits? Is it proper to pay a profit on goods which the claimant never owned or had in his possession? Did the claimant suffer any actual loss by having to pay damages to its customers for breach of contract resulting from an act of the United States in its sovereign capacity and as a war measure? Why should this claimant receive preferential treatment over other persons and concerns who were similarly situated?

The report shows the contention of the War Department is assailed by the committee. The War Department says in part:

If the relief be granted, it is believed such action would constitute a precedent too dangerous to even contemplate, as it would open up untold tens of thousands of claims of a like nature, for the reason that during the war the Government not only requisitioned ships which were under contract and charter at the time of their requisition, but undertook the control of wheat, sugar, coal, and other commodities of almost every nature, thereby rendering impossible the execution of previous contracts, respecting these commodities, and took over steel mills, railroads, shipyards, telephone and telegraph lines, the capacity output of factories and other producing activities. If this bill should be enacted into law, it is the opinion of this Department that it will inevitably result in a stampede and gold rush in the nature of claims upon the Government in comparison with which the Klondike gold rush would appear as a solo affair. If this should be passed, it is difficult to understand why, in principle, every soldier who was drafted into the military service would not have an equally meritorious claim against the Government for a special act of Congress for relief to compensate him for the difference between his meager Army pay and the pay, salary, or earnings he was receiving in civil life.

It seems to me, in view of such a statement from the present Secretary of War, Congress should give more than ordinary consideration to this proposed legislation and defeat the bill.

TITLE IV—H. R. 3729—HENRY W. BIBUS ET AL.

The claim of Henry W. Bibus and others grows out of the purchase of land for use by the Government during the war, for which the claimants were paid $472,250.30. There are 11 claimants, and all but 2 received the option price. In one instance the compromise was $5,000 less, and in the other the same amount. In four cases the Government paid more than the option price. The report shows the Government spent millions for improvements. It converted the land into highly desirable industrial property by reason of the expenditure in excess of $6,000,000. Now the former owners want the Congress to pass a bill that might result in their securing the amount between the purchase price and the sale price—over a million dollars. The War Department is opposed to the bill, and the Congress should defeat it.

In direct contrast to this recommendation is the bill for the relief of the Western Electric Co., Inc., which originates with the War Department. This in itself is evidence that the Department is fair, because it admits the Government is obligated, prepares the bill, submits it to the Congress, and asks for its passage.

TITLE VI—H. R. 4841—RELIEF OF CERTAIN ARMY DISBURSING OFFICERS AND OTHERS

A similar bill, S. 556, became Private Act No. 214, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved August 14, 1935, after this title was included in the omnibus bill, H. R. 9054.

TITLE IX—S. 1360—TERESA DE PREVOST

The bill has been pending for many years and grows out of the so-called Alsop award of July 4, 1911, made by the King of Great Britain as arbitrator.

Mrs. de Prevost maintains this money should be paid to her by the Government because of alleged irregularities in the distribution through the State Department to claimants under the Alsop award. The United States Government held the Government of Chile was liable to the United States, acting for certain named persons and their heirs. The King of Great Britain was named as arbitrator, and he decided in favor of the United States. The contentions of the claimant indicate a former Assistant Solicitor of the State Department resigned after the award had been made and within a few days entered the case as an attorney. If the allegations of Mrs. de Prevost are true, then the Assistant Solicitor of the State Department was guilty of unethical conduct, to say the least. This lady has spent many years around the Capitol in an effort to secure the passage of an act to reimburse her. The case is so involved I do not intend to even advance an opinion, but I do say the letter of the State Department which is referred to by the attorneys of Mrs. de Prevost should have been included in the report by the committee. The attorney's answer is printed but the Department's letter is missing. Further, if this bill is now passed, the money, as I understand it, will come out of the Treasury of the United States, as the money collected on the claim has long since been disbursed.

H. R. 9112 (OMNIBUS)

TITLE I—H. R. 237—ROWESVILLE OIL CO.

The bill is to remove the statute of limitations so far as it applies to the linters claim of the Rowesville Oil Co. arising out of a contract it had with the Government in 1919. The Judge Advocate General of the War Department indicates that at this time, with incomplete records, the Government would be at a great disadvantage in defending this suit if the bill was passed. Further, while the plaintiff made a plea at the time of cancellation of contract that it feared bankruptcy, the Judge Advocate General says:

As a matter of fact, the plaintiff did not fail. Like all industries connected with the manufacture of munitions, the plaintiff made great profits as a result of the war.

The company did not protest the cancellation clause at the time the contract was made. When the war ended there was no further use for buying linters used in the manufacture of explosives, and the cancellation clause was in all such contracts so the Government would be protected when it no longer needed the explosives. The amount involved is not indicated by the report or bill. It might be pertinent to say, however, there are now before the Court of Claims cotton linters claims amounting to over $6,000,000.

TITLE II—H. R. 254—FARMERS STORAGE & FERTILIZER CO.

The second bill is for the Farmers Storage & Fertilizer Co., and is similar to the Rowesville Oil Co. bill.

TITLE III—H. R. 3790—WALTER W. JOHNSTON

This bill proposes to pay a balance alleged to be due claimant for services rendered in behalf of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation during the years 1918 and 1919 in launching ships built for the Government at various shipbuilding yards.

In decision of April 30, 1930, no. E-455, the Court of Claims found the value of the claimant's services in launching the ships to be $20,000, and that $5,495 of that amount had been paid by the shipbuilding corporations, the amount of the judgment being $14,505. Does the Congress wish to authorize this payment notwithstanding the claimant has already been paid in full, in the view of the Court of Claims?

The net judgment was paid by the Government. It amounted to $14,505 and was paid September 6, 1930. This certainly should dispose of the claim. The bill seeking further reimbursement should be defeated.

TITLE V—H. R. 4059—ELLA B. KIMBALL

The bill to pay Ella B. Kimball, daughter and heir of Jeremiah Simonson, is a Civil War claim. It provides for payment of $16,441.81 for furnishing supplies and labor in the construction of the U. S. S. Chenango. The findings of the court were submitted in 1907, but all efforts to collect the money by an act of Congress have failed, as have hundreds if not thousands of other Civil War claims.

TITLE VI—H. R. 6356—JOSEPH G. GRISSOM

The claim of Joseph G. Grissom of $1,153.43 is another Civil War claim. This was to cover a period between the time he was commissioned by a Governor and actual date of muster in. One hundred and sixty-three such claims passed the House but were rejected by the Senate. This is the first time since 1914 this claim has been reported by a House committee.

It might be proper to recall here that in 1914 the last omnibus claims bill, including Civil War claims, was passed. At that time the late Oscar Underwood submitted an amendment, which was adopted and became law, which provided that thereafter the Court of Claims should have no further jurisdiction in claims growing out of the War of the Rebellion. I distinctly remember this amendment, as I was at that time a secretary to a Representative in Congress.

TITLE VII.—H. R. 7727—GEORGE B. MARX

The claim of George B. Marx grows out of an informal contract to make 200 wire carts for the Signal Corps in 1918. The War Department canceled the order on November 9, 1918, later considered the claim, and paid Marx $139,876.86. Marx claims $76,574.12. The committee, despite the objections of the War Department in the Seventy-first Congress, recommended Marx be paid $58,259.02. The bill was defeated. Now it is proposed to refer the case to the Court of Claims. The Government should not be required to defend such a suit.

TITLE VIII.—S. 2520, T. D. RANDALL & CO.

This bill proposes to authorize the Court of Claims to readjudicate a claim for losses and damages arising out of contracts for furnishing hay to the War Department in the year 1918. The claim was referred to said court by Private Act No. 507, Seventieth Congress, approved March 2, 1929, and denied by the court for the reason there was no agreement or understanding whereby the Government was to provide cars for shipping the hay, and, there being no breach of contract by the United States, no liability resulted for the alleged losses and damages (71 Ct. Cls. 152).

Does the Congress wish in effect to amend the contracts at this late date by changing the rights and obligations of the parties thereunder so as to make the Government liable for risks which the contractor voluntarily assumed in its undertakings? Are not such risks usually assumed by those engaged in similar enterprises? Should not such risks be anticipated and guarded against by appropriate covenants in the contracts or by insurance?

This company wants $20 and $25 a ton for 3,600 tons of hay it contracted to furnish the Government for $14 per ton. The Government paid the contract price.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I was reared in west Texas, I represent a west Texas district in Congress, and I do not apologize for my State, my people, or my district. I take pride in my district, and I am devoted to its interests.

Saturday night I went to a Washington theater and saw a picture show. I was astonished by a presentation by the Pathé News, which is, of course, a world-wide attraction. There was flashed upon the screen, in big broad letters, "More Dust." Following this was a view in the Resettlement Administration office showing much activity. Then appeared upon the screen the able Administrator of the Resettlement Administration, Dr. Rexford Tugwell. Mr. Tugwell made a little speech, stating that dust storms are a great menace and that the Resettlement Administration proposes to cope with the situation by the replanting of certain lands to grasses and by other proper methods. He explained that man's misbehavior had brought about this serious condition. Then the voice of a Pathé News man explained the rest of the picture.

A large map of the United States was flashed upon the screen, and the so-called dust-stricken area was outlined to include a broad strip from and including North Dakota, through South Dakota, Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma, the Texas Panhandle—so ably represented by the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES]—and down to and including much of my congressional district and some of the congressional district of Hon. R. E. THOMASON, my distinguished colleague. An arrow was then pointed right at the very heart of my district with the statement that this, the southwest portion of this vast dust bowl, was where the conditions were most acute. There follows a picture showing the people leaving the country like refugees from the rim of an erupting volcano. The statement was then made that these people were moving to other and better lands. Then the statement was made that livestock cannot live in this territory and farming is out of the question. Then something is said about the dust of death and the scene is over. The audience is profoundly affected. The women sigh and the men groan. I heard one in the audience remark, with a note of pity, "How do those poor devils live in that country?"

Since it is charged that farming is out of the question and that cattle and men cannot live in my district, I wish to have the Record to show some pertinent facts which utterly refute this grossly unfair presentation. In the first place, most every one of my counties in this so-called "dust bowl" broke the record this year in the number of poll taxes paid. I assure you that these people intend to stay in west Texas until the election and many years thereafter. The development of this section of west Texas has been remarkable, indeed. I know of no section in the United States that has had a comparable development. The population increased 134 percent from 1920 to 1930. There has been a great increase since then, but I do not have accurate figures showing the amount, as no official census has been taken. My district that is in this so-called "dust of death" area is devoted chiefly to cotton raising. We produce cotton with a greater economy of effort than any part of the world. If we could get a fair price for it, we would abound in wealth. It is interesting to note that in 1935, with an early frost and a reduction program, the production in the counties referred to by the Pathé News was 435.5 percent greater than in 1920. In other words, just 4 or 5 short months ago my district, most of which is in the area described, harvested 430,029 bales of cotton valued at $28,000,000. It is utterly absurd to suggest that such a productive area has become unsuitable for man and beast in so short a period as 4 or 5 months. As a matter of fact, thousands of people have left their homes in other areas of the United States and have come to west Texas for their health. To say that cattle cannot live there is likewise preposterous. Ask the Department of Agriculture if our vast herds of Hereford cattle do not compare favorably with the finest in the world.

The counties of my district which I refer to as having been so maligned and misrepresented include: Andrews, Bailey, Borden, Cochran, Dawson, Gaines, Hale, Hockley, Howard, Lamb, Lubbock, Lynn, Martin, Terry, and Yoakum. I do not like to see this country referred to as the land of the dust of death.

The Nation's Business for February 1936 has a map of the entire United States with white spots indicating good business conditions. There is a white spot indicating good business conditions right at the spot in my district that is being so maligned by the Pathé News.

If the Pathé News had got in touch with Texas Technological College at Lubbock, Tex., one of the ranking institutions of its kind in this country, the minutest facts could have been secured, and no such mistake could have possibly been made.

I am not condemning the Resettlement Administration. I am 100 percent favorable toward the purpose of its program. I am convinced that it had no intentional part in this misrepresentation. I predict that great accomplishments will be achieved by the regional offices at Amarillo and Dallas which serve my district. Regional Director D. P. Trent, at Dallas, has been doing an excellent work for some time. Director L. H. Hauter, of Amarillo, is a fine executive. He is launching upon a very worthy program in region 12. I do not question the need of an aggressive resettlement program in this area. I am heartily cooperating with this work. I am sure that Mr. Hauter deplores the injury that has been done my section of the State by the Pathé News in broadcasting to the world that the millions of dollars invested in this area are being carried away by the dust of death, and that this area is unsuited for agricultural development. Those who have given their lives and their fortunes to the development of this area and have millions of dollars invested here are anxious for the world to know the truth about west Texas.

Why, even the cautious, conservative, and efficient Federal land bank and Commissioner have outstanding obligations in Lubbock County, in this area, of $3,851,730, and in Lamb County of $3,236,650, and sizable amounts in other counties of this area.

Now, I do not deny that in the springtime we have sandstorms in the Texas Panhandle and Plains area. We have had them for years, and we will have them in some degree as long as the winds blow across our magnificent prairies. These sandstorms cause erosion in some degree and often injure early crops. I am in complete sympathy with a Government program of education and conservation. If we sit idly by and invoke no remedial and conservation measures, the time will come when all of America will be robbed of its priceless heritage—a fertile soil—and the type of misery and poverty and squalor such as we see in China today will be transported to our fair shores. Water erosion is much more serious than wind erosion, but both types of erosion present a national problem of first importance.

I am not at all satisfied with the new farm bill, but farsighted Americans will long praise this Democratic administration for beginning a soil-conservation program worthy of the name. We must improve this legislation, help secure for our great farming class of people equality under the law, and preserve for unborn generations the soil which is our real source of national wealth. It has been said that cities may be destroyed, but a prosperous agriculture will rebuild them, but if the farm land is washed and blown away civilization will crumble and no man or government can cherish a hope for its restoration.

I have just dispatched a telegram of protest to the main office of the Pathé News in New York requesting that this film be recalled. I should be glad for this agency and all others to know that we will go on developing the industries, institutions, and farm lands of west Texas despite this unfair incident. We in west Texas, in the parlance of the street, know how to "take it." [Applause.]

Mr. MCFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Does not the gentleman believe such publicity as that is very unfair and deals unjustly with our section of the country? It is liable to do great damage not only from a credit standpoint but in giving misinformation to the public generally?

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is correct, and I thank him for his observation. May I at this time quote the following telegram which I have sent to the general manager of the Pathé News in reference to this matter. It reads as follows:

Mr. JACK CONNALLY,
General Manager, Pathé News,

35 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City:

Your news reel no. 66 playing REO Keiths, Washington, this date entitled "More Dust" is a gross injustice to a vast Midwestern area. Statements made and scenes flashed are not justified by facts. I would call to your attention that the population in that part of my State included in your presentation has increased 134 percent since 1920 and the production of the one commodity, cotton, has increased 435 percent in the same period. I will not extend this telegram to include other facts just as striking. I do not question the need for an aggressive Resettlement Administration and Soil Conservation program in the area, but I do protest that the presentation exaggerates the true condition. Its continued showing will undoubtedly destroy confidence in the ability of the area to maintain itself financially and will result in direct injury to trade and credit to our people. I respectfully protest the continued showing of this film and urge that you carefully check all facts involved, believing that your investigation will convince you that it should be recalled in the cause of fairness and justice to these people.

GEORGE MAHON,
Member of Congress, Nineteenth District, Texas.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain figures which I think will be of interest to the country.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] as he may desire.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include certain excerpts.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to compliment this Committee for their splendid work in reducing the expenditures under this legislative appropriations bill. I notice from examining same that this bill is $640,092.43 less than the same bill last year, and $877,203 less than the total of the Bureau of the Budget estimates. The appropriations for the Senate and House of Representatives have been reduced $355,279.18 over last year and $168,156 below the Bureau of the Budget estimates, which shows this committee is trying to set the right example for economy, starting within our own department.

Mr. Chairman, there has been much criticism by the plutocrats through their organizations because of the money expended by this administration to restore employment and relieve human suffering, misery, and want. Our critics offer no constructive program, but seem to prefer to sit back and find fault with the wonderful progress now being made under the legislative program worked out by our great leader in the White House, Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt. This legislative program submitted and as approved by the Congress has done more to relieve human suffering, want, and misery among the people and to bring back our country from chaos to prosperity than any program ever submitted by any President and approved by any Congress since the dawn of our civilization.

THE GREATEST GOOD FOR THE GREATEST NUMBER

This program has been widespread and has touched the lives, directly or indirectly, of all of our people and has been designed to render assistance fairly to all alike, whether it was legislation on social security for the benefit of the aged, the sick, the feeble, the blind, the crippled children, the unemployed worker, or was legislation to improve labor and working conditions, or to assist the farmer, the stockman, or the small-business man, or to better regulate the utility rates or the stock exchanges, or to stop their high rates, graft, and corruption and fraud in such matters. This administration has kept always in mind bettering the working and living conditions of the average man doing that which was best for the greatest number.

Bearing in mind this great constructive program, I want to discuss the P. W. A. relief program worked out to give the farm and home owners of America lower electric-light rates. This is the first administration since these great modern utility services have been available that has seriously attacked this problem by trying to give beneficial relief to the average home owner in the shape of cheaper electric-light and gas rates. I have been glad to cooperate wholeheartedly with this program and have been glad to work to try to secure all the benefits possible under the splendid program now being worked out as above indicated. I was glad to support the Wheeler-Rayburn bill in the last session, which is designed to regulate the utility-holding company and thus make possible better State regulation where adequate State legislation has been enacted to carry out these results.

Under this power program you will remember that I called to your attention on January 3 the municipal light-plant controversy existing in an election being held at Wichita Falls on a P. W. A. project, February 8, 1936.

At the last two city elections held in Wichita Falls, city council members were elected on a platform pledged to install municipal light and gas plants, to improve the water system, to fight for lower telephone rates, and to equalize the city taxes. No sooner had the newly elected city council begun their task to carry out this platform than they found the Power Trust controlled newspapers of the city of Wichita Falls starting a campaign to discredit and block this program in any and every way they could.

The city council members, however, refused to be bulldozed, bluffed, or steered off of the platform upon which they were elected.

They employed engineers, who prepared the data, and they filed applications with the Federal Government for a P. W. A. loan and grant with which to build a light plant and gas plant and to improve the water system. They sent their special counsel on utilities matters, Judge Sartin, and Mr. Mack Taylor, one of the councilmen, to Washington to present their light-plant application. They came to my office and told me of their mission and requested my help. I gladly assisted them in every way I could. You all know how tedious it is to work out and secure favorable approval of these P. W. A. projects. After working on these projects most of last year, last November I drove my car to Washington at my own expense and finally secured approval of the light-plant project—not for $2,220,000, as per application filed, but for $1,750,000, which included a $1,260,000 loan and $490,000 gift or grant with which to build the city a complete municipal light plant.

The citizens of Wichita Falls have now held two elections, December 11, 1935, and February 8, 1936, in which they have voted on this matter. Whether or not they would issue revenue warrants bearing 4-percent interest, and sell them to the Government at par, and use this money to build them a municipal light plant. The last election provided that only the light plant and the revenues received therefrom would secure these warrants, which was as liberal an offer as any city could hope to receive.

It is a little hard to understand how any progressive city such as Wichita Falls could be hoodwinked into voting against such a liberal offer of the Federal Government, especially, when any citizen knows or should know that only through municipal ownership can the citizens of a town ever hope, under the present order of things, to receive a fair and reasonable electric rate.

The Power Trust prevailed in the February 8 election, and the municipal light project was defeated by a vote of 3,172 to 2,805, giving them a majority of 367 votes.

MONEY SPENT

From information received from the citizens of Wichita Falls, it is evident that a large sum of money was spent in defeating the municipal light-plant project. Some estimate that at least $50,000 was spent to defeat this election.

THE SO-CALLED CITIZENS TAXPAYERS COMMITTEE

The Texas Electric Service Co., the local agent for the Electric Bond & Share Corporation of New York, who serve the Wichita Falls area, admit they contributed to the so-called Citizens Taxpayers Committee, which they no doubt organized to carry on their fight against this project. An organization by the same name conducted a similar fight at Chattanooga, Tenn., recently, and one by a similar name is conducting a fight against a similar project at Milwaukee, Wis., and strange as it may seem, in all such contests, the Power Trust follows the same tactics, organizing the same taxpayers' committee, advertising the same malicious, willful falsehoods, hiring their radio speakers and personal house-to-house canvassers, opposing in every way possible such projects. The Federal Trade Commission hearings show that all such expenses are included in their overhead, and thus paid for by the people in the exorbitant rates charged.

At Wichita Falls this so-called taxpayers' committee was under the direction of Shields Heyser, chairman, A. W. King and J. L. Jackson, directors. Mr. Heyser issued the checks on a special account he kept in the Wichita National Bank. Photostats of several of these checks have been sent me.

HOW THE POWER TRUST FUNCTIONS

I feel sure the Congress is interested, and I believe the people generally should know just how the Power Trust sets the stage to defeat one of these P. W. A. municipal light-plant projects. So I will relate the facts as to just what they did at Wichita Falls to defeat this project.

PROPAGANDA SPREAD THROUGH SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES

First let me give you the background the Power Trust uses to take over the political control of any city wherever possible. The Federal Trade Commission hearings show how the Power Trust has hired different professors to write books, articles for magazines, and all kinds of propaganda against public ownership of light plants and how they have distributed this propaganda throughout the schools of the Nation. These hearings show how completely the Power Trust have spread their educational program against public ownership of utilities throughout the schools and colleges of the Nation. Yes; they have even spread their propaganda in the public and high schools of the Nation. It has been truly said they have conducted this program against a city owning its own municipal light from the cradle to the grave.

WRITE-UP AND SHAKE-DOWN

These hearings show how the Power Trust has watered their stock and how they have engaged in write-ups or inflation of same, which according to the hearings before the Federal Trade Commission was known to be $1,491,021,823 for the 18 top holding companies and their subsidiaries. Some of these holding company and subsidiaries write-ups are:

Electric Bond & Share Corporation, $352,243,898; Cities Service, $262,110,708; Central Public Service, $252,462,118; Southeastern Power & Light, $122,603,437; Midwest Utilities, $111,072,732.

CONTROL THE PRESS

They have conducted their Nation-wide preferred stock selling schemes which is nothing more than selling the public their promissory notes bearing 5-, 6-, or 7-percent interest—if they can pay that much, after they get through paying themselves enormous salaries. Hearings further show that their plan is to distribute this stock as widely as possible in order to bribe public opinion. Carrying out this scheme the hearings show how they have distributed from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 annually among the newspapers of the Nation to advertise the natural monopoly they have. Of course, the Nation being without any adequate regulation or control over these monopolistic utilities and the courts having allowed them a very reasonable profit on these watered stock values, the only thing left for Mr. Average Citizen to do is to construct your own light plant.

Now, having loaded the newspapers and the citizens of the town generally with their preferred stock—6-percent notes—they go about joining the towns' different organizations, such as the chamber of commerce, the service clubs, and so forth, and contributing liberally to civic organizations, and so forth, so that in that way it will be easier for them to continue their program of collecting excessive utility rates. Then when an election comes, being thus entrenched, the Power Trust tries to keep in the background as much as possible and work through other organizations.

HOW THE SO-CALLED CITIZENS TAXPAYERS' COMMITTEE FUNCTIONS

Let me refer to some of the things this so-called taxpayers' committee did in this last election at Wichita Falls.

I will quote a few affidavits from citizens there.

Mr. J. A. Gillentine, of 1215 North Tenth Street, says:

On February 10, 1936, at 9:30 a. m. I went to the office of Shields Heyser, chairman of the citizens taxpayers' committee, and received a check for $17.50, balance due me in accordance with my previous agreement with him for work in connection with defeating the home-owned light plant in Wichita Falls, Tex. I made one affidavit on February 7, 1936, relative to this same matter. I have also furnished you with a photostat of the check above referred to.

Since the election was on Saturday, February 8, and the many workers employed by Shields Heyser and associates had a bonus check coming, I, like others, applied for my check early Monday morning. When I got to the office of Shields Heyser and associates, rooms 320 and 322 Staley Building, I met with about 40 others, and they were coming and going right along getting their checks. Some of these persons of the above 40 were men in charge of certain districts who had a long list of names for whom they were also to get checks. When I got into the office where my check was delivered to me I noticed a stack of executed checks about an inch thick and others being written from a blank pad.

From my observation and knowledge I can state that it is my opinion that four or five hundred persons were working on the same line of work I was.

Mr. George C. Nelson, of 2012 Ninth Street, says:

Dr. A. H. Douglas, former superintendent of the water plant of the city of Wichita Falls, Tex., and afterward city manager, and George Hodgins, former chief of police of the city of Wichita Falls, Tex., came to me with a petition for the purpose of getting subscribers to recall Alderman J. B. Stokes, seeking my assistance in securing signatures from my friends thereon. For this service I was paid $5 in cash by the above Dr. A. H. Douglas.

On or about December 1, 1935, I was again approached by this same George Hodgins, asking me to report to Shields Heyser's office the next day, which was Monday. I reported at Shields Heyser's office and was carried to another office on the third floor of the Staley Building, Hodgins and Heyser seeking my assistance in connection with defeating the home-owned light-plant proposition in the election of December 11, 1935.

When I discovered that among the crowd were men that led me to understand that it was no one else but the work of the Texas Electric Service Co. I refused to go any further and expressed myself in such a way that it looked dangerous to these men, and Shields Heyser gave me a check for $15 and asked me to keep this matter quiet and forget it.

While I was in the office on the third floor of the Staley Building where this large number of paid workers were assembled, I saw considerable checks pass from Shields Heyser to these different persons.

To show how they put on the pressure, note what Mr. W. T. Sadler, an advertising signman, of 1601 Elizabeth Street, says:

About 1 week before the last election I was in the office of the Texas Electric Co. getting business from that company, when W. W. Rogers again inquired as to whether I had qualified as voter and also my wife, and I advised him that both I and my wife were qualified to vote; but as a matter of fact, I was the only one qualified. Rogers then stated to me that he was going to check on the persons obtaining business from them and that if they found that these persons had not cast their ballot in their favor it would be just too bad, meaning that no further business would be obtained. Since I wished to retain their business and was not certain they could check up on me, I cast a vote against the municipal power plant.

Mr. Craig Boyd, of 1820 Ninth Street, says:

On Saturday, February 1, 1936, Mr. Mark D. Walker, a member of the city council of the city of Wichita Falls, Tex., said he could get me a job with the taxpayers' committee. A few minutes later Mr. Shields Heyser called me and told me to come to work Monday morning, February 3. My understanding was that I would receive $5 per day if the bonds were defeated and if they were not defeated I would receive only $3 per day. I received $3 per day for 6 days' work, a total of $18.

I was working in box 15, and we met at Mr. Leslie Humphreys home 2 nights during this week and checked voters' names that we were calling on to assist in defeating the bonds. Mr. Humphreys is local attorney for the Electric Service Co. here.

From my observation of the people in the taxpayers' committee office, it is my opinion that this committee had at least 400 people on the pay roll.

THE POWER-TRUST DAILIES FUNCTION

And it seems that the Times Publishing Co., owner of both daily papers along with plenty of Power Trust stock, just could not keep from doing everything possible to defeat this election. We find them along with the mill and other large business interests after they had changed the minds of three of the council members and their special counsel on utility matters, Mr. Sartin, we then find them calling upon the M. K. & T. Railroad threatening to transfer their freight to the Ft. Worth & Denver R. R. in order to force Mr. L. C. Rodgers, an engineer of over 20 years' service, off of the council so that they would then have control of same. Then we find these two papers using bitter ridicule and sarcasm toward Mr. Rodgers, gloating over the fact that they had forced him to resign from the council; but they never intimate to the public the part they played in forcing him off the council.

We find the Times Publishing Co., through their agents, spreading every possible kind of willful and malicious misstatements in order to secure votes. For example, Mr. Walter W. Brown of 111 Waco Street, says:

On February 6, 1936, Mr. Jim Allison, of the Times Publishing Co., approached me and offered to pay me $2.50 per day beginning that day and continuing through February 8, the day set for the voting of the bond issue for the municipal light plant. He further stated that I would be paid an additional $2.50 per day, making the total of my services in the event of success at defeating the issue $5 per day.

In this offer Mr. Allison proposed that I visit the irrigation project near this city and all other Federal projects and relate to the employees that they should vote against the bond issue because, if the bonds were voted, no additional benefit would come to them, in that they would not receive any additional wages over the amounts now paid them, which is $29 per month, and that the higher wage rates paid by the P. W. A. would not go to the employees, but would go to the four councilmen known as the "big four", especially Max Taylor and J. B. Stokes, and also to the city manager, Mark Thomas. I advised Mr. Allison that I would not consider his offer for acceptance as I did not believe the transaction was honorable and that I would not double-cross anyone.

Now, Mr. Allison and others there who spread these false statement knew or could easily have known that under the construction of the light plant under the contract the local prevailing wage for whatever the kind and character of work performed must be paid. For example, if common labor there received 50 cents per hour he would work 30 hours per week and receive $15 per week, and wage scales for technical men would be paid according to whatever the established scale there for their service warrants.

Mr. A. L. Miller, of 1320 West Third Street, says:

On February 8, 1936, at 10:20 a. m., Shields Heyser directed me to see Rhea Howard, secretary and treasurer of the Times Publishing Co., to get money to use to buy gasoline, etc., to take voters to the polls who would vote against the bond issue. I immediately proceeded to see Rhea Howard, who gave me $2 in cash for the purpose above stated, instructing me to be sure to carry people to the polls to vote against the bonds.

ADVERTISING PAYS

We find that the Power Trust brought down their advertising experts from Chicago—Bazel & Jacobs—who supervised the local Power Trust advertising. Mr. J. B. Thomas, vice president of the Texas Electric Service Co., from Fort Worth, with his assistants, were on the scene directing their campaign. Based on the price of $1.75 per inch, the newspapers there received several thousand dollars from the Power Trust for their efforts. All forms of advertising, radio, and personal contact were used throughout the campaign.

THE BANKS TAKE AN ACTIVE PART

Mr. J. T. Harrell, president of the City National Bank of Wichita Falls; Mr. W. M. McGregor, president of the First National Bank; Mr. John Hirschi, president, and Mr. Pat Simmons, active vice president of the Wichita National Bank, all took a personal hand in the campaign and sent advertising to all the business houses and the citizens urging them to oppose the light-plant election. It seems that they bitterly opposed the people having lower light rates. It may be that some of these bank officials were more interested in the city's bonds they had purchased from 33 cents to 50 cents on the dollar, and were wanting to control the city's politics for that reason; or it may be that the Power Trust stock ownership or influence had something to do with it. Of course, Mr. Harrell states that he is opposed to the Government entering any kind of business.

TAX-EXEMPT BANK STOCK

Yes; it is all right for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to purchase $400,000 worth of preferred stock in his bank as it has in many others in order to be of assistance to them, and the preferred stock so purchased by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from all national banks was held to be tax exempt until the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Baltimore National Bank against State Tax Commission of Maryland, delivered February 3, 1936. And now legislation is pending before the House which would exempt all such preferred stock from State, county, city, school, and district taxation, thus discriminating against other national banks and certain State banks and all other citizens not so favored. And Mr. F. F. Florence, president, Texas Bankers' Association, wired all members to support this legislation. His bank, the Republic National, of Dallas, sold the R. F. C. $2,000,000 preferred stock, and would thus save $86,000 in local taxes, while they pay their president $30,000 per year. For example, this would give the City National Bank a tax exemption, according to Mr. Jesse Jones' estimate, of $4.30 per hundred, or $17,200. Mr. Frank Kell has bitterly opposed the municipal-light-plant elections. He is opposed to lower light rates for the citizens because it would be the Government in business, yet we find he is being well taken care of by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation through a loan of $400,000 to the Wichita Falls & Southern Railway Co. at a very low interest. The chamber of commerce and the heads of the different banks above mentioned sent each business concern in Wichita Falls a telegram on February 7, as follows:

Believing that the interests of Wichita Falls and its citizenship can best be served by the defeat of the bond issue, we respectfully urge you to go to the polls today and vote against the bonds and use your influence with your associates and employees to do likewise.

BANKS FAVORED BY GOVERNMENT

The banks now receive the following special benefits: An exclusive franchise protecting them from competition unless and until additional banking facilities are proved necessary; the free use of Government credit and the right to loan money on the average of $10 to every $1 the bank possesses; has relieved them of the responsibility of paying interest on demand deposits, thus saving them about $250,000,000 per year and a reduction in interest on time deposits amounting at least $200,000,000 per year. The interest received from tax-exempt securities is exempt from taxation, saving them about $50,000,000 per year. They have the right to deposit Government bonds and have the Government print new money for them as needed at actual cost of printing, which amounts to about 30 cents per $1,000. In addition to this the Government furnished $300,000,000 of the $339,000,000 necessary to guarantee the banks' deposits, so it seems that the banks should not complain of governmental aid to others, they being the chief beneficiaries. Yet we find the American Bankers Association and kindred organizations in the forefront opposing a reduction in utility rates or legislation that will give relief in interest rates or otherwise render aid to the average man.

POWER TRUST INJUNCTION SUITS

Many of the poor people in Wichita Falls could not pay their poll tax, much less their property tax, and the city council, recognizing their wants and needs, as had been done repeatedly for other purposes, voted to transfer $75,000 from the water fund to the general fund to allow these folks to have a little work so that they could pay their poll taxes and vote in the municipal light plant election as American citizens should. This would not do, so we find the mayor, who started out in favor of municipal ownership, later flopped over to the Power Trust and filed an injunction suit which would bar these poor people from securing work and a chance to vote. Recently we have noticed that the same Power Trust that has enjoined the construction of municipal and power projects Nation-wide has enjoined the construction of the Brazos and Colorado River Dams. While here in Washington lobbying against the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, the representatives of the Power Trust from Texas all said they favored the Brazos and Colorado River projects. Yet, now we find them, as has been their policy throughout the Nation, enjoining the construction of these two great projects. They do not hope to win these law suits; they want to delay their construction as long as possible, hoping, of course, that they can defeat this administration and all Representatives who have voted with same, and repeal this legislation at the next session of Congress, if they are successful in electing those who will represent them instead of representing the rights of the common people. They want to continue their program of high rates and complete control and domination of the politics of the Nation from the highest to the lowest office, and their policy has always been "rule or ruin."

COMPARISON OF POWER RATES

You will recall that during the fight on the Wheeler-Rayburn bill I spoke in favor of same and at the time pointed out the excessive utility rates charged in the Nation was about $1,000,000,000 annually above what would be considered a fair charge for this service, and that based on the electricity consumed in Texas, the consumers paid about $25,000,000 annually more than what is considered a fair price for this service based on comparisons with the T. V. A. rates, Tacoma, Wash., and Ontario, Canada, rates. We must also take into consideration the unfortunate situation thus brought about because of the great masses of those living on the farms and in small communities that are unable to secure any electricity because of the enormous costs involved. We are now working upon the rural-electrification legislation that we hope will enable this administration to extend this electricity program to every farm home in America so that all farmers, and those living in small communities, may enjoy the benefits of this modern utility at low cost.

Let me again call to your attention the overcharges made by the Power Trust in different counties in my district. I will mention only one town in each county as indicative of the rates charged for comparison purposes with T. V. A. rates which is recognized as a fair price for the services rendered.

ARCHER COUNTY

In Archer City, which is served by the Texas Electric Service Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.60, or $31.20 a year—under the T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $22.20 a year; 40 kilowatt-hours a month in Archer City cost $3.35; under the T. V. A. rates it cost $1.20. In other words, the householder in Archer City using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $40.20 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 179 percent.

BAYLOR COUNTY

In the city of Bomarton, which is served by the Texas Electric Service Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.85, or $34.20 a year; under T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 per year, a saving of $25.20 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Bomarton costs $3.60; under the T. V. A. rates it cost $1.20. In other words, the householder in Bomarton using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $43.20 a year, whereas under the T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 200 percent.

CLAY COUNTY

In the city of Henrietta, which is served by the Texas Electric Service Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.45, or $29.40 a year; under the T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $20.40. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Henrietta cost $3.20; under the T. V. A. rates it cost $1.20. In other words, the householder in Henrietta using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $28.40 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 97 percent.

COOKE COUNTY

In the city of Gainesville, which is served by the Texas Power & Light Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.15, or $25.80 a year; under the T. V. A. rates, 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $16.80 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Gainesville cost $2.90; under the T. V. A. it cost $1.20. In other words, the householder in Gainesville using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $34.80 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 142 percent.

DENTON COUNTY

In Lewisville, which is served by the Community Public Service Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $3, or $36 a year; under T. V. A. rates, 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 per year, a saving of $27 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Lewisville cost $3.66; under the T. V. A. rates it cost $1.20. In other words, the householder in Lewisville using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $43.92 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 328 percent.

FOARD COUNTY

In the city of Crowell, which is served by the West Texas Utilities Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.38, or $28.56 a year; under T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $19.56 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Crowell cost $3.28; under the T. V. A. rates it cost $1.20. In other words, the householder in Crowell using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $39.36 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of approximately 174 percent.

JACK COUNTY

In the city of Jacksboro, which is served by the Texas Power & Light Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.25, or $27 a year; under the T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $18 a year; 40 kilowatt-hours a month in Jacksboro cost $3; under T. V. A. rates it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Jacksboro using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $36 a year, whereas under T. V. A. he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 150 percent.

HARDEMAN COUNTY

The city of Quanah is served by the West Texas Utility Co.; 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.25, or $27 a year; under T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $18 a year; 40 kilowatt-hours a month in Quanah cost $3.15; under T. V. A. it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Quanah using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $37.80 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 163 percent.

KNOX COUNTY

In the city of Benjamin, which is served by the West Texas Utilities Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.95, or $35.40 a year—under the T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year—a saving of $26.40 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Benjamin cost $4—under the T. V. A. it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Benjamin using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $48 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 233 percent.

MONTAGUE COUNTY

The city of Montague is served by the Community Public Service Co. Twenty-five kilowatt-hours a month cost $3.75, or $45 a year—under the T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 per year, a saving of $36 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Montague cost $5.70—under the T. V. A. rates it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Montague using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $68.40 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 375 percent.

THROCKMORTON COUNTY

In the city of Throckmorton, which is served by the West Texas Utility Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.75, or $33 a year; under the T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $24. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Throckmorton cost $3.80; under the T. V. A. rates it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Throckmorton using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $45.60 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 217 percent.

WICHITA COUNTY

In the city of Wichita Falls, which is served by the Texas Electric Service Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $1.85, or $22.80 a year; under T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 per year, a saving of $13.80 a year; 40 kilowatt-hours a month in Wichita Falls cost $2.60; under the T. V. A. rates it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Wichita Falls using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $31.20 a year, whereas under T. V. A. he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 116 percent.

WILBARGER COUNTY

In the city of Vernon, which is served by the Vernon Municipal Light Co. and the West Texas Utility Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2, or $24 a year; under T. V. A. rates, 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $15 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Vernon cost $2.70; under the T. V. A. rates it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Vernon using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $32.40 a year, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 124 percent.

WISE COUNTY

In the city of Decatur, which is served by the Texas Power & Light Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.25, or $27 a year; under the T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 a year, a saving of $18 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Decatur cost $3; under the T. V. A. rates it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Decatur using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $36 a year, whereas under the T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 150 percent.

YOUNG COUNTY

In the city of Graham, which is served by the Texas Electric Service Co., 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost $2.15, or $25.80 a year; under T. V. A. rates 25 kilowatt-hours a month cost 75 cents, or $9 per year—a saving of $16.80 a year. Forty kilowatt-hours a month in Graham cost $2.90; under the T. V. A. rates it costs $1.20. In other words, the householder in Graham using 40 kilowatt-hours a month would pay $34.80, whereas under T. V. A. rates he would pay $14.40 a year, an overcharge of 141 percent.

I suggest that each consumer of electricity cut out the rates above quoted for your county and then get out your light bills and compare them and see how much you are being overcharged for the power consumed each month.

RADIO BROADCASTS

In the closing days of the February 8 light-plant election several speeches were made against the municipal light plant. I wrote KGKO broadcasting station at Wichita Falls, requesting copies of these speeches by Mr. McDonald, Mr. Montgomery, Mr. Heyser, and others, to which Mr. Harold Hough, Mr. Amon Carter's agent in Fort Worth for this station, replied:

Many of the speeches were oral, and therefore, we have no way of reproducing them to you. With respect to those speeches, which were written, we are very sure that you would find the manuscript in the possession of the speaker, and we do not doubt that a letter addressed to the speaker, who took part in the campaign, would meet with a ready response.

I then requested copies of these speeches from the Federal Communications Commission, who promised to try to secure copies of same, but after waiting 12 days to reply, they finally replied as follows:

I regret very much to advise that I am unable to comply with your request, as the Commission does not have copies of these speeches. The Commission has promulgated no regulation requiring a station to transcribe or maintain copies of speeches broadcast over its facilities; nor is there any rule of the Commission requiring persons to furnish copies of speeches in advance of rendition.

I took the matter up with some of the parties who made these speeches, and they advised me that they left a copy of same with KGKO and would not furnish same. I know that this station required me to have my speeches censored by their attorney before they would allow me to broadcast, in addition to requiring a copy to be left with them. It seems to me that all broadcasting stations should require all speeches to be electrically transcribed as delivered, and that proper legislation should be enacted to require this be done. We are entering into a national campaign which, according to Mr. Farley and other leaders, is expected to be one of the most bitter campaigns ever waged in the Nation. We should see to it in advance that proper records are made so that the people of the Nation may be protected.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF OUR TAX LAWS

We have heard a great deal of late concerning new taxes and ways and means of raising sufficient revenue to meet the necessary requirements of the Government.

I have spoken several times, specifically pointing out my views on taxation and offering amendments to existing tax laws to stop the loopholes through which much of our income now escapes.

Let me call your attention to a practice that seems to be growing. Government employees are resigning responsible positions in the different departments, especially the revenue department, and immediately accepting employment from large corporations who are greatly benefited by the confidential information secured by them as Government employees.

Last year while we were considering the amendment of the 10-percent excess profits and limitation law placed in the naval construction bill, H. R. 6604, we found the Navy and Treasury Departments very close together in their recommendations of amendments to this profits and limitation clause, which would practically destroy it. Mr. Moore testified for the Treasury Department, and his testimony shows that he was thoroughly in accord with the views of the Navy Department on amendments that would in effect practically destroy the 10-percent profits and limitation clause. Shortly thereafter, I understand, he was employed at $12,000 per year by the Du Ponts.

Let me read a recent news item from the Washington News:

HOPSON'S A. G. E. HIRES EXPERT IN TAX SUIT

Charles M. Trammell, until 2 weeks ago a member of the United States Board of Tax Appeals, began tracing financial dealings of Howard C. Hopson today in an attempt to save the utilities magnate and his Associated Gas & Electric Co. $40,000,000 in tax claims by the Government.

The claims, protested by the A. G. E. and its 149 subsidiaries, are for alleged income-tax and excess-profits tax deficiencies.

Trammell is a former Florida judge. He was appointed to the Tax Board in 1924 and reappointed in 1926.

Thus we find Mr. Trammell, a recent member of the Board of Tax Appeals, employed by the Associated Gas & Electric Co. to try to defeat income-tax deficiencies due the Government from 1927 to 1933. I do not believe, under the fair interpretation of our laws, that any Government employee should use his confidential information thus received in prosecuting such claims against the Government.

U. S. R. C. S., section 190, reads as follows:

It shall not be lawful for any person appointed after the 1st day of June, 1872, as an officer, clerk, or employee in any of the departments to act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States which was pending in either of said departments while he was such officer, clerk, or employee, nor in any manner, nor by any means, to aid in the prosecution of any such claim, within 2 years next after he shall have ceased to be such officer, clerk, or employee.

Yet we find these employees in the different departments, as well as in the Board of Tax Appeals, who have held high positions, taking such employment to help defeat claims that the Government holds against these concerns, running into millions of dollars.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFARLANE. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I am in sympathy with what the gentleman states, and I believe something should be done about it. As I read the newspaper article, the technicality in this case, under which the gentleman can accept the employment, is that the statute which the gentleman from Texas just read refers to claims which the taxpayer prosecutes against the Government, and these claims which the Government is properly prosecuting against one of the utility companies, are claims prosecuted by the Government. This is the so-called "out" upon which the gentleman from Florida is relying. I do not believe such was ever the intent of the statute. I believe these employees were not intended to be permitted to go into either side of a case, whether the taxpayer was suing the Government for a refund, which is a common case, or a case like this where the Government is suing the taxpayer for more taxes. If the gentleman will read the statute again he will see it only refers to claims by a taxpayer against the Government, and in this particular case the reverse of that situation is true which Mr. TRAMMELL seems to think justifies his conduct.

Mr. McFARLANE. In answer to the gentleman's statement, let me read a decision of the Department in that regard, which is very much in point and is in keeping with what the gentleman has suggested. This is a decision of the Department of Justice (20 Op. Atty. Gen. 695) construing section 190, Revised Statutes, to apply to all claims pending in any of the departments while the attorney or agent was employed in any department, and is not limited to a claim pending in the department in which the agent was employed, whether later being prosecuted before the same or a different department.

Cases brought before the Board of Tax Appeals are instituted by the taxpayers. The Government has no right to institute a proceeding before the Board of Tax Appeals. Therefore, a Government employee, resigning from such Board and representing claims before such Board, is, as the statute says, acting "As counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States."

All claims pending before the Board of Tax Appeals are cases where the taxes have been assessed and proceedings brought by the taxpayer in the nature of a claim to have these assessments abated.

Every petition before the Board of Tax Appeals is in the nature of the potential claim for refund of any overpayment of taxes which the Board may find has been made. The petition of the taxpayer takes the place of a claim for refund. (See sec. 322-D, acts of 1934.)

There are other decisions of the same kind, and therefore I think the Attorney General's Department has construed this section more liberally than the gentleman thinks.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think the decision changes the point I am trying to make. "Claims in the Department", I think, refers to claims by a taxpayer, under that decision, while this is a claim by the Government itself.

Mr. McFARLANE. But under a clear and a reasonable interpretation of the law I think it ought to apply and we ought to give it the most liberal interpretation possible, and if the statute is not sufficiently broad, we ought to amend it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think that is the remedy—the law should be amended.

Mr. McFARLANE. I believe the above statute has been liberally construed so far; for example, in the case of Van Meter v. Munn (1912) (116 Minn. 444), the court held that a lawyer who had been chief clerk of an Indian reservation, could not within 1 year of his resignation from same recover from the United States for lobbying fees, for services rendered, in prosecuting a claim against the Government for timber cut from the Indians' land.

Likewise, in the case of Ludwig et al. v. Raydure (157 N. E. 816) certiorari denied by the Supreme Court. In that case the plaintiff was employed by the defendant to work out certain depletion information on certain oil wells, which plaintiff did within less than 2 years from his resignation from the Revenue Department.

The court held that the plaintiff could not recover for such services because of said statute, section 190 (citing 151 N. E. 645) was decisive of this case. The judge held:

A party who enters into a contract despite a statute prohibiting it cannot thereafter claim the fruits of its performance in a court of justice.

THE BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

This Board was created during the reign of Mr. Mellon (Revenue Act of June 22, 1924) and we find 11 of the 16 members serving at the present time who were appointed under the reign of Mr. Mellon with his approval. The names of these appointees are as follows:

Charles Rogers Arundell, appointed September 1, 1925.

Eugene Black, appointed October 31, 1929.

James Russell Leech, appointed January 31, 1932.

Stephen J. McMahon, appointed May 31, 1929.

Annabel Matthews, appointed in 1930.

Logan Morris, appointed March 23, 1925.

John Edgar Murdock, appointed June 9, 1926.

Herbert F. Seawell, appointed November 20, 1929.

Charles Perley Smith, appointed July 16, 1924.

John M. Sternhagen, July 16, 1924.

Ernest H. Van Fossan, June 8, 1926.

This Board was created to provide an independent review of the taxpayers' cases before assessment of deficiencies. The Bureau by reason of inadequate personnel and incompetent administration imposed ill-considered and unreasonable assessments on taxpayers. Congress sought to stop this by providing an independent review body in the Treasury Department. Unfortunately, however, the members soon surrounded their review by the rules adopted by the equity courts of the District of Columbia. This turned what was intended to be a review body into a highly technical court, before which a taxpayer is forced to employ a specially trained lawyer and provide himself with expensive witnesses in order to be given the consideration which was intended without this great expense.

In looking over the results of this body I find their rulings are so inconsistent that Bureau officials cannot be consistent in administration because of these inconsistencies. These decisions have laid the ground work and have been the cause of a flood of litigation equaled in no other country. Administration of our taxing laws is a practical matter. The courts have held that these statutes should be construed liberally in favor of the taxpayer. I see no reason why an administrative problem of arriving at the correct tax should be turned into such a mass of litigation as has resulted from the creation of the Board.

I therefore recommend that this Board be abolished. In its stead we should create an independent review body composed not of lawyers only but of practical tax men such as auditors and engineers. Provide that this body shall function purely as a review body and without the technical requirements of a court. Provision should be made for taking testimony when a case was appealed so that the Board's findings will be given the same status as the findings of commissioners of the Court of Claims.

The creation of such a body I regard as the first step in simplification and one of the most important ones.

Mr. Robert H. Jackson, then Assistant General Counsel for the Treasury Department, and now Asst. U. S. Attorney General, in speaking before the Senate Finance Committee last year on the pending tax bill regarding practice before this Board, said:

The device of permitting a litigation of tax first and payment afterward, with no security or penalty or disadvantage whatever for the delay, is proving so costly as to present a challenge to effective enforcement.

It is stated by a retiring member of the Board of Tax Appeals that since 1926 the Government has lost two-thirds in amount of its cases before the Board of Tax Appeals, the average tax case involving a deficiency of $28,000.

This result before the Board of Tax Appeals contrasts with the result in the Court of Claims and the United States district courts where the taxpayer must first pay his tax and then sue for refund, and where the Government appears to win a much larger percentage of the cases.

For the year ended June 30, 1935, trials in these two courts showed the following results:

Decisions in favor of the Government, or dismissals on the basis of decisions in favor of the Government, 252; amount claimed, $16,801,896.

Decisions in favor or partly in favor of the taxpayer, or confessions of judgment on the basis of decisions in favor of the taxpayer, 135; amount involved, $555,479.

Almost a complete reversal of the percentage where they pay first and sue for a refund that exists, as against where they do not.

In addition to this, 151 cases, involving $9,949,000, were dismissed by the taxpayers without refund.

In speaking further regarding this Board, Mr. Jackson said:

The day has come when it is totally inadequate to the problems which it must solve. The Board of Tax Appeals decides in litigated cases about 1,600 cases a year, and we are having four or five or six thousand cases a year commenced. With that situation, where we are compelled to settle two-thirds of our cases, we are not getting the best results in the settlements, of course.

On the work of this Board he said:

The problem of enforcement is a very serious problem. We have general statistics showing a decrease in the number of cases, and I can show statistical figures of decrease in the past year; but there is not a decrease in the actual work, because the little cases get tried and the big cases get stalled. We have one case in Los Angeles that has been on trial a year.

And, further, he said:

I do not believe that we can successfully administer the income-tax laws much longer if we are going to permit the taxpayer without the payment of anything except a $10 filing fee, to get 3 or 4 years' delay in the payment of his deficiency.

On the amount of work accomplished by this Board, he gave these figures:

It is obviously, if the ratio of losses by the Government in cases before the Board is accurately stated, a great advantage to petition for redetermination where the taxpayer can afford it. The Board has capacity actually to decide only about 1,600 contested cases a year. We have in recent years reduced the number of cases pending, but the amount involved in undecided cases has increased. July 1, 1934, we had 12,474 cases, involving $448,493,060, pending, and on July 1, 1935, we had 10,423 cases pending, involving $493,648,417. Thus while reducing the number of cases by 2,051, the amount of asserted deficiencies held in suspense increased last year $45,155,337.

So, bearing in mind the above information, it is easily understood how Mr. Hopson of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., of last year's lobby fame, and other promoters of his type, as well as many so-called captains of high finance, evade tax payment without any serious consequences.

It is interesting to note how Mr. H. C. Hopson, in the case of National Public Utility Investing Corporation, Howard C. Hopson, appellant, against United States, has been able to defeat the investigation of the tax liability of this concern for the years of 1929 and 1933, inclusive, because the books of this concern are in Canada.

Quoting from the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Second Circuit, opinion rendered August 5, 1935, we find the following:

It is undisputed that when the ex-parte order was made on September 8, 1934, the appellant was the president of National Public Utility Investing Corporation as well as one of its directors and its largest stockholder. All of its stock was held by or for the appellant and his near relatives and by or for H. C. Hopson & Co., a partnership consisting of the appellant and members of his immediate family. Its business was conducted from the appellant's own office at No. 61 Broadway, New York City. * * * Until some time in August 1933, all the books and records of these corporations which the appellant has been ordered to produce were at his office in New York. In that month they were taken to Canada for use, so it is now claimed, in connection with the liquidation of the Newfoundland companies, and are now all in the possession of one Gordon McL. Daley, in Halifax, Nova Scotia, who is the attorney for the liquidator of the Newfoundland companies, R. E. Fradsham, of St. Stephen, New Brunswick. * * * On December 11, 1933, National Public Utility Investing Corporation acquired all the property of the four Newfoundland companies.

Thus we see how Mr. Hopson defies the tax examination and gets away with it.

MR. MELLON AND THE BOARD OF TAX APPEALS

We have read much the last several months concerning the trial of Mr. Mellon's tax case now pending before the Board of Tax Appeals. The average citizen no doubt wonders why witnesses for Mr. Mellon are not required to disclose certain documentary evidence the same as required in Federal equity courts. Before the committee, conducting hearings on the revenue bill of 1926, J. Kelmer Korner, Jr., then chairman of the Board, then testified:

We felt that all of the rules of evidence observed in a court of law not necessary, because there is no jury.

Before the same committee Mr. Charles D. Hamel, the first chairman of the Board, testified:

We attempted to adopt in our rules the spirit of the equity rules of the Federal courts. The Federal equity courts, as a general thing, will let nearly anything into the record for whatever it may be worth.

Yet we find Mr. Van Fossan appointed during the reign of Mr. Mellon prohibiting certain bank records from going into the record in the trial of this tax case before him.

On June 30, 1935, there were 1,477 cases before the Board which had been tried but in which decisions had not been rendered. Why is it that it takes from 1 to 2 years after hearing the cases before the Board can make its decision, even in many simple cases?

I have previously pointed out several existing loopholes in our tax laws that should be amended. These measures are now pending before the Ways and Means Committee. Several of these amendments have been favorably acted upon by this committee at previous sessions, only to have their labors stricken out by amendments in another body. I sincerely hope that this committee will give favorable consideration to these amendments in the consideration of new tax legislation soon to be presented in keeping with the President's recommendations on this subject. I heartily favor the President's recent tax message and trust that same will be speedily enacted into law. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS].

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Speaker, some days ago I stated on the floor, during consideration of the Army appropriation bill, that I intended to have something further to say concerning the permanent Neutrality Act which had been reported favorably out of the Foreign Affairs Committee at that time, but which was being put to sleep by its enemies from without and within our country. Since that time the bill has been pronounced dead, and everyone here is familiar with the fact that as a compromise there has been reenacted into law, to cover a period of 14 additional months, the temporary Neutrality Act of 1935, plus only two amendments.

The temporary Neutrality Act passed last year, and which expired on February 29 this year, provided, first, an absolute embargo upon the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to belligerent countries; second, prohibition of the carrying of arms, ammunition, and implements of war in American vessels to or for warring nations; third, restriction against the use of our ports by submarines of belligerent countries and the prohibition of the use of the United States as a base for supplying belligerent ships with arms, ammunition, or implements of war; fourth, restraint upon our citizens to prevent traveling upon belligerent vessels.

The so-called administration-McReynolds neutrality bill, which was reported favorably out of the Foreign Affairs Committee, added several provisions to the temporary act, the most important of which are: First, an embargo upon the export of such other articles or materials, above normal exports, as the President may find are used in the manufacture of arms, ammunition, or implements of war or in the conduct of war, when he shall find that such embargo will serve to promote the security and preserve the neutrality of the United States; second, discretionary authority to require all commercial transactions with belligerent countries to be conducted at the risk of the shipper, when such transactions threaten to involve our country in war; third, limitation of use of passports for travel on belligerent vessels from our ports and emphasizing that such travel will be at the risk of our nationals.

The new compromise temporary act expiring May 1, 1937, scraps many provisions of the permanent bill and adds to the temporary act of last year the following two additional provisions: One, prohibition of credits to belligerent governments, except ordinary short-time commercial credits to aid in financing legal exports; two, reasserts the Monroe Doctrine by exempting from its provisions American republics when at war with foreign enemies.

It is useless for me now to dwell upon my disappointment and the disappointment of millions of American citizens that a neutrality policy more comprehensive than the temporary act has not and will not be enacted into law at this session of Congress. We have had the last of neutrality legislation for this year, and everybody here knows it—that is, unless a bomb explodes in our midst, and then it will be too late. Both political parties are afraid of the subject, as this is election year and there is no desire to offend any of those foreign racial groups now so powerful in our country. It is feared that any more extensive legislation on the subject may offend the delicate sensibilities of Englishmen, or Italians, or Germans, or Frenchmen, or whatnots who happen to live within our borders—legally and illegally. These gentlemen call themselves Americans; most of them prosper here and many are fed at the public trough by the taxpayers' money—yet the hearts of many of them seem to be on the other side when legislation comes which may directly or indirectly affect the country from which they came—no matter what the best interest of the United States, their new home, may be.

There is no doubt in my mind that much good will come out of the temporary act. It would serve no useful purpose to lament now the failure of enactment into law of section 4 of the McReynolds bill, which restricted to normal peacetime amounts shipments from this country to belligerents of materials and supplies that are used in the manufacture of arms, ammunition, and implements of war. This was the section of the bill against which the onslaught was made both by certain business interests of this country which were enriched by the World War and hope to be enriched by the next; as well as by certain foreign nations and foreign elements in our own country, who felt that the section would work to the detriment of their warlike intentions abroad. I do not forget, either, that there was also wide divergence of opinion of patriotic Americans, who have no ax to grind, as to whether or not this provision would bring about the desired results. There are two sides to that question, and I am not arguing it pro or con now.

There are, however, two obstacles that proponents of neutrality in Congress have met in their efforts to pass adequate neutrality legislation about which the people of our country should know. The first is the pernicious influence brought to bear upon Congress and the people generally through propaganda by un-American groups against neutrality legislation and the peculiar vulnerability of the United States to influences of that kind. The second is the grave danger we face and the great risk we run in passing neutrality legislation of only a temporary nature. If the principle of neutrality legislation is good for our country, it is good as a permanent policy. The problem is too big to be handled by temporary stopgap legislation. Even if the temporary act already passed is not strengthened this session by added provisions it should at least be made permanent before this Congress adjourns. It is impossible to tell now what the international situation will be or what influences and propaganda will be brought to bear to rob the American people of their birthright of freedom and peace if another great world war comes before this Congress convenes next year.

If you think I am an alarmist, take a look at the world today. Italy and Ethiopia at war. English-Italian relations strained, the press of each country firing broadsides of hate against the other, and the British Fleet, armed to the teeth, guards the Mediterranean, the life artery of the Empire. Russia arming and warning Japan that further invasion of Mongolia means war. France, in deadly fear of Germany, perfecting a mutual-assistance pact with Russia. Germany repudiates the last vestige of the Versailles Treaty and once again sends troops to the Rhine.

What does it all mean? It means that Europe is preparing for war, and only God can prevent it. It means that Europe has learned nothing from the stark-naked horror of the last World War or from the greed and selfish nationalism that preceded and followed it. It means that soon boys will be marching and dying. It means a million broken hearts. It means starvation and bankruptcy. And it should mean to us a determination to stay out of it. We owe that to ourselves. The United States has always shown a sense of obligation to downtrodden peoples all over the earth, but that does not change the fact that our primary obligation is to our own people.

Holy Writ teaches us not only that we are our brother's keeper but also that "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel."

I shall not at this time recount the gruesome horrors of war or the physical and moral wounds resulting from war. Humanitarians have written and spoken on the subject for ages. You, yourselves, have seen the fruits of the last Great War. Over 4,000,000 men called to the colors in this country to fight for a great ideal. Over 2,000,000 of these men sent by our country to fight on foreign soil. Tens of thousands of them never came back. Other tens of thousands returned from the camp and battle ruined for life. And what did we get out of it except disappointed hopes for the realization of a great ideal? It cost our Nation at least $50,000,000,000, and we asked for and received nothing in return. We earned the hatred and ingratitude of the people whose national identity we had actually preserved. We have even seen many who profited in this country and elsewhere out of that war attempt to discredit the achievements of our own soldiers. We have seen powerful groups and organizations composed largely of men who made fortunes out of the World War brand as demagogues Members of this Congress who have sought to compensate, in some measure at least, our service men of that war for their wounds and sacrifices incident to their service. It does not take men or nations long to forget.

Propaganda put us in that war, rightly or wrongly, and propaganda can do the same thing again. Let us, therefore, be diligent in the future to find out from what source propaganda comes and the justice of its cause.

Allow me to quote Mark Twain on war—from The Mysterious Stranger:

There has never been a just one, never an honorable one, on the part of the instigator of the war. I can see a million years ahead, and this rule will never change in so many as half a dozen instances.

The loud little handful, as usual, will shout for the war. The pulpit will warily and cautiously object at first; the great big, dull bulk of the nation will rub its sleepy eyes and try to make out why there should be a war and will say, earnestly and indignantly, "It is unjust and dishonorable, and there is no necessity for it."

Then the handful will shout louder. A few fair men on the other side will argue and reason against the war with speech and pen and at first will have a hearing and be applauded; but it will not last long; those others will shout them; and presently the antiwar audiences will thin out and lose popularity.

Before long you will see this curious thing: The speakers stoned from the platform and free speech strangled by hordes of furious men who in their secret hearts are still at one with those stoned speakers, as earlier, but do not dare to say so.

And now the whole nation, pulpit and all, will take up the war cry and shout itself hoarse and mob any honest man who ventures to open his mouth; and presently such mouths will cease to open.

Next the statesmen will invent cheap lies, putting the blame upon the nation that is attacked; and every man will be glad of those conscience-soothing falsities and will diligently study them and refuse to examine any refutations of them; and thus he will by and by convince himself that the war is just and will thank God for the better sleep he enjoys after this process of grotesque self-deception.

There we have eloquent evidence of the utter futility of this Nation's or any other nation's attempting to embark on a new road to neutrality when war clouds hover, propaganda reigns, money comes pouring in, prejudice is rampant, and reason is disenthroned.

Lord Northcliffe, of England, once said that it took about $5,000,000 to get a small nation involved in the World War and 20 times that amount to get America in.

The next time it should be our purpose to see that propaganda alone will not involve us. The other war should have taught the American people a lesson they can never forget.

It would seem that on account of the distance of America from Europe and the absence of direct contact with the nations of that continent, we would not be so glaringly vulnerable to propaganda emanating from that side of the Atlantic. While it is true we have certain geographical advantages in this connection, it is also true that some of the constitutional privileges that helped to make this country great and a free land are the very vehicles often used to stir our people to the point of hysteria where they will be willing to go to war—I refer to the freedom of the press, freedom of speech, and now the comparative freedom of use of radio waves.

The other point of our vulnerability to propaganda is the immediate presence of foreign racial groups in our midst. Let any question come before this Congress affecting the interests of their mother countries, and you see some of these groups go to work creating an atmosphere favorable to the country from which they came. It is true that blood is thicker than water, but such practices are un-American. These people came here through the liberality of our immigration laws of former years, they came here because they knew that in all the world there was no other land to offer them the same chances for life, liberty, and happiness. They should prove themselves Americans in thought, word, and deed, or be sent back to the country from which they came. We have in this country about 16,500,000 foreign born and 7,500,000 aliens. We have here 3,500,000 aliens who are illegally in this country, and many of these are being fed and clothed with American relief money or are robbing real Americans of jobs they are entitled to. Once the mother country of certain of these aliens becomes involved in war in Europe or elsewhere, we will often find that they will exert every effort, through propaganda, to involve this country in war on the side of the home they left to come to this free land. We may just as well realize that something must be done by Congress to clear up this situation. The danger is real and must be met. The Dies bill, which is now tied up in committee, would be a long and proper step in that direction.

I would not have anyone construe anything I am saying in this connection as a reflection upon the Americanism and patriotism of several millions of the foreign-born people now in this country, who came here with the full intention of becoming naturalized at the first opportunity, who have cut away from their old home ties and who have embraced our philosophy of life and government. They are an asset to our country and we welcome them.

In my zeal for a permanent, comprehensive, American neutrality law I would make it plain that I do not renounce the theory that international cooperation is the surest method to prevent war. In fact, international cooperation is the only way to bring about a warless world, and I hope the day will soon come when representatives of every nation can sit down around a table and decide honestly and unselfishly to outlaw war. I believe in the principles of the Kellogg Pact, in the Hague Court, and every other step that has been taken to prevent the recurrence of war that does not involve us in the results of European diplomatic duplicity. The American people turned thumbs down on the League of Nations not because its terms embodied faulty idealism, not because they do not believe in cooperative effort for peace, but because they became convinced that certain European nations, while protesting to the heavens their purity of purpose, were inspired only by selfishness, revenge, and greed.

The international road to peace is growing up in weeds and is cluttered with wrecks brought about by road hogs who attempted to travel that highway in their own selfish interest and not in the interest of peace. Through neutrality legislation we build another highway for our own safety. In the event of trouble on the international highway, we say to our own people, "You cannot travel that way. We circumscribe your rights for your own good." It may be that this new way will be rough at first, and it is possible that the drivers of the magnificent vehicles of munitions manufacturers and others who make millions out of this war business will rave about the roughness of the road and their right to travel where they please. But, gentlemen, this road and this legislation are not proposed for the benefit of those who wish to trade upon the miseries of war. It is proposed in the interest of the great masses of our people who furnish the cannon fodder for war and who shed the tears and starve because of its folly.

I would protect this road with an adequate Army and a powerful Navy, with the hope that we would never be forced to use either; but should it be necessary in defense to use them, then use them to the last grain of powder, to the last gun, to the last ship, to the last man. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11691, the legislative appropriation bill for 1937, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CROSSER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday, March 17, after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia may sit during the sessions of the House for the rest of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE NEW PHILIPPINE COMMONWEALTH AND CONGRESS

Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I received permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I have been informed by the Public Printer that it will make two and a half pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and cost $113. I accordingly ask unanimous consent to insert the remarks in the RECORD according to the regulations of the Joint Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KOCIALKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the Record, I include the following address delivered by former Senator Harry B. Hawes, on March 6, 1936:

The Philippine problem has not been solved, contrary to popular understanding. We have laid the groundwork for its solution in a spirit of cooperation and friendly feeling.

But there is a 10-year period intervening between the inauguration of what is now the Philippine Commonwealth and what may then be a free Philippine republic.

What transpires during this 10 years will give the solution, or the revival in more difficult form, of the Philippine problem.

The eyes of the world were turned on our attitude to these 14,000,000 people when Congress had before it the bill by which we offered them their ultimate liberty as a free nation.

The eyes of the world looked to the islands, watching their reaction to our offer. Today the world, and especially the Orient, closely observes what we are doing with respect to the islands, and watches with equal interest what the islands do of their own accord.

We face the decision of crowning our 37 years of fine effort with respect to these people with the hope of a completed task or ruining the record of those 37 years by selfish blindness to our present duty.

During the 10-year period we can make or break the future of this new Christian nation.

In my opinion, there are two factors of civilization which have contributed more than any others to human progress.

The first is the Christian religion; I mean the philosophy of Christianity.

The second is colonization, where one nation takes possession of the land and directs the conduct of peoples of a different race.

The continents of North and South America were penetrated by colonization efforts of England, Holland, France, and Spain. All tried or experimented with colonization in these two hemispheres. Their problem was not so difficult because of the vast areas in these hemispheres and the small native population which inhabited them.

The United States has never been a colonizing nation for the very simple controlling reason that colonization was unnecessary. It has not, even to a limited degree, developed its own acreage. Expansion, therefore, has not been necessary.

With the exception of the acquisition of Alaska, which came into our possession by purchase to round out, as we might say, our Pacific coast line and for the protection of our fishing rights, colonization has never been approved by our people.

Some 40 years ago there was established in the Sandwich Islands an independent Hawaiian government, with an American as president, Mr. Dole, which requested the assumption of sovereignty by the United States. This was granted by our Government. The acceptance at that time—and it was my privilege as a young lawyer to represent this Republic—involved such considerations as safety for the American coast and shipping to securing a defense against the development by a foreign power of a point of naval advantage within short sailing of our shores.

With the intelligent cooperation of the American Government, one of its harbors will some day make it a Gibraltar which, if properly equipped, will do more than any one single enterprise to protect us from war in the Orient; or, in case it comes, to effect a decision favorable to the interests of the American people.

The other two noncontinental areas both came to us not by intent to colonize or acquire offshore property, but as an incident—we might almost say an accident—connected with our War with Spain in 1898.

In that year the repeated and ineffectual struggles of the people of Cuba to secure either an advance in local self-government or independence—a movement which had been successful in the larger continents of North and South America—had been a record of continuous brutalities and atrocities.

The American Nation was shocked; its sympathies were aroused by the methods then employed by the Spanish. Enterprising American newspapers told the story each day to our people, and when finally one of our great American battleships, the Maine, was destroyed in the harbor of Habana—it was believed at the time that it was the work of Spanish agents—our Government declared war upon Spain, distinctly stating that it was not a war of conquest for territorial expansion but one for humanity.

As the result of this war we came into possession of the Philippine Islands, a responsibility which at the time could not be avoided.

IN THE PACIFIC

The Spanish squadron in Cuban waters was quickly captured or sunk, but some 7,000 miles away, in Manila Bay in the Philippine Islands there was another squadron of Spanish warships.

Admiral Dewey was assigned the task of destroying this Pacific squadron, and on May 1, 1898, our American vessels entered the Manila harbor and secured the surrender of this Spanish squadron.

This was accomplished without the loss of a single American ship, without the loss of a single American sailor. Only one man died in our battle fleet. This was the result of a heart stroke. And Americans for the first time entered into the life of the Filipino people.

The natives of Cuba had been unable to secure their liberation from the domination of Spain, but when Admiral Dewey arrived in Manila Bay he found that, without the assistance of the United States or any other foreign nation, the native population of the Philippine Islands had swept the Spanish from all the islands and had them surrounded in the capital city of Manila.

He found a condition where it was merely a matter of time when the Spanish, driven into one spot and surrounded, would be forced to surrender to the Filipinos.

It is necessary to relate the foregoing because we cannot understand the new Philippine Commonwealth until we become familiar with some of the historical facts back of our acquisition of these islands.

The Spanish squadron had been destroyed. Our American troops (wonderful men they were) were on the way. Upon their arrival, the Spanish commander requested that the Philippine troops be not permitted to enter the city at the time of surrender, so the Filipinos who had penned them in waited outside while the American troops marched in and took possession.

Out of this incident came bad feeling and bad blood, and after a while some fighting between the Filipino troops and our American soldiers.

This precipitated a conflict between American troops and Filipinos, a conflict which lasted over 3 years, in which we lost 4,165 men, and the Filipinos, so far as I have been able to ascertain, lost 16,000 men. We expended in this war $185,000,000.

We went to war to liberate Cuba. We finished the war in that sector in a little less than 4 months, with a loss of only 353 in combat. Compare this with what happened in the Philippines. Three and a half months in Cuba, 3 years in the Philippines; 353 casualties in Cuba and 4,165 in the Philippines. The war in the Philippines took the lives of 20,000 men.

At that time the population in Cuba was approximately 2,500,000 or 3,000,000, and the population in the Philippines over 9,000,000.

It is probably one of the most curious facts in all history that we gave sovereignty to the Cubans in a brief struggle and we assumed sovereignty over the Philippines in a struggle lasting 3 years.

After having assumed sovereignty, there was on our part uncertainty, hesitation, and indecision as to what we were to do with them.

We were faced with the situation of restoring them to the sovereignty of Spain or transferring them to England, France, Germany, or some other colonizing nation. It was a difficult problem for our American statesmen, and they finally decided to retain American sovereignty.

Another historical fact which stands out conspicuously should always be remembered—that in our treaty of peace with Spain we granted her a period of 10 years of uninterrupted trade intercourse with the Philippine Islands.

It is interesting because the Filipino people claim, and with entire justification, that if Spain was allowed 10 years of uninterrupted trade relationships, certainly the new Commonwealth is entitled to at least this consideration, or stating it another way, to equal consideration with the right accorded Spain of uninterrupted trade relations for that period.

They believe that if we did this for Spain there are many more compelling reasons why the same consideration should now be given to the Filipino people and for at least the same period.

Our Americans found in the Philippines a race of Malays who had been under the domination of Spain for over three and a half centuries, a race which had continuously fought for its freedom, there having been 22 distinct and separate armed efforts to secure this freedom.

The Filipinos are a likable people, vivacious, with a love of music, a keen sense of humor, a ready laugh, and a courteous deportment for which we must give some credit to the Spanish. An authoritative English writer describes them "the natural gentlemen of the Orient."

Of all the teeming millions in the Orient, they are the only Christian nation. With a present population of some 14,000,000, 13,500,000 are Christians and belong to the Christian Church. Only approximately 500,000 are Mohammedans and pagans, a matter well worthy of our earnest consideration now and in the future; that is, if we believe that Christianity is one of the foremost elements in civilization.

During our occupancy of the islands there have been no violent disturbances, there have been no insurrections. Our American Army and Navy have never been compelled to fire a single gun or make an arrest since the early days immediately succeeding the war.

On the contrary, when the United States entered the World War, and we withdrew our Army and our Navy, the entire defense of the islands was entrusted to Filipino Scouts. They volunteered enlistment in the American Army, and this assistance would have been utilized had the war lasted longer. They raised money for the Red Cross and offered to donate an armed vessel for the use of our Navy.

There are in the Philippine Islands today only about 6,000 Americans; about 58,000 Chinese; scattered throughout the islands about 6,000 Japanese, but, concentrated in one spot, 14,000 additional Japanese. Of other European nationalities the total will probably not exceed the American population of 6,000.

WHAT WE DID FOR THE PHILIPPINES

While even today some of the administrative activities of our Government in the Philippine Islands are in the War Department, represented by the Bureau of Insular Affairs, the actual administration was quickly placed in the hands of a civil commission, and it was the influence of this commission and its successors, and the very able men we sent out as Governors General, which developed a theory of governing a dependent people unique and without parallel in the history of colonial government throughout the world. Indicating that all of our American national administrations have considered our sovereignty to be more or less of a temporary character.

The administration of our other noncontinental areas, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, has in recent years been given to the Interior Department. Alaska has never been under the direction of the War Department. So we find this colonial possession the only one remaining under the War Department.

It is an interesting historical fact that no other nation—and that includes England, France, Spain, Holland, and Italy—administers its colonial affairs through its department of war. They are all under some civilian direction.

The work performed by our civil commissions and the Governors General in the Philippines are models of thoughtful, considerate progress toward self-government and preparation for future responsibilities.

There was a gradual extension of Philippine autonomy, an increased replacement of American with Philippine officials, of American teachers with Philippine teachers, of an American constabulary by a Philippine constabulary, of American health officers by Philippine health officers, until today the number of Americans retained or employed in executive capacity is extremely limited.

I have read repeatedly the statement that our Government has spent $850,000,000 on the Philippines.

This statement is fallacious if we consider the civilian population, for, as a matter of fact, with the single and sole exception of $3,000,000 appropriated by Congress for population rehabilitation after the conclusion of the Philippine war, not a dollar has left our Treasury for the benefit of the civil population of the Philippines.

The salaries of the Governors General of the Philippines was $18,000 a year, and the moneys spent for the support of his house, his yacht, his automobiles, and his servants have from the beginning all been paid from the treasury of the Philippine Islands.

In addition, he had set aside for his use, in the way of a cabinet or official advisers, the annual sum of 250,000 pesos (translated into American dollars, $125,000) a year, which he spent in selecting men of his choosing to act for him in the capacity of a cabinet. This exceeds the salaries of the Cabinet officers of the President of the United States.

From the beginning of our occupancy until the present day the only money for civil purposes that ever came out of our Treasury was for the payment of the salaries of the two Resident Commissioners to the United States, amounting to $20,000 a year.

We read of the leper colony, and one not informed believes it was financed by the American Government, but this is not correct; the support came from the Philippine treasury, not from our Treasury.

The great works of sanitation, education, and the building of roads was done with Philippine money, not American money.

The philosophy that we have given to the Philippine people from the earliest days is remarkable, distinct, and unique. We sent there school mistresses and school teachers, fine, earnest types of Americans.

Whether wisely or not, their earliest lessons to the youth of the Philippines contained our struggles for liberty, of Patrick Henry, George Washington, and of our battles for freedom.

Our soldiers who remained in the islands each year patriotically celebrated the Fourth of July. It was the occasion of patriotic speeches, all describing the struggles for liberty, independence, and self-determination.

We could not expect that it would not impress youthful minds with the value of liberty and independence. Their natural inclinations were stimulated by our American teaching.

It may be that the English and the French and the Hollanders were right in their theory of colonization and that we were wrong; but, whether right or wrong, we adopted our own course, and I, for one, am proud of it.

WHAT THE PHILIPPINES DID FOR THEMSELVES

We have seen how, during our sovereignty, the Philippines have paid the entire cost of government, but no matter what our example or what our guidance might have been, if there had not been cooperation and peaceful acquiescence to our leadership, small progress would have been made.

We must give credit to these people for this cooperation; we cannot deny it to them. We cannot take away from them the credit of no disorder, no revolt during all these years, and of quiet, peaceful acquiescence under the sovereignty of the United States, working in harmony with the plans for their development.

Their standard of living has been raised until it is now much higher than that of any oriental country.

It therefore costs them more to live in the manner taught them by Americans.

But the most amazing record is that of literacy. According to the last census, that of 1918, people who could read and write were 49.2 percent of the population over 10 years of age. It is estimated that the percentage of literacy today is at least 60 percent—higher than that of many nations, greater than that of any of the Central American Republics.

One visiting the Philippines will find, if he has the desire, Philippine graduates from practically every one of the great American universities. They have an overwhelming desire for education. They have been criticized for it by some practical-minded people who believe that they are overeducated; that is, that they are educated out of a class of manual labor and made dissatisfied with its occupations. This may be true. It may be that their ambition has produced more lawyers, doctors, and engineers than their nation requires, but that is true in other portions of the world, even in our own country.

So while we take credit for raising these people to the highest standard in the Orient, we must be fair about it and give them credit for the things they themselves have done.

A PROMISE FULFILLED

Beginning with the administration of President McKinley and continuing through each national administration since, we find a promise more or less definite for ultimate independence. Sometimes it has been qualified by "when they are ready for it", or "when they have reached the capacity for self-government", but without exception, subject to these qualifications, we have told them and promised them that they should have their freedom ultimately if they so desired.

And now we have kept our promise.

On a recent visit to the islands our great Vice President, the Honorable John Nance Garner, referred specifically to a promise which Americans had kept and it was referred to by the able Speaker of the House, the Honorable JOSEPH W. BYRNS.

This promise was kept by finally offering them independence at the end of 10 years provided they would write a constitution which would be acceptable to our President, and that they would do certain things and preserve in the constitution those vital elements contained in the first 10 amendments to our Constitution, which we call the Bill of Rights, religious liberty, freedom of the press, trial by jury, protection against unlawful search and seizure, and all the fine things that the Anglo-Saxon people had fought for during generations.

Let me say, in passing, this constitution was written in the Philippines by Filipinos. It was not an American production submitted to them for their approval. It was the result of the work of Philippine brains.

WILL THE NEW COMMONWEALTH SUCCEED?

The Philippine Commonwealth will succeed if Philippine officials will preserve law and order and write into statute law those things that their constitution provides, and if they will continue their work of education, sanitation, and health. That is their part of the job.

But it is within the power of the United States Congress to utterly destroy them by wrecking their economic life.

It is within the power of our Congress to wreck a world record in enlightened colonization; to tear down an American ideal of 37 years; to destroy the belief in the Orient that Americans are great and liberal administrators.

It is within the power of our Congress to blot out, blur, or destroy some of the most illuminating pages of American history.

We must retain under consideration the stern fact that during our entire period of sovereignty the American Congress, by legislative enactments, has controlled all of the exports and imports of these island people.

We confined them to trade exclusively with the United States.

Until the recent unprecedented infiltration of Japanese goods into the islands, within the period of the last 5 years, the Philippines were the eighth best customer the United States had in the world.

That is something to think about. They have had no trade relations with the outside world that is worthy of consideration. They have had no opportunity to build up a trade with foreign countries. The American Congress by statute prevented this being done.

Just as some of our States depend upon their prosperity upon manufactures, others upon agriculture, others upon mining, others upon special productions of one kind or another, the three great sources of national life in the Philippines which furnish its life-blood are its sugar, its coconuts, and its hemp.

We gave Spain 10 years in which to adjust its relations with the islands subsequent to our victory. Now the question is whether we are going to destroy piecemeal the sugar business and the coconut business of the islands, and will we preserve the free flow of raw material of hemp—not the manufactured article but the raw material—for the use of our manufacturers?

Let us review what we have done almost since our offer of independence was made.

With a production of 1,570,000 tons of sugar, we have given the Philippines a quota of 1,015,000, and thus cut their exports to the United States by 500,000 tons, approximating a loss of $35,000,000.

We have put an excise tax of 3 cents a pound on the products of their coconut groves. That is equivalent to a duty of approximately 100 percent on coconut oil.

We authorized a payment of $23,000,000 to the islands to meet the situation arising out of the gold-clause order, merely placing their currency reserves on a parity with that of the United States, and an attempt is now being made to take that money away.

We passed a bill to give them the benefit of the excise tax on coconut oil, and there is now in the Treasury of the United States, due them under the law, approximately $26,000,000. And it is now proposed that we take that away.

These accumulated losses of $35,000,000, $26,000,000 in coconut-oil-tax revenue, and $23,000,000 under the gold clause propose a loss to them of approximately $84,000,000 at the very beginning and in the most critical years of their experiment in national self-government.

We find, therefore, that no matter how efficiently the Filipinos may develop in the matter of government, after all it lies within the power of our Congress to break them, to smash them, to destroy their economic and financial life.

They have selected as their President the Honorable Manuel L. Quezon, an experienced, patriotic Filipino statesman, who, with his associate, Hon. Sergio Osmena, was elected by a majority so conclusive, so overwhelming, without disorder, that they have been accepted as the voice of the people. The Filipinos are putting their house in order. It is a difficult task.

They have sent to the United States as their Commissioner—in effect their minister—an able lawyer who has served in an advisory cabinet capacity under our American Governors General and as the speaker of their legislature, the Honorable Quintin Paredes.

We have in the islands, as the representative of the President and the United States Government, a distinguished and able man, the Honorable Frank Murphy, trusted and beloved.

They are all doing their part.

With this joint leadership and an understanding American Congress, with the sympathy and interest of our President Roosevelt, the new Christian Republic is on its way, unless its economic life is destroyed by acts of our own.

Right-thinking Americans all hope that when we say "good-bye"—if we do—10 years from now, it will be done with a handshake, in a gracious manner, according to fine American traditions and in keeping with our previous record in the islands.

But, if, in reality, through misunderstanding or selfishness, it should develop that it is not a handshake—that it is in effect a kick—it would be a disgraceful gesture for our Government to make toward its long-time honor.

This we cannot do with honor.

We cannot do it without immediate loss of American prestige throughout the Orient.

It cannot be done without criticism throughout the world.

Our 37-year guardianship should not now be dimmed with littleness or uninformed selfishness.

POWERS OF THE UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a speech that I made over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered recently over the radio:

The right of the Supreme Court of the United States to declare invalid acts of Congress in conflict with the Constitution is a principle of our Government so self-evident as to need no proof, and the contention that such right and power does not and should not exist is an argument so unsound on its face as to appear to need no reply. Nevertheless, exactly that contention is now being made in certain quarters in this country, has appeared in certain newspapers with considerable demagogic appeal; it must be answered, not to disprove that which needs no disproving but in order that statements the uninformed might accept as sound may not go unchallenged.

The argument has been made that the power of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress contrary to the Constitution void does not exist in law and is an arbitrary assumption of power unnecessary and harmful to our form of government.

I repeat, this contention is so unsound that it carries its own refutation on its face, but I shall endeavor to refute it at some length to make the answer completely clear and conclusive. I do not purport to give here the results of an exhaustive investigation of this question, not because such investigation might weaken my argument, but solely for the simple reason that no exhaustive investigation is necessary to show that this power of the highest court in our land is founded upon the highest authority, and to show that without it American constitutional government, as we know it, would cease to exist.

Before going forward with this discussion, I wish to state I do not believe that I should be criticized as being a Tory or a reactionary. To defend the power of the Court to declare improper acts of Congress contrary to the Constitution does not mean that I am opposed to a liberal interpretation or to amendments of that instrument; nor does it mean that I am opposed to progress or innovations in our system of government necessary or advisable as the result of modern developments in our economic and social situation. Nor do I feel that there is anything so sacred in the Supreme Court, or the Constitution, as to make them immune to constructive criticism, or that there is anything so immutable in each and every part of the Constitution as to condemn those who may suggest changes therein.

Now, it may be admitted at the outset of this discussion that the Constitution does not state, in so many words, that the Court may nullify acts of Congress contrary to the Constitution, but though that power may not be expressed in so many words, it is so clearly implicit in the document itself, and so obviously was intended to exist as a part of the American system of constitutional government, that no man in all our history has been able to successfully deny it, despite the many attempts, largely motivated by political expediency, to do so. For 150 years that power has been recognized and obeyed by every loyal citizen of the country, and obeyed even though, as Oliver Lodge once said:

"The court can neither lay taxes nor raise armies and is helpless to enforce its decrees unless the Nation as a whole will willingly obey them."

Though it may be argued that a reading of the Constitution nowhere reveals a power granted in express words to the Court to declare acts of the legislature invalid, a simple analysis of the principles of political economy upon which the Constitution is based and even a very slight acquaintance with the history of that document will convince even the most skeptical that the Constitution contains a grant of such power expressly and impliedly, and that without it the continued existence of the Constitution, as we now know it, would be impossible.

Well before the American Constitution came into being courts in the American Colonies, as well as in England, had refused to recognize acts of Parliament or of the colonial legislatures as binding and effective where such acts were contrary to natural justice or to the fundamental law of the land. Precedents are many and it will be possible in the short time here available to cite only a few.

David Brearley, chief justice of New Jersey, and subsequently a member of the Constitutional Convention, in the case of Holmes v. Walton, considered the exercise of such judicial power where the New Jersey Legislature had provided a six-man jury for certain types of trials, and the case was argued in the Supreme Court of New Jersey in 1779 on constitutional grounds. On certiorari the court held the statute void. Typical of resultant comments was that of Gouverneur Morris, who, speaking of this decision, wrote the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1785 and said:

"Such power in judges is dangerous, but unless it somewhere exists the time employed in framing a bill of rights and framing the Government was merely thrown away."

In 1796 the decision of Holmes v. Walton was followed in New Jersey in the case of Taylor v. Rodney (4 Halstead 427). In Rhode Island, in 1786, Trevett v. Weeden (Pamphlet of J. B. Varnum, Providence, 1787), reached a similar result. In Virginia, as early as 1782, the courts had clearly asserted the power to declare a law void for lack of conformity to the constitution. George Mason, one of the members of the Constitutional Convention, as far back as 1772, in the case of Robbins v. Hardaway (Jefferson's Reports Va. 109), argued against the validity of an act as being in violation of the natural law.

In 1776, in the case of Commonwealth v. Caton (4 Call (Va.) 1), the court unequivocally stated its power to declare invalid an unconstitutional act of the assembly. When the question was raised George Wythe, subsequently a member of the Constitutional Convention and in this very case sitting as a judge, declared:

"If the whole legislature (an event to be deprecated) should attempt to overleap the bounds prescribed to them by the people, I, in administering the public justice of the country, will meet the united efforts at my seat in this tribunal, and (pointing to the constitution) will say to them: 'Here is the limit of your authority, and hither shall you go, but no further.'"

All the judges on that bench concurred in this opinion, including Chancellor Blair, subsequently a member of the Constitutional Convention.

In 1778 the Virginia Legislature passed an act of attainder, and upon the trial of defendant for the crime of highway robbery the court disregarded the act of attainder and ordered the prisoner to be tried (Burke, History of Virginia, vol. 4, pp. 305, 306).

Again, in 1788, the year before the adoption of the United States Constitution, the question was raised in the Case of the Judges (4 Call (Va.) 15), when the court held that "the constitution and the acts (of the legislature) were in opposition; that they could not exist together, and the former must control the operation of the latter."

In Connecticut in 1785 in the Synsbury case (Kirby's Reports (Conn. 444)), the courts invalidated an act of the State assembly as being in violation of the provincial charter, which was then the fundamental law of the State.

In 1787, 2 years before the adoption of the United States Constitution, and while the Constitutional Convention was in session, the Supreme Court of North Carolina elaborately argued and considered the power of the judiciary to declare unconstitutional an act of the legislature in the case of Bayard v. Singleton (1 Martin, 42). The court stated that it had such power and declared an act of the legislature unconstitutional. The court said:

"But that it was clear that no act they could pass could by any means repeal or alter the constitution, because if they could do this they would at the same instant of time destroy their own existence as legislature and dissolve the government thereby established. Consequently the constitution (which the judicial power was bound to take notice of as much as of any other law whatever), standing in full force as the fundamental law of the land, notwithstanding the act (of the legislature) on which the present motion was grounded, the same act must, of course, in that instance stand as abrogated and without any effect."

In 1792 the South Carolina courts, in the case of Bowman v. Middleton (1 Bay 252), declared an act of the provincial legislature passed in 1712 void as a violation of Magna Carta.

Again, in New York, in the well-known case of Rutgers v. Waddington, decided in 1784 (Dawson's Pamphlet, 44), Alexander Hamilton contended that the Trespass Act was unconstitutional. Hamilton argued that the law violated natural justice, and the decision was placed upon that ground.

The effect of all these cases cannot be better set forth than in the words of Hampton L. Carson, Esq., former attorney general of Pennsylvania, who states, in an able article in the University of Pennsylvania Law Review (vol. 60, p. 692):

"It is beyond the reach of controversy, therefore, that when the Federal Convention met in 1787 for the purpose of framing a constitution for the United States, the idea of controlling the legislature through the judiciary was familiar to its leading members. It had been asserted in New Jersey, Virginia, New York, Rhode Island, and North Carolina."

With these decisions in mind, we may now proceed to a consideration of what transpired with respect to this question during the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention itself.

Various proposals were made in the Convention to provide for a review of acts of Congress by various agencies of one sort or another, one suggestion being that a "council of revision", to be composed of the members of the Court and the President, be established to review legislation of doubtful constitutionality. Such suggestion was voted down by the Convention, and it is argued from that premise that the Convention never intended to give the Supreme Court the power to review acts of Congress. This argument, however, expounded from a proper historical viewpoint, instead of supporting, itself refutes the very contention made. Some slight investigation of the proceedings of the Convention is all that is necessary to make this clear.

On the same day this suggestion was turned down, the existing clause in the Constitution covering the question (article IV) was adopted. This clause was written almost entirely by Luther Martin, of Maryland, who publicly stated that he had framed it to put in the hands of the judiciary, not the Congress, this power (Farrand, vol. II, pp. 28-29). What more complete refutation of this argument could be found, then, than the words of Luther Martin, voting against the council of revision and advocating his own clause, then adopted in substantially the same form as it now stands, when he said:

"As to the constitutionality of laws, that point will come before the judges in their official character. In this character they have a negative on the laws."

Admitting the soundness of Martin's view, Mason, of Virginia, another member of the committee, said of the proposed Federal judiciary:

"They could declare a constitutional law void."

And Rutledge stated on the floor of the Convention:

"The judges never ought to give their opinion on a law until it comes before them."

As was said by Gerry of Massachusetts, speaking of the judiciary under the new Constitution:

"They will have a sufficient check against encroachments on their own department by their exposition of the laws, which involves a power of deciding on their constitutionality. In some of the States the judges had actually set aside laws as being against the Constitution. This was done, too, with general approbation." (Farrand, vol. I, p. 97.)

Farrand, in his The Records of the Federal Convention, volume II, page 28, states:

"Mr. Gov. Morris was more and more opposed to the negative (by council). The proposal of it would disgust all the States. A law that ought to be negated will be set aside in the judiciary department."

Again, Rufus King stated:

"The judges will have the power of expounding those laws when they come before them; and they will no doubt stop the operation of such as shall appear repugnant to the Constitution." (Farrand, vol. I, p. 109.)

The Convention assembled then voted down the proposition to create a "judicial council" to review unconstitutional legislation. The delegates did so, not to limit the judiciary's powers but to retain them in status quo.

Thus the proposal for the council was defeated, not on the grounds that the judges should not have the power to negative unconstitutional acts of Congress, but solely on the grounds that such a council was unnecessary and inadvisable inasmuch as the judges already possessed that power and it would be inadvisable to join them with the executive branch of the Government in the exercise of it. The Convention retained in the framework of the new government the judicial review of unconstitutional legislation, and refused to create a legislative review.

Pinckney, of South Carolina, clearly and succinctly gave the reason for the rejection, when he said:

"It will involve them (the judges) in parties, and give a previous tincture to their opinions."

So it is clear that rather than the Convention at any time denying the power of the Federal judiciary to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional, the argument solely turned on the question whether the judiciary, already possessing such power, should be joined with any other authority in reviewing legislation. It was an undisputed assumption throughout the discussion that the courts possessed the power and right, in their judicial capacity, to hold any statute violating the Constitution to be a nullity.

Having considered the precedents that existed prior to the adoption of the Constitution in 1789, establishing the judiciary's right to pass upon acts of the legislature, and realizing that all of these precedents were familiar to many of the framers of that document, let us now consider what the members of the Convention had to say in the Convention itself, and to their various State legislatures when the question of the adoption of the Constitution was before each State.

It has already been shown, and will be shown again, that many members of the Philadelphia Convention continually stated it to be their opinion that the judiciary in the normal and customary exercise of its functions would be empowered to pass upon the validity of an act of Congress. If this was not the understanding of the framers of the Constitution and of the people at large, it can only be concluded that such contentions would have been vociferously met, and an attempt made to disprove them. Furthermore, many members of that Convention, in order to persuade their individual States to ratify the Constitution, as will be shown, made statements that the National Supreme Court was empowered to invalidate acts of the National Congress contrary to the Constitution. Again, one would necessarily conclude that if such were not the prevailing opinion at the Convention and in the State legislatures when the Constitution was being considered, such statements would have been disputed. Yet, neither in the record of the Constitutional Convention itself, nor in the records of any State convention convened to adopt the Constitution, can one find anywhere a statement denying that power.

It is to be remembered, that at the time of its adoption there was keen and hard-fought opposition to the Constitution, that the powers of the newly created President, Congress, and judiciary were everywhere debated, yet nowhere does it appear that anyone directly and substantially contended that the National Supreme Court would not have the power which we have been discussing. Continuously, various members of the Constitutional Convention and other influential citizens stated in support of the new Constitution that the national judiciary had the power to invalidate improper acts of the National Congress.

Prof. Charles A. Beard, of Columbia University, one of the ablest of present-day American historians, has come to the conclusion that there were 25 men who constituted the dominating element of the Convention; that of these, at least 16 expressly stated their belief in the power and right of the Federal judiciary to pass upon the constitutionality of an act of Congress. Seven more are on record in favor of the doctrine, while only five, or at least six, members ever opposed the policy of judicial review; and of these latter, not one ever denied that the power existed, though they may not have approved it. The evidence is overwhelming.

Upon the floor of the Convention this power was stated repeatedly, it was affirmed after the Convention, and while the Constitution awaited adoption by the States, and it was again stated by many high in authority in all three branches of the new Government after it was established, and never was its existence denied, even by the few who thought it inadvisable.

As was said by Charles H. Burr, Esq., in 60 University of Pennsylvania Law Review:

"When the Federal Constitution was submitted to the several State conventions for ratification, complete unanimity of interpretation was given to the judiciary clauses. To the proposition, repeated again and again, that the power had been granted to the Federal judiciary to declare void an unconstitutional act of Congress, no voice was raised in doubt, criticism, or dissent. This power of the judiciary to protect the States and the people from the aggressions of Congress was the one all-potent argument wielded by the supporters of the Constitution. And, however its detractors may have persisted in their opposition, they united in recognizing the validity of the argument."

Oliver Ellsworth, who had been a member of the Constitutional Convention and subsequently the United States Supreme Court with John Marshall, stated to the Connecticut convention met to adopt the Constitution that, "This Constitution defines the extent of the powers of the General Government. If the General Legislature should at any time overleap their limits, the judicial department is a constitutional check. If the United States go beyond their powers, if they make a law which the Constitution does not authorize, it is void; and the judicial power, the national judges, who to secure their impartiality are to be made independent, will declare it to be void. On the other hand, if the States go beyond their limits, if they make a law which is a usurpation upon the General Government, the law is void; and upright, independent judges will declare it to be so" (Elliott's Debates, vol. II, p. 196).

Again, James Wilson, a member of the Constitutional Convention, said to the Pennsylvania convention met to adopt the new Constitution: "If a law should be made inconsistent with those powers vested by this instrument in Congress, the judges, as a consequence of their independence, and the particular powers of government being defined, will declare such law to be null and void, for the power of the Constitution predominates. Anything, therefore, that shall be enacted by Congress contrary thereto will not have the force of law" (Beard, the Supreme Court and the Constitution, p. 71).

James Otis, a member of the Convention, said in support of the Constitution that "if the reasons that can be given against an act (of Congress) are such as to plainly demonstrate that it is against national equity, the national courts will adjudge it void. This may be questioned by some, though I make no doubt of it, whether they are not bound by their oaths to adjudge it void."

In North Carolina William R. Davis, delegate to the Federal Convention, discussing, in the State convention, the judiciary clause of the new Constitution, said:

"Every member will agree that the positive regulations ought to be carried into execution and that the negative restrictions ought not to be disregarded or violated. Without a judiciary the injunction of the Constitution may be disobeyed and the positive regulations neglected or contravened" (Elliott's Debates, vol. IV, p. 156).

And Governor Johnson, of the same State, said:

"Every law consistent with the Constitution will have been made in pursuance of the powers granted by it. Every usurpation of law repugnant to it cannot have been made in pursuance of its powers."

The latter will be negatory and void" (Elliott's Debates, vol. IV, p. 188).

Charles Pinckney, a delegate from South Carolina to the Constitutional Convention, speaking at the State convention to adopt the new Constitution, said of the Federal judiciary that:

"[Its] duty would be not only to decide all national questions which should arise within the Union, but to control and keep the State judiciaries within their proper limits whenever they shall attempt to interfere with its power." (Elliott's Debates, vol. IV, p. 258.)

At the Virginia convention, met for the same purpose, Madison declared:

"It may be a misfortune that in organizing any government the explication of its authority should be left to any of its coordinate branches. . . . There is a new policy in submitting it to the judiciary of the United States." (Elliott's Debates, vol. III, p. 532.)

Randolph, of the same State, said:

"If Congress wish to aggrandize themselves by oppressing the people, the judiciary must first be corrupted."

And, stated Grayson, supporting the same position:

"If the Congress cannot make a law against the Constitution, I apprehend they cannot make a law to abridge it. The judges are to defend it. They can neither abridge nor extend it." (Elliott's Debates, vol. III, p. 567.)

Patrick Henry, given in all school books as one of the greatest of American patriots, at the same convention proudly boasted of the independence of the Virginia judiciary, and said:

" . . . they had firmness to counteract the legislature . . . Yes, sir; our judges opposed the acts of the legislature. We have this landmark to guide us. They had fortitude to declare that they were the judiciary and would oppose unconstitutional acts." (Elliott's Debates, vol. III, p. 324.)

In replying to Henry, John Marshall, later Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, declared:

"If they (Congress) were to make a law not warranted by any of the powers enumerated, it would be considered by the judges as an infringement of the Constitution which they are to guard. They would not consider such a law as coming under their jurisdiction. They would declare it void." (Elliott's Debates, vol. III, p. 93.)

Alexander Hamilton expressed his views in the Federalist, volume 78, when he said:

"No legislation could, therefore, contrary to the Constitution, be valid. To deny this will be to affirm that the deputy is greater than his principal; that the servant is above his master; that the representatives of the people are superior to the people themselves; that men acting by virtue of powers may do not only what their powers do not authorize but what they forbid. The interpretation of the laws is a proper and peculiar province of the courts. The Constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges as a fundamental law. . . . If there should happen to be any irreconcilable variance between the two, that which is the superior obligation ought, of course, to be preferred; in other words, the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statutes; the intentions of the people to the intention of their agents."

Again, James Madison, who unquestionably contributed more than any other framer toward the formation and development of the Constitution, also expressed his complete approval and support of the power of the judiciary to review acts of the legislature in the Federalist, no. 39. Madison at times appeared to doubt its value, but he never questioned the power. At the Federal Convention, for instance, Madison stated upon the floor of the house:

"A law violating a constitution established by the people themselves, would be considered by the judges as null and void." (Farland, The Records of the Federal Convention, vol. II, p. 93.)

Madison was present throughout the Convention proceedings, and, though he may have doubted its wisdom, never did he contend that the judiciary did not have such power under the Constitution. Furthermore, Madison, shortly before his death in June 1836 after he had had an opportunity to hear all that was to be said on the subject and after observing the Federal judiciary in operation and after having had before him the decision and results of Marbury against Madison (infra), wrote and said:

"The jurisdiction claimed for the Federal judiciary is truly the only defensive armor of the Federal Government, or, rather, for the Constitution and laws of the United States. Strip it of that armor, and the door is wide open for nullification, anarchy, and convulsion, unless 24 States, independent of the whole and of each other, should exhibit the miracle of a voluntary and unanimous performance of every injunction of the parchment compact." (Writings of James Madison, vol. IV, pp. 296-297.)

Again one may gain much light on this question by considering what transpired upon the passage of the famous resolutions of Virginia with respect to the alien and sedition laws of 1798. A number of States adopted counterresolutions, the following being typical:

Rhode Island: "The second section of the third article on the Constitution . . . vests in the Federal courts exclusively, and in the Supreme Court of the United States ultimately, the authority of deciding on the constitutionality of any act or law of the Congress of the United States."

Massachusetts: "The decision of all cases . . . arising under the Constitution of the United States, and the construction of all laws made in pursuance thereof, are exclusively vested by the people in the judicial courts of the United States."

New Hampshire: "The duty of such decisions (as to constitutionality of congressional acts) is properly and exclusively confided to the judicial department."

In Vermont the resolutions read: "It belongs not to State legislatures to decide on the constitutionality of laws made by the general Government; this power being exclusively vested in the judiciary courts of the Union."

The Virginia Legislature was obliged to consider these resolutions of other States, and a report was drawn up by Madison, as a member of that body, who admitted:

"That the judicial department is, in all cases submitted to it by the forms of the Constitution, to decide . . . in relation to the authorities of the other departments of the Government."

Authoritative excerpts from the foregoing speeches and writings of the leading members of the Constitutional Convention, both at that Convention itself and at the various conventions met in the several States to adopt the Constitution, and the excerpts from the resolutions passed by the various States following the Virginia resolutions in 1798, are clearly sufficient to show that beyond any shadow of doubt it was universally understood, both before and after the United States Constitution was adopted, that the Federal judiciary had the right and the power to limit Congress within its constitutional powers and to invalidate any ultra vires acts passed by the National Legislature. Again, not only do the judicial decisions antedating the Constitutional Convention prove this power but other judicial decisions immediately after its adoption affirm it. In 1792 Attorney General Randolph, in an argument in a case in the Supreme Court, said:

"The sum of my argument was the admission of the power (of the Court) to refuse to execute an act of Congress" (Hayburn's case, 2 Dall. 409).

Again, the effect of the decision in the case of United States against Yale Todd was to determine an act of Congress of 1792 unconstitutional. (See note, 13 How. 40-52.)

Again, in Cooper v. Telfair (4 Dall. 194), Chase, J., held:

"It is a general opinion—indeed, it is expressly admitted by all this bar, and some of the judges have, individually, in the circuit courts decided that the Supreme Court can declare an act of Congress to be unconstitutional, and, therefore, invalid; but there is no adjudication of the Supreme Court itself upon the point. I agree, however, in the general sentiment."

In the Federalist, nos. 78 and 80, the independence of the newly created Federal judiciary is elaborately discussed, and the existence of the power to pass upon questions of constitutionality is taken for granted. It is there commented upon, not as a mere possibility but in order to remove any lingering objections there might be to such a practice. And, in no. 39, Madison specifically states:

"Some such tribunal is clearly essential to prevent an appeal to the sword and a dissolution of the compact."

And so we find that provision in article IV of the Constitution, which reads:

"This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and the treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby."

And the judicial authority established in article III, reading:

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges . . . shall hold their offices during good behavior . . ."

By article IV the supreme law of the land constitutes (1) the Constitution, (2) the laws made in pursuance thereof, and (3) treaties. So an act of Congress not made in pursuance to the Constitution, but violating its provisions, is no part of the supreme law, as defined by the express language of the Constitution; and when the Court, exercising the judicial power vested by article III, is confronted with the provisions of the Constitution, on one hand, and an act of Congress in violation thereof, on the other, the Constitution alone is the supreme law, and the only power and duty of the Court is to enforce the Constitution and declare the act invalid.

And so, in the earliest case in which the question was directly brought to a point (Marbury v. Madison, 1 Cr. 137 (1803)), John Marshall, greatest of the Chief Justices of the United States, stated and affirmed the absolute power of the Court. Marshall cited no precedents, and for that reason some persons have argued that none existed. The answer to that contention is clearly that there were precedents so numerous that citation would have been superfluous. The principle was so obvious to Marshall and so fully recognized by the Nation at large, that he was concerned only to enunciate and affirm in clear and forceful style the principle in words that have yet to be improved upon. He said:

"The Constitution is either a superior, paramount law, unchangeable by ordinary means, or it is on a level with ordinary legislative acts, and, like any other act, is alterable when the legislature shall please to alter it. If the former part of the alternative be true, then a legislative act contrary to the Constitution is not law. If the latter part be true, then written constitutions are absurd attempts on the part of the people to limit a power in its own nature illimitable—if an act of a legislature, repugnant to the Constitution, is void, does it, notwithstanding its invalidity, bind the courts and oblige them to give it effect? Or, in other words, though it be not law, does it constitute a rule as operative as though it was a law? This would be to overthrow in fact what was established in theory and would seem, at first view, an absurdity too gross to be insisted upon. It shall, however, receive more attentive consideration. It is emphatically the province of the judicial department to say what the law is. Those who apply the rule to particular cases must of necessity expound and interpret that rule. If two laws conflict with each other the courts must decide on the operation of each. This is the very essence of judicial duty. If, then, the courts are to regard the Constitution, and the Constitution is superior to any ordinary act of the legislature, the Constitution, and not such ordinary act, must govern the case to which they both apply. Those, then, who controvert the principle that the Constitution is to be considered in court as a paramount law, are reduced to the necessity of maintaining that courts must close their eyes on the Constitution and see only the law" (in the sense of law as the acts of legislature).

There are those who have presumed to characterize such reasoning as an argument of sophistry and a mere assumption of power without authority. To so characterize one of the greatest decisions ever written in any court is to pervert history and to reduce argument to mere partisan propaganda. That Marshall was eminently sound in his opinion, "is as demonstrable as any mathematical proposition and requires only an examination of the Constitution itself."

Some have stormed at the opinion in anger, and some have presumed to call it a mere dictum, but notwithstanding all assaults, it remains in all the force of its unquestionable truth and logic and forms an unassailable keystone in the American system of constitutional government.

In over 50 cases since the establishment of the Constitution the Court has invalidated acts of Congress contrary thereto, and its right so to do has never been questioned. Probably the greatest commentator on the American theory of government, Lord Bryce, has said:

"No feature in the Government of the United States has awakened so much curiosity in the European mind, caused so much discussion, received so much admiration, and been so frequently misunderstood than the duties assigned to the Supreme Court and the functions which it discharges in guarding the ark of the Constitution."

Furthermore, states Bryce—

"Few American institutions are better worth studying than this intricate judicial machinery; few deserve more admiration for the smoothness of their working; few have more contributed to the peace and well-being of the country."

De Tocqueville, in his Democracy and America, says:

"The power of the judiciary to declare a law invalid if it transgresses the powers given by the Constitution is one of the strongest barriers ever devised against the tyrannies of political assemblies."

So one could go on piling precedent upon precedent, citation upon citation, and authority upon authority, proving beyond the shadow of a doubt that the Constitution gives to the Supreme Court expressly and impliedly the full power to refuse to recognize any law or act of any branch of the Government, including the Congress, that contravenes the Constitution; but this proposition is so self-evident and so clearly ingrained in the American system of government that to make further citation of authority would be superfluous. It suffices to state that that power of the Court has stood unquestioned in the minds of all reasoning men since the foundation of the Republic, despite popular recrimination, the assaults of demagogues, the attacks of those who would wish to usurp the Constitution and make of themselves dictators, despite wars and even actual rebellion.

Such is the fact; and as we stand today admittedly this power can only be curtailed and excised from the fabric of our Government by a constitutional amendment. Whether the power is assumed or was granted is today an academic question, and the controversy is reduced to the question, Should such an amendment be made? I shall now address myself to that contention and conclude this discussion proving that such amendment is inadvisable in the highest degree and would constitute the downfall of American constitutional government. This power in the Court is absolutely imperative, it is the very essence of constitutional government in this country, and without it the Constitution becomes a mere scrap of paper.

The gist of the general argument against the Court's powers is as follows:

"That an act may be passed by the Congress, representing the sovereign will of a sovereign people, approved by the Executive, also representing all of the people . . . only to have it stricken down years later by the assumed unconstitutional exercise of power by an appointive judiciary, is, I say, an anomalous and unbearable state of affairs, and one wherein we fall short of the ability to exercise the sovereign powers of a nation."

That argument, to sum up, claims that Congress represents the sovereign will of the Nation and that therefore any act passed by Congress cannot and should not be invalidated by the Court. A nodding acquaintance with the United States Constitution is sufficient to refute such contention in anyone's mind. The Constitution, not Congress, represents the sovereign will of our people. That sovereign will is expressed only through the Constitution and Congress expresses only the will of the people under the Constitution. It has been recognized since 1789 that Congress expresses the will of the people in the ordinary course of events, but that that expression is always controlled by the sovereign will of the people, expressed, and only expressed, in the fundamental law of the Constitution.

Furthermore, it is quite elementary, but it seems necessary to repeat that this country is made up of a union of 48 sovereign

States, and superimposed thereon there exists a sovereign Federal Government. To the Federal Government, under the Constitution, are delegated certain powers, and to the individual State governments are reserved the remainder. Again, under the Constitution, to the President are delegated certain powers, to the Congress others, and to the judiciary still others. One need not stop long to realize that under this system an attempted exercise of power by the President may overlap that of Congress, and that of Congress the Supreme Court, and conversely; and that, again, an attempted exercise of power by the Federal Government may overlap that of the States, and those of the States overlap those of the Federal Government. To continue the smooth working of the Government under such an arrangement and division of functions, it is perfectly obvious that a power must be lodged somewhere in the Government to define the limits of the powers of these various organs and to say where the powers of one begin and of another end.

If it were not for the Supreme Court the State governments could arrogate to themselves powers clearly only within the jurisdiction of the Federal authority, and conversely the Federal Government could reach out throughout the land and assume powers clearly reserved to the States. Worse yet, if it were not for the existence of this power in the Court, the President could assume to himself powers reserved to the Congress, and, conversely, Congress could assume powers of the President or the courts. The President could, for instance, make Executive orders of any sort on his own volition and give to them the effect of absolute statutes.

The people elect the President, but no one has yet had the temerity to assert that they elect the President to make the laws. Even a schoolboy knows the President is supposed only to execute the laws that are made by Congress. Going further, the Congress—which, under the Constitution, is limited to certain very definite powers—could pass laws of any sort whatsoever if it were not for the existence of the judicial veto in the Supreme Court. Congress would become even more omnipotent than the British Parliament. It may be admitted here that no court in England would invalidate an act of Parliament, despite what Coke said in Dr. Bonham's case, that "an act of Parliament against common right and reason would be adjudged void." But it suffices to say with respect to the British Parliament that safeguards exist in England upon the Parliament's powers that do not exist in this country with regard to Congress. The American Congress is in substance comparable not to the Parliament as a whole but only to the House of Commons. In England the House of Lords may at least stay an act of the Commons for at least 2 years. Again, though it may not have been exercised since the reign of Queen Anne, the British Crown does have the power of veto over an act of Parliament. Again, the British constitution, though unwritten, has, in a country such as England, heavily imbued with tradition, a force almost equivalent to that of the laws of nature.

Congress in this country, if it were not for the Supreme Court, would be the most omnipotent lawmaking body on the face of the earth. The existing Congress could permanently legislate itself into office and prevent all future elections. If at the next election the Republican Party by some unpredicted turn of events should attain a majority in Congress, that Republican majority could legislate the President out of office and replace him with anyone it saw fit, save for the Supreme Court. Congress could violate every single provision of the Constitution; it could, for instance, establish a state religion and disqualify all those adhering to any other belief in God from voting; it could abolish freedom of speech and of the press and permit to exist only those newspapers which expressed the ideas and demands of the dominant party; it could quarter troops in any home; it could abolish every constitutional protection against the security of the people in their persons and in their homes against unreasonable searches and seizures; it could abolish trial by jury and place a person in double jeopardy for the same offense; it could abolish completely all the principles of law which have been built up in a thousand years of strife in Anglo-Saxon history to protect the citizen and his life, liberty, and property; it could pass bills of attainder and expropriate property without compensation; it could abolish courts and constitute in place of our existing judicial system dishonest and political star-chamber proceedings; it could restore prohibition; it could remove the right of suffrage for sex, religion, race, or any other conceivable reason; it could establish forced labor; it could abolish any branch of the Government and create any other. One could go on ad infinitum illustrating the evils and excesses which Congress could impose upon the Nation were the protective powers of the Supreme Court once removed. It is no answer to say that if Congress exceeded its constitutional powers the people would vote its Members out of office on the next election. The people might not even get the opportunity; Congress might legislate itself into office permanently or make illegal all political parties except the dominant one, and in any case irreparable injury could be done before the following elections.

That this is no idle talk and does not represent the far-fetched excesses of an overactive imagination is amply illustrated by current events in other parts of the world. One has only to consider the countries of Europe to realize what can be done by a dominant political party or a successful demagogue in the way of destroying the rights of the common citizen and establishing an absolute dictatorship and tyranny over the people through the control of a legislative body with those very same rights that the opponents of the Supreme Court would vest in Congress.

The very situation that exists in Europe could come to pass in this country if Congress were once given the omnipotent powers that the opponents of the Supreme Court advocate. It is perfectly obvious that if the Court is deprived of the right and power to interpret the Constitution and to refuse to recognize any governmental act not within the Constitution, that the Constitution, for all practical purposes, would cease to exist. Both in theory and in fact that document becomes but an interesting scrap of paper to be entombed in a museum. Future generations could point to it as a "classic" example of what depths a nation may descend to when popular clamor, created and steered by clever but unscrupulous demagogues, is permitted to override the counsel of reasoning men. Is every lesson of our history to be thrown aside, is all that we have fought for to give security to the citizen in his life, liberty, and property, and his chance in the "pursuit of happiness" to be nullified in order that doubtful virtues of a dictatorship be established? The dictatorship of a majority political party, be it Democratic, Republican, Socialist, Communist, or what not, is no less hateful than the tyrannies of kings or emperors.

The unfortunate part of the arguments against the Supreme Court is that they subtly ensnare the very people whom the Court is most zealous to protect—the ordinary common man in the street. Under the guise of an interest in the mass of the people and under the cloak of promoting legislation designed to promote their social and economic welfare, the opponents of the Court argue that the Court in its decisions is in effect legislating against all social reform, and therefore to achieve that very necessary reform it is necessary to abolish the Court as we know it. Whether inspired by motives of ignorance or malice, the result that these people seek to achieve would be harmful to a degree impossible to conceive. They make the argument that the Court is a reactionary body of "old men" with "horse and buggy" ideas, who are more zealous to protect "property" than "life or liberty." Even if this be so, which it is not, is that any reason for abolishing protection of life and liberty, as well as to property? They argue that the Court's decisions represent in effect legislation created by the "nine old men" and the basis of their own personal beliefs and opinions. Nothing could be further from the fact. The Court's power is only negative, never positive; it cannot and does not legislate. It makes no statutes; it levies no taxes; it does nothing except uphold the lawful and negate the unlawful. As for the assertion that the Court's decisions represent merely the personal ideas of its members, no better answer can be given than the known fact that men who were so-called liberals when nominated have written so-called conservative opinions, and members known as conservatives when nominated, like the present Chief Justice, have consistently been on the liberal side. Probably no body of men on the face of the earth act with a greater devotion to law and duty, with more complete impartiality, or with a more objective viewpoint.

I do not propose to argue the merits of various statutes of a primarily social or economic nature passed by Congress but declared unconstitutional by the Court, such as the N. R. A. It should be sufficient for me to state here that I do not for one moment deny the probable necessity of certain economic and sociological reforms under present conditions in this country. But under the Constitution, unless one is willing to pervert plain English, the power does not exist in the Congress to create many of the lately proposed reforms. No better example could be cited than the N. R. A., which, for the moment, I shall assume to be a universally desired statute. But the answer to the existing lack of power in Congress to so legislate is not to cut off the power of the Court to protect the people, but to increase the power of Congress to benefit them. And the way to increase that power in Congress is clearly set forth in the Constitution itself (art. V) by amendment. The United States Constitution very possibly is not an up-to-date document and does not give to Congress the powers which may be necessary to meet modern needs. But that does not mean that the Court should be obliged to pervert its language, to rewrite the Constitution of its own notion, or to interpret that document in a so-called flexible manner to meet such needs.

If the Constitution does not meet modern needs, let it be amended. When one asks for an amendment to the Constitution, one is immediately met by the argument on the part of those whose social concerns are exceeded only by their haste and ill consideration that the process of amendment is too slow. One needs only to cite the last amendment to the Constitution to refute such a contention. The twentieth amendment, repealing prohibition, was introduced in Congress on February 20, 1933, and was ratified on December 5, 1933. Seven months had elapsed. If necessary, I do not doubt that the process could be speeded up to 3 or 4 months. What more speedy process for creating social reforms could be asked for than one that permits the alteration of the fundamental law upon which this country operates within a period of a few months? But the opponents of the Court do not advocate amendments giving Congress the powers needed; rather, they prefer to curtail the power of the Court. Why so? Because curtailing the power of the Court would not give to Congress merely the additional power needed and which the country might wish the Congress to have, but it would give to Congress omnipotent power so that Congress might, at the dictation of one political party or one political leader, commit the catalog of acts above set forth. What a paradox would be created—that a Congress acting under the United States Constitution could do anything under the sun in violation of that very same Constitution!

These so-called liberals who advocate the overthrow of the Court are, whether purposely or unconsciously, advocating the very antithesis of true liberal principles and attempting to pave the way for the overthrow of the American system and the establishment of a system that would put us on the same low plane on which the nations of Europe now find themselves.

I can do no better, in closing, than to quote the opinions of Lord Brougham, who said:

"The power of the judiciary to prevent either the State legislature or Congress from overstepping the limits of the Constitution is the greatest refinement in social quality to which any set of circumstances has ever given rise or to which any age has ever given birth."

And of Gladstone, who stated:

"* * * the American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

THE WORLD WAR DEBTS

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, there is no subject, with the possible exception of neutrality, that presents the picture of international affairs and world-wide opinion with such cogent emphasis and dangers, as well as focal points of irritation, as that of the collection of the World War debts. Certainly everyone must admit that the ultimate goal of all peace-loving, sincere nations must be won by the eliminations of these points of friction which obstruct mutual and multilateral concord.

Insofar as the three great sovereignties of the Old World—England, France, and Italy—are concerned the failure of each of them to respectfully treat their debts to us is seemingly as provocative of resentment and anger as any other imaginable subject. However, coolness, understanding, and pitiless logic are needed in the discussion of this subject; and retaliation, which precludes study and blinds perspective, should be absent in all sympathetic considerations.

Roughly we know that England owes us more than four billions, Italy over two billions, and France more than three and one-half billions. We know further that the transfer of money out of a country has very limited possibilities, and this is especially true with the existent paucity of gold and silver supplies in these countries. Beyond this, too, the paper currency cannot be utilized except in very limited payments. No one should forget that paper money fluctuates in value with the possibilities of its convertibility into gold. Certainly, if we accept paper money from a foreign nation, it would be practically worthless unless we could send it back for gold when the stress came.

Private citizens of a defaulting nation sell goods and services, carry supplies, accept and use remittances, entertain tourists and travelers, and for these acts they may be said to receive foreign exchange. We have placed in appendix B a statement of international balances over a period of 38 years. Let us assume that the debtors receive actual checks of American citizens on American banks and also get American money. Obviously, if the French Government could have all of those checks and species of American currency it might well turn them over to the United States Government in lieu of the debt. But this could only be done by taxation on the part of the French Government to permit them to purchase those checks or specie of currency from French citizens and in no other practical way.

Quite the contrary, we know that such is not the case, and that those who are receiving payments from Americans obtain it almost invariably in foreign exchange without the transfer of such checks, gold or currency. The somewhat baffling intricate operation of foreign exchange must be understood before one can proceed.

A debtor country must sell to foreigners more goods and services than it purchases from those foreigners, or, conversely, the creditor nation must be willing to purchase more goods than it sells. Let us take an absurd example to illustrate. Suppose that French citizens have sent over a half billion dollars worth of goods to American citizens. American importers pay for those importations directly to the Treasury of the United States, and the Government of this country credits that half billion dollars to the French debt. What is the situation in France? Thousands of French nationals hold paper debts against American citizens who have just substituted the United States in their places. It is clear that the French Government must step in somewhere and make whole these debtors. It orders all such French exporters to turn in their invoices to the French treasury and receive equivalent value. But before it can purchase these obligations the French Government must have money only obtainable by legislative authorization and a tax program permitting such exchanges. Under such circumstances the taxes imposed to buy these obligations must be borne by the people of France. Even under this simple theoretical plan the citizens of France pay, and they must pay in the practical manipulations of international exchange also.

Certainly, if the rich treasures of art were to be sold to citizens in the United States, such a four-corner transaction might be employed.

However impracticable these two suggestions might seem, they should disclose the overpowering need for the debtor country to effect a surplus credit in the creditor country. It had been said by some that the problem resolves itself into the power of a debtor country to earn foreign exchange, otherwise expressed by saying that the debtor nation must have a surplus of exports over imports or a favorable balance of trade.

United States may therefore have an opportunity of receiving debt payment if it is willing to accept an import surplus, thus securing more goods and services than it exports to the country in debt.

Many times during the debt discussions we have had suggestions offered that all France needs to do is to purchase all the bonds of French citizens covering American investments and turn them over to the United States. Our country would then be forced to sell these bonds to obtain the money to credit the French Government. So far as it goes, this is a worth-while expedient, but the volume of such transactions is relatively small.

However, its proffer might at least display willingness on the part of the French Government. It must be explained, moreover, that the removal of this capital income would of necessity eliminate the possibility of future annual interest payments, a by no means small factor in international exchange.

Here is another suggestion. Senator J. HAMILTON LEWIS said recently in the United States Senate:

I now invite the attention, sir, of this honorable body to the prospect of the payment of some of these debts by the transfer to us of land adjacent to and connected with the American Continent and not in use by our debtors.

When this subject was touched upon by me not long since, suggesting transfer to the United States of islands in the Caribbean Sea, continental America, to this England, through one of her spokesmen, rightfully intimated that to transfer certain sections of her populated islands to the ownership of the United States would result in the transfer of some of its citizens, against their will, to become Americans. In that connection I suggest that a short while past we yielded to England in a boundary commission Alaskan territory claimed as property of the United States under treaty of purchase from Russia. This concession was for the purpose of peace and harmony. In this procession of proceedings at London I held a very insignificant portion, being then a Member of the House of Representatives as Congressman at Large from the State of Washington, the farthest western State and nearest to Alaska.

Sir, I propose that the strip of country which we then yielded be now returned to the United States as part compensation for the debt due by England. I propose, sir, that that part of Alaska, not being occupied, having no citizens of the British dominions upon it, may be transferred as any other land; and therefore, sir, go to the payment of the debt due by England and thus contribute to the peaceful relations which ought to exist between debtor and creditor when the debtor has paid his debt to the creditor under which friendly relations as now prevail between the United States and its debtors.

Incidentally, in this, seeing the loan of France to Italy, as is her privilege, I suggest that in the Antilles there are islands uninhabited in any form whatever, possessing, it appears, some area which the United States might use for aerial bases upon which to prepare for defense against assaults in that direction upon our country. Let France yield that territory, where there are no French citizens, and both nations, as described by me, contribute to the payment of their debts to the United States in the manner I define.

Thus upon these international questions I suggest, sir, that as an example of peace and harmony and newly devised brotherhood we have the transfer of this land as a contribution on the debts due to the United States, looking to the payments by these debtors to the United States of debts which at this time are long since due. On this debt not even the installments of interest are offered. Senators, it is high time this, our Government, sustained the resolution I tender—that our Government now take up the question with these nations for the purpose of having yielded to us in perfect fairness, in absence of money to pay, this tribute of land in part payment of the debts and as a just recognition of our sacrifice.

Mr. Levinson, former aide on the Kellogg Pact and alleged author of the phrase of the "outlawry of war", has a plan which he terms "liquidating world depression" which in the matter of debts recommends a reduction of the round total of ten to six billions. From that sum he would take the two and seventh-tenths billions already paid by the allied nations. The remainder of three and three-tenths billions would be accepted as a base for a 12-year payment plan of two hundred and seventy-five million a year with no provision for the payment of interest except that the installments are to bear 5 percent after maturity.

He offers no plan for individual contributions, but suggests that this be left to each nation to work out. His plan also touches credits for the army of occupation costs, Mixed Claims Commission, a holiday on armaments, a gold-standard return, and other phases not pertinent to the debt discussion.

Other suggestions include the sale of rare paintings, crown jewels, and articles of great intrinsic value. Still others favor the extension of university education in debtor nations whereby, for instance, 1,000 American boys and girls would go to Italy, for example, and enjoy all the comforts of education, culture, and convenience at the expense of the Italian Government. The Kingdom of Italy would reimburse by taxation proceeds, of course, the merchants or institutions of that nation for the expense of these quasi-Rhodian scholars. How would we benefit? Well, if the fair value of these expenses was $10,000,000, we would credit that amount to the Italian account. Our Government would then either grant these scholarships outright as a Federal aid or charge a reasonable fee for them to the colleges, the States, or persons interested.

The latest proffered scheme is said to be linked up with the reciprocal-trade treaties wherein the debtor nations might well be allowed to ship their surplus products to this country. In a less euphemistic sense we might say that we are allowing them to dump their exportable surpluses on these shores in credit for their debts, a dangerous precedent.

Another phase of this many-sided question is presented by Mr. Truman Winslow in an article entitled "How We Could Collect Part of Our War Debts":

For several months Treasury officials have been worried by the continued flow of gold to the United States, because the loss of gold in foreign countries may complete the wreckage of foreign exchange and cause a further decline in world trade. This condition removes hope of recovering part of the debts in gold. And the shipment of goods in settlement of the debts would clutter up our domestic market.

There seems to be only one other way. Many foreign countries have large stocks of silver and others can add to their stocks. Great Britain can draw on the silver hoard of India; other nations can draw on the world bullion market.

If we should reduce the war debts about 50 percent and accept payment in silver over a period of years, the war-debt problem could undoubtedly be worked out. The question is, What would we do with the silver? But it might also be asked, What would we do with the gold? Gold and silver have little use in themselves. Their chief service is in settlement of international debts.

A silver-settlement policy would have advantages from the standpoint of economics and no great disadvantages.

Silver thus received would not increase the amount of paper money in circulation, since it would be deposited in the Treasury without issue of new paper money. The same applies to gold received in settlement of war debts.

As many nations turned to the silver-bullion market for silver, its value would increase in terms of gold money, which means that gold money would decrease in terms of silver money. This would tend to break the gold corner, bringing hoarded gold into the world bullion market.

The increased price of silver in terms of our gold money would cause a corresponding increase in the foreign-exchange price of silver money. This would decrease the price of our farm products in silver-standard countries, since their silver money would buy more American gold dollars. Thus the farmer could sell more in silver-standard countries, and surpluses now being destroyed might be sold abroad without decreasing the domestic value of farm products.

The American farmer could produce more and receive good prices for his entire crop. He would, in turn, have more money to spend. Industrial centers would benefit.

The increased price of silver exchange, furthermore, would decrease the volume of oriental products dumped on our domestic market.

Our Government could agree to accept silver at a fixed price at $1.29 an ounce, and for a while foreign governments would profit, since they can purchase silver on the open market now for about 53 cents. However, as foreign purchases began to remove silver bullion from the world market the price would increase rapidly to the true economic price of $1.29 per ounce or more. The silver now held by the Treasury would then represent a true profit for our Government, since most of it was purchased for 60 cents or less.

Clearing up the war debts would improve trade. They have contributed to the world depression.

If our Government sees the practical side of the war-debt question, much may be done toward restoration of normal world trade. The fact that silver settlement may not be considered orthodox should carry little weight when compared to the practical benefits.

In one of the loftiest speeches on the debt question ever delivered to a representative body, the President of the United States set out the basis of all future discussion of the war debts in his speech on June 30, 1934. He used particularly two phrases, "determined effort" and "substantial sacrifices", as necessary characteristics of the efforts of the debtor nations in their attitude toward the payment of these debts. He talked also of the scrutiny which the American public might justifiably impose on defaulting nations in their employment of their available resources, and he strongly intimated that the exploitations of these resources for unproductive nationalistic expenditures would be a cause of apprehension in this country.

Such a warning is, of course, consistent with our policy looking toward adequate disarmament on a world-wide basis. We all know only too well the lying propaganda which allowed British expenditures in naval increases before the Great War on the false supposition that the Germans were expending huge sums secretly on their navy. It was intimated in England that the public expenditures were improperly and secretly handled to hide these secret payments. We know that that lying propaganda was used to force greater increases in the English House of Commons, and it was exposed during the World War by Lloyd George and Winston Churchill. As a matter of fact, Germany never spent over fifty-eight million prior to 1914 in any single year, while, on the contrary, the English did raise ninety-three million in 1914.

All of these war scares, especially in the matter of armament, should be viewed with suspicion and apprehension by us in this country. If there is real sincerity in the world in the effort to reduce armaments, it ought to be manifested in the efforts of debtor nations to square themselves in their desire to either try payments in part or reduce their armaments.

No sensible person can read the following excerpts from the great speech of our Chief Executive delivered on June 30, 1934, without realizing that we in America are anxious to do something to clear our slates of this vexatious problem.

I am aware that the President in his speech is anxious to deal at all times with these nations individually and with that there should be no objection, although some provision ought to be made for a change to group discussions if made necessary, by the conditions of today.

The Chief Executive said in part:

It is a simple fact that this matter of the repayment of debts contracted to the United States during and after the World War has gravely complicated our trade and financial relationships with the borrowing nations for many years.

These obligations furnished vital means for the successful conclusion of a war which involved the national existence of the borrowers, and later for a quicker restoration of their normal life after the war ended.

The money loaned by the United States Government was in turn borrowed by the United States Government from the people of the United States, and our Government in the absence of payment from foreign governments is compelled to raise the shortage by general taxation of its own people in order to pay off the original Liberty Bonds and the later refunding bonds.

It is for these reasons that the American people have felt that their debtors were called upon to make a determined effort to discharge these obligations. The American people would not be disposed to place an impossible burden upon their debtors, but are nevertheless in a just position to ask that substantial sacrifices be made to meet these debts.

We shall continue to expect the debtors on their part to show full understanding of the American attitude on this debt question. The people of the debtor nations will also bear in mind the fact that the American people are certain to be swayed by the use which debtor countries make of their available resources—whether such resources would be applied for the purposes of recovery as well as for reasonable payment on the debt owed to the citizens of the United States, or for purposes of unproductive nationalistic expenditure or like purposes.

In presenting this report to you I suggest that, in view of all existing circumstances, no legislation at this session of the Congress is either necessary or advisable.

I can only repeat that I have made it clear to the debtor nations again and again that the indebtedness to our Government has no relation whatsoever to reparations payments made or owed to them, and that each individual nation has full and free opportunity individually to discuss its problem with the United States.

We are using every means to persuade each debtor nation as to the sacredness of the obligation, and also to assure them of our willingness, if they should so request, to discuss frankly and fully the special circumstances relating to means and method of payment.

What is the approach? and shall it be revision downward?

Prof. Nicholas Spykman, of Yale, in The United States and the Allied Debts, says in his closing pages of a splendid monograph, which though written some years ago, still is pertinent and suggestive:

Statesmanship is not merely a question of sound economics and strength of moral conviction, but it is above all an intuitive understanding of political possibilities and a fine feeling for choosing the right moment. The present is not the right moment. There is little hope of obtaining a revision just now. The present Congress is not likely to be any more lenient than the previous one and too much occupied with internal problems to be in a mood for a generous consideration of Great Britain's difficulties.

If Great Britain wants to obtain a more lenient agreement, it must first create a more favorable public opinion. A mere request based solely on the justice of her claim is not going to bring results. What is needed is a practical proposal that will not be too expensive for the American taxpayer. Not only would this improve the general attitude toward Great Britain in the United States but it would also provide a practical talking point. The reduction in receipts from Great Britain could then be balanced by a reduction in naval expenditures and the American taxpayer could afford to be generous without having to pay for it. This applies not only to Great Britain but also to the other debtors. If Europe wants the United States to make further reductions, it will have to make businesslike proposals which the American Government can accept without having to increase the tax burden of its citizens and which offer the Nation clear and substantial benefits.

The form of proposal most likely to receive a favorable reception would be an offer to pay in a lump sum instead of over a long period of years. The American people will show themselves exceedingly reluctant to accept a downward revision of the yearly payments, but they will undoubtedly be willing to grant a very substantial discount in calculating present values of future payments. Such a proposal would be an offer of a cash benefit to the present generation of American taxpayers in exchange for promises of doubtful value to pay their grandchildren. The American business sense can be trusted to see the advantage of such a proposal and to allow a very substantial discount. But the possibility of making such offers rests in the last instance on the possibility of the commercialization of the present debts and reparations.

The road toward further readjustment must therefore go through the Young plan. But if Europe wants to succeed in making the United States assume a larger part of the burden of the world catastrophe, it must open its eyes to the political realities of American life and cease its criticism of American blindness to the economic realities of European life. Only businesslike proposals from individual governments presented in a form that takes account of American prejudices and avoids emphasizing the relation between debts and reparations is likely to find acceptance. If Europe is capable of that much statesmanship, it will find the people of the United States willing to do their share in the final liquidation of the horrible nightmare of useless destruction of life and wealth which almost caused the complete annihilation of western civilization.

Another authority in the person of Prof. Herbert Wright, of Catholic University, in his introduction to a study of the same problem by Wildon Lloyd, has said about Lloyd's valuable study on the debts:

After removing some popular illusions and misconceptions concerning the nature of the war debts, he shows with inexorable logic that the war debts are not ordinary commercial debts and that payments on them cannot be met in full by any nation and by some of them not at all. In view of these facts, he contends:

a. That no interest whatever should be charged on debts of such a character;

b. That equity and justice (as well as enlightened self-interest) demand that the principal of the war debts be reduced by at least one-half because of the difference between war-time prices and normal prices; and

c. That all cash payments already received by the United States be deducted from the revised principal.

We, however, should not forget that under section 9 of the refunding debt agreement we have the privilege of asking for marketable obligations from our debtor nations. The following extract from the British agreement is identical with all the others and expresses our power under that agreement. It ought to be clear from the realization of this unexercised privilege and right that this country has been more than fair in withholding its privileges under this compact. But it does exist, as this excerpt shows:

EXCHANGE FOR MARKETABLE OBLIGATIONS

Great Britain will issue to the United States at any time or from time to time, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, in exchange for any or all of the bonds proposed to be issued hereunder and held by the United States, definitive engraved bonds in form suitable for sale to the public, in such amounts and denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States may request, in bearer form, with provision for registration as to principal, and/or in fully registered form, and otherwise on the same terms and conditions, as to date of issue and maturity, rate or rates of interest, exemption from taxation, payment in bonds of the United States issued or to be issued after 6th April 1917, payment before maturity, and the like, as the bonds surrendered on such exchange, except that the bonds shall carry such provision for repayment of principal as shall be agreed upon; provided that, if no agreement to the contrary is arrived at, any such bonds shall contain separate provision for payments before maturity, conforming substantially to the table of repayments of principal prescribed by paragraph 6 of this proposal and in form satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States; such payments to be computed on a basis to accomplish the retirement of any such bonds by 15th December 1984, and to be made through annual drawings for redemption at par and accrued interest. Any payments of principal thus made before maturity on any such bonds shall be deducted from the payments required to be made by Great Britain to the United States in the corresponding years under the terms of the table of repayments of principal prescribed in paragraph 6 of this proposal.

Great Britain will deliver definitive engraved bonds to the United States in accordance herewith within 6 months of receiving notice of any such request from the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and pending the delivery of the definitive engraved bonds will, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, deliver temporary bonds or interim receipts in a form to be agreed upon within 3 months of the receipt of such request. The United States, before offering any such bonds or interim receipts for sale in Great Britain, will first offer them to Great Britain for purchase at par and accrued interest and Great Britain shall likewise have the option, in lieu of issuing to the United States any such bonds or interim receipts, to make advance redemption, at par and accrued interest, of a corresponding amount of bonds issued hereunder and held by the United States.

All of these suggestions point to one necessity, and that is that if we are ever to have a real armament conference the pressure and the Archimedean lever of international influence may well come from the insistence of this country in the matter of debts.

In 1926 there appeared in the Irish Statesman this suggestive paragraph:

The forgiveness of war debts will only make it easier for any of the countries forgiven to start cheerfully on some new war. There is a great deal to be said for the Shylock attitude. If wars have to be paid for, there will be much more hesitation before starting on wars in the future.

Can we finally ignore the privilege afforded us under the refunding agreement as quoted above in the typical instance of section 9 of the British agreement? Is it not time to act and show these nations that we have been exceptionally fair and reasonable and that their apparent inattention is a cause of spirited misgiving?

I have a resolution which calls for a conference of nations with especial reference to our rights to demand marketable obligations. I trust that my colleagues will study this question and afford the House the benefits of that study.

WASTE AND TAXES

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a speech that I made over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I made over a National Broadcasting Co. network, March 6, during the program "Congress Speaks":

Good evening, ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience. The Republican floor leader in the House of Representatives must spend so much of his time nowadays digging for the important facts of government so artfully concealed in the flowery verbiage of New Deal reports that he finds little time to speak in Congress.

I am doubly appreciative, therefore, of this opportunity to discuss the present urgent Budget situation in Washington before the vast audience of the National Broadcasting Co.

The Federal Budget sometimes may appear far removed from the daily life of the American citizen. But when new and burdensome taxes are proposed, every contributor to the national wealth is eager to know how much of the added revenue is to be wrung from his own anguish and toil.

In the crowded but not too pleasant news of this week two items of major interest stand side by side. One notes the Treasury's March financing, which floated the largest issue of Government securities ever offered by a National Treasury in time of peace in all human history.

And beside this news is the American Federation of Labor's monthly survey of unemployment, showing 12,600,000 workers still seeking jobs—as many as there were at the height of the depression in the summer of 1932—and there are still over 20,000,000 on relief.

The third news item illuminates completely the prevailing policy of New Deal bootstrap recovery. This item, of which we shall hear a great deal during the next 3 or 4 months, is President Roosevelt's demand for $1,137,000,000 in new taxes.

Viewed together, these news reports present the whole picture of boondoggling triumphant.

For 3 years the substance of the Nation has been dissipated recklessly in ill-considered experiment, in waste, incompetence, and political spoils. Now the bill must be paid.

The official Treasury statement for March 2—that is, last Monday—shows us how fast New Deal squandering is devouring the substance of real national recovery.

The fiscal year 1936, which began on July 1 last, now has been under way for 8 full months.

During these 8 months, Treasury outgo has exceeded Treasury revenues by $2,400,000,000.

Quite naturally, we all ask, as so many have asked almost daily during the last 3 years, "Where's the money coming from?"

In a word, this showing means that the Treasury is operating "in the red" at the rate of $300,000,000 a month—or $10,000,000 every day of the week, including Sundays and holidays.

Reckless squandering of other people's earnings and savings has been a first principle of New Dealism, in every phase of every vision, for 3 long years.

But until the current fiscal year the Treasury deficit averaged only about $8,000,000 a day.

Increasing the national deficit by $2,000,000 a day in the face of the glorious "recovery" so often proclaimed by the President and his Postmaster General represents an historic accomplishment in Wallingford finance.

The new economic law patched together by the New Dealers since 1933 can almost be set to music. It just goes round and round. The more recovery we have the more money is demanded for relief and "emergency" agencies.

Perhaps the whole program does not hang together. Often it does not make sense. But it is going to cost more billions of dollars than America can pay without a dangerous drain upon her productive energies—more billions than the people can pay without facing a lowered standard of living, in our own as well as in future generations.

A report this week from the United States Civil Service Commission shows 805,000 people on the pay rolls of the executive branch of the Government as of February 1, 1936.

This represents an increase of 245,000 pay rollers since March 1933.

And now Secretary Wallace is just launching a new venture in political farm relief, which will call about 5,000 more of the party faithful to the Government pay rolls.

The report of the Civil Service Commission shows the transfer of 1,395 employees from the temporary rolls of the defunct N. R. A. to the permanent rolls of the Department of Commerce during January.

The legislation under which the "little N. R. A." has functioned since the Supreme Court declared the "big N. R. A." unconstitutional 8 months ago expires on April 1.

But the gentleman who manages the Democratic patronage has contrived by some means to transfer the N. R. A. payrollers to places of safety in the permanent establishments.

Emergencies may come and emergencies may go, but the spoils' pay roll marches on forever.

The country understands clearly by this time, I think, that the message sent to Congress by Mr. Roosevelt on Tuesday was not a fiscal program to buttress the strained resources of the Federal Treasury.

The message simply computed the additional money needed to carry the measures which the present session of Congress has lashed upon the Nation's back.

But the tax bill to raise this needed revenue is yet to be written. I expect it will be written by the Democratic majority of the House Ways and Means Committee.

At present that committee is a council of many tongues. Denounced from all sides as sheer folly, the President's proposal to tax all corporate reserves out of existence already has been abandoned. But what sort of a tax bill ultimately will be presented to the House of Representatives is a mystery still confounded by an astonishing bewilderment in the New Deal high command.

Their dilemma is very real. They must have new revenues at this session of Congress—or else they must find something else to use for money.

But the New Deal is not yet ready to present a tax program which will actually bring in the needed funds.

The New Deal called the tune but is not yet ready to pay the piper.

It is ready, however, to prosecute anew its dangerous and unconscionable warfare upon the Supreme Court of the United States—the Court which has dared to say six times during the last 2 years that the Constitution still lives!

The New Deal is ready to play political hide-and-seek with the entire Nation by proposing a half-baked tax program, which obviously will not yield the revenue needed.

But if you can fool all of the people all of the time, these tax proposals may yield rich political revenues.

They embody an alluring demagogic appeal to a Nation harrassed and distracted by long-delayed recovery—a recovery still held back by the repeated blows of New Deal politics.

In brief, the President's tax suggestions to Congress present but one more verse in the New Deal's unchanging theme—"soak the saver."

But the National Budget cannot be balanced by political vengeance.

No matter where taxes are levied, every man and woman in the Nation pays them. They are paid in daily toil, in higher prices for every necessity of life, in cruel assessment upon industry, thrift, and frugality.

Excessive taxes, wherever laid, sap the productive energies of a people and prostrate the spirit of ambition and invention, which is the keystone of America's greatness.

The choice is before the Congress today.

There is but one way out!

It is to curtail reckless spending, stamp out spoils, restore the competitive civil service, and enact an honest tax measure to bring in revenues equal to outgo.

If the New Deal Congress will not enact such a program, a Republican House of Representatives will assume the task after the November elections.

I thank you, and goodnight.

THE CAUSE OF UNREST AND HOW TO REMOVE IT

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, in normal times—that is, from 1909 to 1914—the average number of persons out of work was approximately 1,500,000 annually. Today it is no exaggeration to say that 12,000,000 are out of a job who could fill one if there was an opportunity.

The number of those unemployed has increased every year since 1914, and unless we make radical changes in our national policy, that number will increase naturally. We first realized the great perplexing problem of the unemployed in 1932, and it was frequently charged that this situation was due to the Republican administration. The administration at the moment was not responsible alone for this situation. Since Roosevelt has been President the Congress, which has been overwhelmingly Democratic, has given the President everything asked for to carry out the policy of feeding the hungry and supplying jobs for those who could get no jobs. Appropriations were made without giving time for debate, because the situation was said to be urgent. The money has been appropriated, and the program was put into operation to artificially create jobs. But the plan did not work, and there are about as many out of a job now as there were before the program was started.

In my judgment there is more behind this steady condition of unemployment other than the fault of the Democratic Party, or, at least, it is fair to say that the Democrats, like the Republicans, have failed to understand that much of this unemployment was due to causes which they have neglected to carefully examine and understand. No amount of relief appropriations will ever solve the situation, and if we do not go to the root of the trouble we will be alarmed to discover that in spite of all we can do the ranks of the unemployed will be gradually increasing. When enough of the population are without jobs and hungry the present Government will be changed and something else tried. The majority of the people under our Constitution have the right to change the Government or destroy it altogether.

The whole danger ahead lies in the fact that a discouraged and hungry people, suffering from a loss of confidence in this Government, may set up a much worse form for themselves and for the minority who do not wish to change the present form of government. There will inevitably follow, in some part of the course of change, a dictatorial government such as is now in operation in Russia, Germany, and Italy. When that time comes we can be said to have lost the free Government intended by the framers of this one.

It is also a historical paradox that those who desire most to preserve any given form of government, through their own ignorance and refusal to meet new situations, contribute the most toward the defeat of the thing they most desire.

A few examples may be in order: Insurance companies who hold mortgages against farmers have for the past 3 years insisted on foreclosing on farmers who cannot pay interest and principal. When asked to delay and let the farmer have a chance to pay out when conditions will warrant the mortgagee appeals to the court and asserts his right to his "pound of flesh" under the Constitution. The courts grant their prayer and the farm is foreclosed and the occupants turned out to the tender mercies of public and private charity. Today there are 10,000,000 farm people whose 2,000,000 homes are subject to foreclosure. The Frazier-Lemke Bankruptcy Act was designed to delay proceedings, but the mortgagees appealed to the courts to brand this act as unconstitutional. The Supreme Court said it was unconstitutional, as it clearly denies the mortgagee certain rights guaranteed to them under the Constitution. The act was repassed with changes, but the mortgagees are busy getting the act before the court again with the object of having it declared a violation of their constitutional right. What will it avail in the struggle to bring about normal conditions in this country to dispossess 10,000,000 people? Where will they go? What will they do? Will they swell the great tide of the unemployed? Will this action hasten the day when government and the Constitution will be a memory instead of a fact? Do the mortgagees want to save the Constitution? Yes. Do they want to save the Government? Yes; but they take a course to accomplish their ardent wish which dispossesses 10,000,000 people and compels them to enter the ranks of the unemployed and the hungry. It means just 10,000,000 more people added to the distressed million now who will compose the great mass of the people who some day will assert that this form of government is incapable of sustaining justice and equality and should be terminated.

Several hundred thousand city home owners with mortgaged homes and without jobs are about to be put out of their homes. The bondholders are as helpless as the home owners. The bondholders made the mistake of turning their business over to the banks. The banks organized pools and trusts. Through this method high salaries, commissions, and fees have taken about all that could be collected. The owners are being foreclosed upon by a wholesale method and will finally be put out of their homes. Where will they go? What will they do? Will they swell the soup lines? They will be forced into the line-up of the distressed millions. The soup lines will become stingy in doling out soup because of so many to feed. Millions will suffer. Millions will prematurely die. Thus more fuel will be added to the fire now burning, which in time will destroy this Government. Who is working overtime to drive the people to desperation? It is the very class which shouts the loudest to "save the Constitution" and save the Government.

No further examples are necessary to establish the fact that instead of the decrease of unemployed we can look to the increase of unemployment if we follow the methods of dealing with people who are financially distressed.

You may say this all sounds bad, that it is pictured worse than it really is; I pledge my word that, knowing intimately the actual condition of poor people, I am not overstating the situation. The next natural query is, What is actually wrong; what is the source of all this manifestation of unrest, unemployment, and suffering?

It is unnecessary to point out in figures all the details of our present situation. It may suffice in this discussion to say that fully half of our population are on some form of relief, either public or private; that there are 12,000,000 people looking for a job that can find no job no matter what steps the Government takes to supply an artificial job. Some more data may, however, be added that is of great concern to those who desire and are determined to bring peace and quiet out of confusion.

Fifty percent of the farmers of America now do not own their homes. A larger percent of the workers in fields other than agriculture have no homes of their own. These two classes constitute the great buying power of American business.

The factors which have contributed the most to this situation to the exclusion of all other factors are:

The granting of special privileges to a relatively small class, which conferred advantages not enjoyed by all. This was done through acts of Congress and acts of the State legislatures.

Permitting our natural resources to be used and controlled by private interests instead of operating them for the benefit of all the people.

Permitting private interest to use the money and credit of the Nation for their own profit while the mass of the people have been and now are compelled to carry an unbearable load of interest. At the present moment the interest on the private and public debt take annually one-third of the national income. Instead of lightening the burden of interest on the people, it is becoming more unbearable as each month passes. Every dollar handed over the counter of business is actually 66 cents, and the other 34 cents is a payment of interest. The buying power, therefore, is discounted one-third, and as a result the purchasers, the sellers, the manufacturers, and labor are all in turn penalized by this ever-present and never-satisfied institution of interest.

While the frontier lasted, this program was quite unnoticed, but with the last homestead taken and with every acre exploited, we suddenly have come face to face with actual facts as they are. Those who have exploited our frontiers and our resources, our property and our homes, have nothing left to exploit except human lives, and that is being done at this very moment. Millions in this country are not living on a standard of living conducive to health and decency.

What shall we do now to change the situation and permit the great mass of the American people to live in a land of plenty under a standard of living commensurate with the opportunities offered by the greatest country on earth?

We were 150 years getting into the present situation, but we cannot take that long to get out. Immediate action is necessary. This Congress can do much, if it will. I would suggest the following action:

First. A national moratorium to suspend for a period of 2 years the collection of all mortgages against homes in the United States in which the Government is interested as endorser of notes, bonds, or otherwise.

Second. Build a new finance system for farmers and home owners like the proposal offered in the Frazier-Lemke farm-refinance bill.

Third. Establish a Bank of the United States and junk the Federal Reserve System, making the Bank of the United States a bank of issue, reserving in that bank the sole and exclusive right to issue money.

Fourth. Permit the Bank of the United States to issue sufficient media of exchange to do the Nation's business. Call in the outstanding bonds which draw interest and are tax free, and pay them in full in cash, and thus reduce the interest on the public debt over a billion dollars annually.

Fifth. Provide a home including a house and a tract of ground for every family in the United States by loans by this Government at interest rates that will pay the cost of administration and create a surplus fund in a home-building administration. Make every such home when paid for not subject to any mortgages or lien.

Sixth. Establish a just system of transportation rates that will not destroy the interior of this country and thus encourage the diffusion of manufacturing throughout the country. This can be done by the development of our natural waterways and thus release the interior from freight rates that strangle all attempts of manufacturing.

Seventh. Provide for the aged of this country with adequate social security and put out of business poorhouses, poorfarms, and said social workers and relief administrators.

Eighth. Adopt a national policy of taxation that will tax the American people according to their ability to pay. Those who have large incomes should shoulder the burden of taxation. If they have been more fortunate than others, they should be willing to bear the burdens of the less fortunate. Those who are the recipients of large inheritances have the ability to bear a heavy tax burden and should be willing to do so. Large fortunes and large estates are usually the result of an unfair division between capital and labor, and being so, there is an added reason why this property should not escape taxation.

Ninth. Make a declaration of war impossible, except through a referendum to the people of the Nation, except in case of invasion.

Tenth. Destroy the blind adherence to party government.

It goes without saying that many who read this program will find themselves ready to condemn it as too radical and, purely from selfish motives, oppose it. Those are still unconvinced that any radical change is necessary and that in some way they may be able to cling fast to their property created under the banner of some special privilege or the monopolization of some natural resource. If those are unwilling to embrace a reasonable change, they may prepare themselves for an unreasonable one. If we are to maintain our present form of government and make it respond to the greatest good to the greatest number, the program announced will not fall far short of accomplishing this purpose. Anything less will not be acceptable to the mass of the people.

The day is fast approaching when the American people will demand action; failing in that, they will take action themselves. When they do, it will be hasty action, mad action, unreasonable action; but only such action as has been forced upon them.

Edwin Markham's poem The Man With the Hoe has described more than one instance of misgovernment in the history of the world in these lines:

How will it be with kingdoms and with Kings,
Those who have made him the thing he is,
When this dumb brute shall rise to answer God,
After the lapse of centuries?

If we do no more than we have done in the past 3 years in the way of legislation, our condition will not improve and will get worse, and we will have more out of a job 3 years from now than we have today.

There is nothing wrong with the territory in which we live. It is the same territory we have always had in days of great prosperity when people were busy and happy. It still produces enough—and more—for all. Our great natural resources hold in store benefits for the millions now living and those to be born in generations to come. Yet, in spite of the greatest blessings ever bestowed by Providence on a free people, we have substantially half of our population in distress. We have too many who have more than they need and millions without anything—even hope itself has been taken away from them. Since this situation exists in a land of plenty, it must be due to the way we have managed our affairs.

I think every Member of this House will concede we have the best form of government ever established on earth. We still have, and there is nothing fundamentally wrong with it. Under it we could enjoy the blessings of free government to all. The fault, and it is a grievous fault, lies in the fact that we have failed to correct abuses which have grown up in that Government. Selfish interests have eaten holes in the bottom of our ship of state. We refuse to rid the ship of the destroyers and spend our time in trying to cork the holes.

Why do we remain idle? Have we no leadership of this age capable of foresight enough to protect the Government and preserve the principles of free government to future generations? I do not think we have lost the power to think and reason and do justice. I think we are capable of measuring up to the responsibilities of government and in the education of the people in that system. In Congress, from my own personal observation, I am sure that Congressmen follow party more than they do their own dictates of conscience. Many Members—perhaps most Members under our election system—are primarily concerned with their own reelection and the reelection of their party. To take this or that stand might jeopardize their chance of reelection. The party whip is cracked and their own independent judgment is submerged in the party call.

The people tire of one administration and put in another pledged to every reform asked by the people. That new party starts out on its journey, but before it ever begins to undertake what it promised to do the obstacles to be overcome prevent action. The party in power subsides in its ardor to carry out its pledges, even if it ever had any intention to do so. The welfare of the party becomes the issue. The welfare of the people is forgotten. That is true no matter which of the two major parties may be in power. When powerful business interests contribute to both parties it should be evidence enough that the contributors know both parties.

The remedy is to break down the power of political parties as such and vote men into office on the sole question of principle. I think the hour has struck when the voters must cast aside the halo of the name of the party and march to the polls to elect men who stand for a principle regardless of party. When that time comes, and it should come quickly, the abuses that have grown up in this Government can be eliminated. Only through such means can the Government be perpetuated.

The gravest situation with respect to unemployment and the future of this Government concerns the youth of this country. Our young people have always been the actors, the doers of things in the history of all our past. They were the best pioneers, the best soldiers, and in many ways the best statesmen.

The youth of America today demand an opportunity for expression—they have the same right to plan, to hope, and build for the future that we all had when we were young. To throttle this instinct in the youth of America is the most dangerous thing that is being permitted today. All opportunities to them are shut off; they are met daily by the statement that there is no job open to them; around them they see the never-ending line of the unemployed. No matter what their school advantages have been, there are millions of the youth of this country who cannot find any opportunity anywhere to actually begin their life as a useful citizen of this Republic. To my mind, this situation is the most deplorable result of our financial and economic break-down. To delay one day longer in establishing economic order, if we have the power to do so, is to throttle the ambition and hopes of youth. Being responsible for a continuation of this situation rests to a great degree upon Congress. Delay means playing with dynamite.

Abuses or the use of this Government in favoring private interests which through the years have become powerful, sometimes more powerful than the Government itself, has brought about a situation of distressed millions in a land of plenty. Nothing but sheer, unafraid independence can now rescue this Government from the hands of those interests. The party system of today has utterly failed in this task. It is urgent that this independence of thought and action take form immediately. The voters of this Nation are equal to the situation; we have leaders who are equal to the occasion; but the thing we lack is an "idea." Once the thought of independent action, not stifled by party ties, once takes root with the people, the undertaking to substitute the general welfare of all the people for the old doctrine of "special interests" will be under way. Under this interpretation of the functions of government, we can re-establish equal opportunities for all, a chance for all, a living for all who will work; we can establish justice instead of injustice, and bring the blessings of liberty to a free people, as was described in the preamble of the Constitution of the United States.

No government in all the world ever made a greater assertion in the interest of freedom; read it:

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution of the United States of America.

Our duty as Congressmen is to make this provision of the Constitution actually mean what it says.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1936

(Legislative day of Monday, Feb. 24, 1936)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, March 11, 1936, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Keyes	Overton
Ashurst	Copeland	King	Pope
Austin	Costigan	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bachman	Couzens	Lewis	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Logan	Robinson

Mr. LEWIS. I announce the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] because of illness, and I further announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] is necessarily absent.

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES IN 1936

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably, with an amendment to the amendment reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, Senate Resolution 225. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 225) submitted by Mr. ROBINSON on January 30, 1936, referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and on February 6 reported from that committee with an amendment, on page 3, line 18, after the word "aggregate", to insert "$100,000", and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various Presidential candidates, Vice-Presidential candidates, and candidates for the United States Senate, in both parties, the names of the persons, firms, or corporations subscribing the amount contributed, the method of expenditure of said sums, and all facts in relation thereto, not only as to the subscriptions of money and expenditures thereof but as to the use of any other means or influence, including the promise or use of patronage, and all other facts in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Senate in enacting any remedial legislation or in deciding any contests which might be instituted involving the right to a seat in the United States Senate.

No Senator shall be appointed upon said committee from a State in which a Senator is to be elected at the general election in 1936.

The investigation hereby provided for, in all the respects above enumerated, shall apply to candidates and to contests before primaries, conventions, and the contests and campaign terminating in the general election in 1936.

Said committee is hereby authorized to act upon its own initiative and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made before said committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in said complaint are immaterial or untrue.

Said committee is hereby authorized, in the performance of its duties, to sit at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as it deems necessary or proper. It is specifically authorized to require the attendance of witnesses by subpoena or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, clerical and other assistants; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words.

Said committee is hereby specifically authorized to act through any subcommittee authorized to be appointed by said committee. The chairman of said committee or any member of any subcommittee may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpoenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or who appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law.

The expenses of said investigation, not exceeding in the aggregate $100,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee.

All hearings before said committee shall be public, and all orders or decisions of the committee shall be public.

The committee shall make a full report to the Senate on the first day of the next session of the Congress.

Mr. McNARY. My attention was diverted for a moment. I ask, What is the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that it is similar to resolutions which have been adopted in preceding Congresses providing for an investigation of campaign expenditures. The resolution has been reported unanimously by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Is the sum made available by the resolution similar to sums provided by former resolutions on the same subject?

Mr. BYRNES. The amount proposed by the resolution as reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections was $100,000, but the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate reduced it to $30,000, which is the amount provided in former resolutions of a similar character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The amendment reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to the amendment reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections was, on page 3, line 18, after the word "aggregate", to strike out "$100,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$30,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY subsequently said: Earlier in the day the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] offered for the Senate's consideration Senate Resolution 225. Upon reflection

I recall that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who is necessarily absent, desired to propose an amendment to that resolution. For that reason I at this time wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

NON-INDIAN CLAIMANTS OF INDIAN LANDS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a supplemental report relative to non-Indian claimants who were found by the Pueblo Lands Board to have occupied and claimed land in good faith but whose claims were not sustained and whose occupation was terminated under the act of June 7, 1924, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WALSH presented a petition of the National Fire Protection Association, of Boston, Mass., praying for an increase in the appropriation to develop additional methods for farm fire prevention of existing research studies on spontaneous heating and ignition of agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of the division of conservation of natural resources of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs, praying for adequate appropriations for the control of the dutch elm disease, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of the Massachusetts Forest and Park Association, of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the construction of a tunnel in Rocky Mountain National Park for irrigation purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of the Women's Trade Union League, of Worcester, Mass., remonstrating against an increase in the appropriation for the National Guard, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Great Council of Massachusetts, Degree of Pocahontas of the Improved Order of Red Men of Massachusetts, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for a bureau of alien deportation in the Department of Justice, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of Past Councilors Association of Massachusetts, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Haverhill, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation relating to the deportation of aliens, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of Elizabeth L. McNamara Auxiliary, No. 23, United Spanish War Veterans, of Malden, Mass., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 3545, to provide travel pay to enlisted men who were held in the Philippines beyond their terms of enlistment in the War with Spain, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit certain practices of the motion-picture industry in relation to block booking and blind selling, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of members of First Division Chapter, National Council of Officials of the Railway Mail Service, of Boston, Mass., praying for the enactment of House bill 10267, to adjust salaries of supervisory officials of the Railway Mail Service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of Stockbridge Grange, No. 295, Patrons of Husbandry, of Stockbridge, Mass., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 1632, to regulate commerce by water carriers, which was ordered to lie on the table.

FAIR TRADE BILL—PETITION

Mr. WALSH. I present a petition signed by John Viegas, secretary, New Bedford Retail Grocers and Provisions Dealers Association, New Bedford, Mass., and over 700 other food dealers of southeastern Massachusetts, urging the enactment by the Congress of the so-called Robinson-Patman fair-trade bill, and ask that it lie on the table.

There being no objection, the petition was received and ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3254) to exempt certain small firearms from the provisions of the National Firearms Act, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1682) thereon.

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1683) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11365) relating to the filing of copies of income returns, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1684) thereon.

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 1871) granting certain public lands to the State of Montana for the use and benefit of the Northern Montana Agricultural and Manual Training School, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1685) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LA FOLLETTE:

A bill (S. 4254) for the relief of Anna O'Brien and William O'Brien; and

A bill (S. 4255) for the relief of Adolph Micek, a minor; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BACHMAN:

A bill (S. 4256) granting a pension to Henry Watson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 4257) to provide that individual income-tax returns may be made under oath or accompanied by a written declaration that they are made under the penalties of perjury; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

A bill (S. 4258) for the relief of the leader of the Naval Academy Band; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. DUFFY:

A bill (S. 4259) to provide for the establishment of a Coast Guard station at Marinette, Wis.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 4260) making Nancy J. Litman eligible to receive the benefits of the Civil Service Retirement Act; and

A bill (S. 4261) for the relief of Charles Tabit; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BONE:

A bill (S. 4262) granting a pension to Harriett Ware; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4263) for the relief of the estate of Ezra Fislerman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4264) for the relief of Earl J. Thomas; to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (S. 4265) to authorize the Secretary of War to set apart as a national cemetery certain lands of the United States Military Reservation of Fort Bliss, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TRAMMELL:

A bill (S. 4266) to amend the Social Security Act to provide for aid to transients; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

A bill (S. 4267) to increase the processing tax on certain oils, to impose a tax upon imported soybean oil, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

A bill (S. 4268) to establish additional national cemeteries; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NORBECK:

A bill (S. 4269) to authorize the reexamination of the claims of individual Sioux Indians heretofore filed under the act of May 3, 1928, and report to Congress thereon; and

A bill (S. 4270) to authorize the investigation by the Secretary of the Interior of the loss of Indian allotments in certain cases and for a report thereon; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion of Mr. POPE, the Committee on Commerce was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) to authorize the completion of work contemplated by Executive Order No. 7075, and it was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11035, the War Department appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 3, line 10, to strike out "$303,960" and insert "$323,960." On page 69, line 12, after the word "navigation", to insert "and to include waterway improvements investigated by the War Department under specific authorization from Congress and subsequently undertaken pursuant to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935."

On page 68, line 20, to strike out "$138,677,899" and insert "$158,677,899."

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION AND STEAMBOAT INSPECTION—AMENDMENT

Mr. GIBSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 8599) to provide for a change in the designation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to create a marine casualty investigation board and increase efficiency in administration of the steamboat inspection laws, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ADDITIONAL CLERK UNDER SERGEANT AT ARMS

Mr. McNARY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 249), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof having charge of the preparation of the bill making appropriations for the legislative establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, is hereby directed to increase the number of clerks at $1,800 under the supervision of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper by one.

INVESTIGATION OF COST OF CERTAIN PELTS

Mr. POPE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 250), which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in cost of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Dressed or dyed Persian lamb pelts, Russian pony pelts, squirrel pelts, and mole pelts.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. FLETCHER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 251), which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-fifth Congress at such times and places as it deems advisable, to make investigations into all matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents relating thereto as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report in due course to the Senate the result thereof, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all the expenses incurred in pursuance hereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

SALARIES AND POSITIONS UNDER SECRETARY OF SENATE

Mr. LEWIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 252), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof having charge of the preparation of the bill making appropriations for the legislative establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, is hereby directed to make the following changes in salaries and positions under the supervision of the Secretary of the Senate, to wit:

Assistant financial clerk: Strike out "assistant financial clerk, $4,200" and insert "assistant financial clerk, $4,500";

Executive and assistant Journal clerks: Strike out "executive clerk and assistant Journal clerk, at $3,180 each" and insert "executive clerk, $3,180; assistant Journal clerk, $3,360";

Library and stationery assistants: Strike out "assistant librarian and assistant keeper of stationery, at $2,400 each";

Clerks: Insert "one at $3,180";

Strike out "two at $2,640 each" and insert "one at $2,640";

Strike out "one at $2,400" and insert "five at $2,400 each";

Strike out "four at $2,040" and insert "two at $2,040 each";

Strike out "two at $1,740 each" and insert "four at $1,740 each";

Insert "two at $1,860 each";

Strike out "two assistants in the library at $1,740 each";

Laborers: Strike out "one in Secretary's office, $1,680" and insert "two in Secretary's office at $1,680 each";

Document room: Strike out "first assistant, $3,360" and insert "first assistant, $2,640";

Strike out "second assistant, $2,400" and insert "second assistant, $2,040";

Strike out "four assistants, at $1,860 each" and insert "three assistants, at $2,040 each."

SALARIES AND POSITIONS UNDER SERGEANT AT ARMS OF SENATE

Mr. LEWIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 253), which was ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, or any subcommittee thereof having charge of the preparation of the bill making appropriations for the legislative establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, is hereby directed to make the following changes in salaries and positions under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, to wit:

Deputy Sergeant at Arms and storekeeper: Strike out "$4,440" and insert "$5,400";

Clerks: Strike out "one at $2,640" and insert "one at $3,180"; strike out "one at $2,100" and insert "two at $2,100 each"; strike out "three at $1,800 each" and insert "four at $1,800 each";

Janitor: Strike out "$2,040" and insert "$2,700";

Laborers: Strike out "three at $1,320 each" and insert "two at $1,320 each";

Skilled laborers: Strike out "five at $1,680 each" and insert "six at $1,680 each";

Messengers: Strike out "one at card door, $2,400 and $240 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent" and insert "one at card door, $2,400 and $600 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent";

Folding room: Strike out "assistant, $2,160" and insert "assistant, $2,400";

Telephone operators: Strike out "13 at $1,560 each" and insert "14 at $1,560 each";

Capitol Police: Strike out "captain, $2,460" and insert "captain, $3,000."

INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING ACTIVITIES—INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES

Mr. BLACK, from the Special Committee to Investigate Lobbying Activities, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 254), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 165 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, providing for an investigation of lobbying activities in connection with the so-called holding-company bill (S. 2796), agreed to July 11, 1935, is further amended by substituting the figures "$75,000" for the figures "$50,000", in line 12, page 2, of the resolution.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to state that this resolution is reported by direction of the entire committee appointed under Senate Resolution 165.

BOY SCOUTS JAMBOREE—POSTPONEMENT OF A BILL

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on February 20, 1936, the Senate passed the bill (S. 3586) to authorize the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of the Treasury to lend Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and other needed equipment for use at the National Jamboree of the Boy Scouts of America; and to authorize the use of property in the District of Columbia and its environs by the Boy Scouts of America at their national jamboree to be held during the summer of 1937, and subsequently the House passed an identical bill, which was sent to the Senate, and passed. A motion was entered to reconsider the vote by which the Senate bill was passed, and the House was requested to return the bill to the Senate. The bill has been received, and I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the Senate bill was passed may be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, is so ordered.

CURRENCY EXPANSION—THOMAS-CAROTHERS DEBATE

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on March 8, 1936, there occurred a radio joint debate under the auspices of the National Economy League, the question discussed being "Is an expansion of the currency necessary and sound?" The affirmative was upheld by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the negative position being taken by Dr. Neil Carothers, of Lehigh University. I ask unanimous consent that the two addresses may be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THOMAS-CAROTHERS DEBATE ON CURRENCY EXPANSION

(A radio joint debate under the auspices of the National Economy League, from New York City, on Mar. 8, 1936)

The question discussed was: Is an expansion of the currency necessary and sound?

The affirmative was upheld by Hon. ELMER THOMAS, United States Senator from Oklahoma, and the negative position was taken by Dr. Neil Carothers, of Lehigh University.

For the affirmative, Senator THOMAS spoke as follows:

"This discussion will be in the nature of a debate. Dr. Neil Carothers, of Lehigh University, will join me on this program.

"The following question has been submitted for our answers: Is an expansion of the currency necessary and sound?

"Before attempting to answer the question I must define the issue. The interrogatory presents two questions:

"First. Is an expansion of the currency necessary?

"Second. Would an expansion of the currency be sound?

"The first question: Is an expansion of the currency necessary?

"By an expansion of the currency I do not mean inflation. Inflation means the unwarranted, unjustifiable, and excessive issuance of irredeemable paper currency.

"I do not now and have never favored such a financial policy.

"Knowing the history of nations and the effect of the fluctuation of the value of monetary units upon civilization, I have heretofore and do now condemn inflation as an inhuman crime against the people. However, inflation is no more harmful than deflation. Deflation is the direct opposite of inflation and means the contraction of the amount of currency in circulation.

"By currency I mean gold coin, silver coin, or paper money. By currency I do not mean bank credit. Currency is money. Bank credit is only a substitute for money. While bank credit serves as a medium of exchange and may be converted into money, bank credit is not money. Currency as herein defined measures prices. Bank credit or substitute money does not measure prices.

"The number of currency dollars in circulation, in the main, controls the value of the dollar. An increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation means increasing the supply of price-measuring money units.

"When dollars are plentiful, dollars are cheap; and when dollars are cheap, prices are high. On the other hand, when dollars are scarce, prices are high; and when dollars are high, prices are cheap.

"The value of money depends upon the number of dollars in circulation.

"If there be those who disagree with the economic principles just stated, then I must leave them to answer, not me but the master financial minds of the thousands of years of recorded history.

"In 1920 money was plentiful—in fact, so plentiful that prices were the highest in decades.

"In 1921 and 1922 prices were lowered by reducing the amount of money in circulation.

"In 1932 money was scarce—so scarce and so valuable that prices were the lowest in generations.

"In 1933 the administration at Washington proceeded to raise prices by lowering the value of the dollar. The value of the dollar in foreign exchange was lowered by reducing the gold content of such dollar. The value of the domestic dollar was and is being reduced through a planned and orderly increase of Federal Reserve notes and a wider use of silver.

"The contraction of the currency just after the World War reduced prices. The expansion of the currency now is increasing prices.

"By expansion of the currency I mean a planned, orderly, and controlled increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation.

"It might be asked: How can we expand the currency in an absolutely safe and orderly manner?

"Under existing law the Federal Reserve System may expand the currency at will through the policy of open-market operations. Under this policy the Federal Reserve banks may enter the open market and purchase bonds and pay for such bonds with Federal Reserve notes. This policy places new money in circulation and thereby directly expands the currency.

"The present expansion of the currency through the issuance of silver certificates presents no problem of currency control. We issue such certificates against newly mined or purchased silver and the amount of new money placed in circulation is limited and controlled by the amount of silver acquired.

"If money should become too plentiful and prices should rise too high, the Federal Reserve System now holds billions of bonds which could be sold, and thereby any amount of currency may be removed at will from circulation.

"Again I say, currency dollars and not bank credit control the value or buying power of the dollar. The expansion of bank credit will not accomplish the end we seek to attain.

"All must admit that the issuance and placing in circulation of new dollars—be such dollars gold, silver, or paper—will expand the currency, make money more plentiful and thereby cheaper, and the result will be higher prices.

"We had a higher general price level in view when I introduced the monetary adjustment amendment in 1933. The amendment worked. Higher prices are the result of the operation of the law.

"Prices for raw materials and basic American products, while higher than 3 years ago, still are too low to enable producers to pay costs of production and have left a reasonable margin of profit. Until legitimate business shows a reasonable profit, governmental budgets will not be balanced; public borrowing must continue; banks dare not expand their credit; industry must continue to seek Federal loans; and the unemployed must continue to be supported by the Government.

"I contend that an expansion of the currency is absolutely necessary in order to bring about the following imperative accomplishments:

"First. The general price level must be raised sufficiently to permit producers, wage earners, and industry to survive and make reasonable profits.

"Second. Business must be stimulated and profits must be increased in order to make possible the collection of sufficient taxes to balance the Budget.

"Third. The price level must be raised in order to make it possible for banks to renew the policy of making commercial loans.

"Fourth. The price level must be raised prior to any substantial reduction in public relief spending and most certainly before we can stop such spending altogether.

"Fifth. The price level must be raised slightly more before we can possibly have a return of general and permanent prosperity.

"If there be those who disagree with our demand for a slightly higher general price level, then I would call attention to the following facts:

"Today our total tax burden is some $10,000,000,000 per year. Our total massed interest burden is another $10,000,000,000 annually; and our total massed debt burden, public and private, is estimated to be $250,000,000,000. As taxes, interest, and debts increase, the amount of money available to the people must likewise be increased. As taxes, interest, and debts go up, the value of the dollar must come down.

"Those who refuse to recognize and acknowledge the obvious validity of these principles of economics are courting defaults, repudiation, bankruptcy, and disaster.

"Before passing to the second part of the question—Would an expansion of the currency be sound?—permit me to suggest that, as a member of the policy-making branch of our Government, I must consider the money question, not from a theoretical standpoint, not from the viewpoint of any one group or class of our citizens, but from the standpoint of the broad general public interest. However, if I represented a constituency composed of the ultra rich, a constituency owning and operating banks, trust and insurance companies, I would not change my position on the money question in a single particular.

"In order for the holders of bonds, notes, and fixed investments to collect interest and eventually the principal, the debtors must be able to pay. For debtors to pay they must be able to earn profits, and to secure profits the price level at all times must be regulated, adjusted, and maintained in harmonious relationship with the tax, interest, and debt burdens resting upon the people.

"In addition to holding that planned and controlled expansion of the currency is necessary, I contend that such an expansion would be thoroughly sound.

"Let me call attention to the following facts:

"On last Thursday, March 5, we had a total monetary gold stock of $10,167,000,000. On the same date we had a total monetary silver stock in the sum of approximately $1,500,000,000.

"On that date our metallic monetary stocks of gold and silver totaled some $11,667,000,000.

"Our monetary gold stocks amount to almost one-half the monetary gold of the world. Our monetary silver stocks amount to almost one-fifth of all the monetary silver known to exist in the world.

"Against this vast hoard of gold and silver we have in circulation of all kinds of money the total sum of $5,843,000,000. Tonight we have gold and silver in our Treasury in the sum of almost $6,000,000,000, which is used neither as money nor as the basis for the issuance of new currency. Our monetary metallic base is sufficient to permit of the issuance of some $6,000,000,000 of new currency, and each such new dollar would be backed by 100 cents of gold and silver.

"I contend that from the standpoint of financial soundness there would be no obstacle to the issuance of so much new money; however, I have not and do not now advocate the issuance of that much new currency.

"From the beginning of the depression I have demanded, consistently, the restoration of the 1926 general price level. In 1926 business was good; wage earners were employed and the country was prosperous. In that year the dollar was valued, in terms of purchasing power and as measured by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, at 100 cents.

"It is to the value of the 'Coolidge dollar' of 1926 that I wish to have our Government return.

"I am frequently asked as to the amount of new money necessary to be placed in circulation to restore the 1926 price level. No one could answer such a question accurately, and any answer would be only a guess.

"In 1921 and 1922 some $1,500,000,000 of real money were taken out of circulation and the result was a fall of 50 percent in prices. At this time I do not think it would require so large a sum to accomplish the purpose we have in mind—the restoration of the Coolidge era of prosperity price level.

"In conclusion, using the gold and silver in our Treasury as the basis, those who seek to refute the economic principles controlling the value of money as outlined tonight must argue with the history of nations.

"If it is contended that the expansion of the currency will not raise prices, then why oppose the policy?

"If it is contended that prices can be raised by an expansion of bank credit, then, in 1930, when bank credit was inflated to the highest point in history, why did we not have correspondingly higher prices?

"If it is contended that the general price level is now high enough, then why are budgets unbalanced; why are banks not making loans, and why do we have millions unemployed and other millions on public relief?

"We have tried every form of relief save following through with the monetary-adjustment program. Insofar as we have gone satisfactory results have been secured. Only a short section of the road remains to be traveled.

"The money question is primarily a domestic problem; however, national and international stabilization of currencies must precede permanent world-wide prosperity and economic stability. But before we are ready to consider permanent international stabilization of the dollar in foreign exchange we must regulate and adjust the value of such dollar so as to serve best our own domestic economy.

"Our foreign-exchange dollar with its present gold content is perhaps approximately correctly valued.

"Our domestic dollar—being neither tied to nor redeemable in gold—is more valuable than our foreign-exchange dollar, and it is the excess value in the domestic dollar over the foreign-exchange dollar that we demand should be eliminated.

"Our policy of maintaining a dual-valued dollar is responsible for the enormous influx of gold coming to America. This gold depletes the basis for the stability of the currency of our 'good neighbors' and has forced our Government to build a prison in Kentucky for its protection.

"In order to reduce the value of the domestic dollar to a value comparable to the value of the foreign-exchange dollar; in order to balance the Budget; in order to make it possible for banks to resume the making of commercial loans; in order to reduce unemployment, and in order to check and eventually remove the necessity for public-relief spending, I contend that a slight additional expansion of the currency is necessary and that such expansion will be sound."

For the negative, Dr. Carothers spoke as follows:

"I have been invited by the National Economy League to join with Senator ELMER THOMAS in a brief discussion of this question: 'Is expansion of the currency necessary and sound?' While I did not have the opportunity to know in advance just what Senator THOMAS would say in the broadcast he has just finished, he very courteously outlined for me what he has in mind, and by this courtesy he has enabled us to come together on a concrete issue, without any shadow boxing with the grave matters before us.

"Let me say in advance that I am convinced that Senator THOMAS and I have identically the same aim, that both of us are concerned only with the welfare of our country. I recognize that Senator THOMAS has in the past 3 years played a leading role in the monetary policies of the Nation. My appreciation of the dignity and importance of his position in our country's Government is equaled only by my disapproval of his views on our monetary policy. If I am blunt in my discussion of these views, it is only because of the importance I attach to any proposals that he has presented to you.

"The economic system which supports our more than a hundred million people is the most complicated machine in the history of the world; and in this great, complicated machine, money is the most complex and delicate of all its parts. The first principle of the science of money is that the effects of money changes on prices and prosperity are always different from the surface effects that everybody can see.

"This idea that prosperity can be promoted by expansion of the currency is very old. It was used by John Law 200 years ago, when he explained to King Louis how expanding the currency would make every Frenchman rich, and ended up by making nearly all Frenchmen paupers. It was used by Members of the First Congress of this Nation, the Continental Congress, in favor of an expansion of the currency that bankrupted the war-torn Colonies. It was used again in our Civil War, in favor of an expansion of the currency that would have cost the North the war if the South had not been persuaded by its Congressmen to make a still larger expansion of the currency. It was used in support of the famous inflation law of 1933, which popularly bears the name of Senator

THOMAS himself, under which we have already followed a policy of currency expansion so wholeheartedly that we have destroyed our monetary system.

"This argument for expansion of the currency has been advanced in the United States in every depression since 1860. It is the only economic argument advanced by the advocates of the Townsend delusion. This one notion about money has probably caused more suffering than the belief in witchcraft.

"Let's examine this argument for expansion of the currency. Here it is. A depression is a condition of low prices, slack trade, unemployment, reduced spending, and diminished consumption. These are obviously tragic things, causing heartache and suffering. The way to cure these great evils is to increase spending. You can increase spending by forcing money into circulation. The money, like the music, goes round and round. I almost said: 'Yo, ho.' The money increases demand, stimulates business, and encourages employment. Debtors are relieved. Production is promoted. The depression is ended. Government is the only agency that can print money. It can force it into circulation by boondoggling or by subsidies to favored groups or by supporting a horde of bureaucrats. Therefore, the proper procedure in times of depression is for the Government to pump paper money into circulation. Whatever the excuse for the spending, the plan is always to use the power of the Government to pour out printing-press money, and the argument is always this argument that the money will go round and round and revive business.

"What's wrong with this idea? In the first place it is too simple. It is like those puzzle contests in which the reader thinks he will get a prize for filling in the missing letters in the name of the great city, N-W, Y-K. It's too easy. If this scheme would work there never would be a depression. Just as soon as one started Congress would merely pump out some paper money and the depression would be over. Forget money theory for a moment and consider the fact that no depression in history has ever been ended by the issue of paper money.

"The paper-money argument ignores the plain facts about money. We live in a credit economy, in which circulating money, whether gold or paper, does about one-tenth of our business. The other nine-tenths is done with credit instruments, chiefly checks drawn against bank deposits. These bank deposits grow out of business activity. Thus business activity creates its own currency. There simply is no such thing as not having enough currency to carry on business. What a country needs in depression is not more money but more business activity. And now we come to the most important fact of all. The surest and most vital encouragements to business are these three: Confidence in the future of business, confidence in the soundness of the money system, and confidence in the good sense of the Government.

"The issue of paper money by government in small quantities has no important effect whatever on employment, on consumption, on business. It goes into circulation briefly, builds some useless bridge across a creek, or pays for some lessons in tap dancing, and then goes into banks to swell the deposits. It does not go round and round. It stops right there. All that it has done is to add to Government debt. Our Government has spent, in exactly 3 years, in an effort to stimulate business, the almost incredible sum of $20,000,000,000, and here we are tonight, 6 years after the depression began, solemnly debating the question whether two billions more will end the depression. Senator THOMAS, coming from Oklahoma and knowing horses, knows what pushing on the reins does. It does not make the horse go. It slows him down or makes him run away. Pumping paper money into circulation is just pushing on the reins. If you issue a little, it does nothing. If you issue a lot, it makes the economic horse run away.

"Let us face here tonight some very unhappy facts, simply because facing them is the only way to save the country from a final disaster. In 1933 this country reached the bottom pit of depression, the low point in economic stagnation. The turning point had been reached. In the spring of that year Congress passed the money law which bears Senator THOMAS' name. This law permits inflation of the currency by every known method. At the time the law was passed this country had 40 percent of all the monetary gold on earth, much more than was needed to meet all public and private debts, much more than was needed to finance recovery. Even before the law was passed the Government had repudiated its solemn obligations both at home and abroad and had confiscated nearly $5,000,000,000 in gold belonging to private citizens. Since the law was passed we have debased our gold coinage 41 percent and adulterated what is left of our gold standard with a billion dollars in useless silver. The ostensible purposes of this strange program were to raise prices to the 1926 level, to relieve debtors, and to end depression. Do you recall what Senator THOMAS said the bill would do? He said that it would take $250,000,000,000 from the rich, who had it, and give it to the poor, who did not have it.

"What are the results of this law after 3 years? Has it ended unemployment? There are 10 million still unemployed. Has it ended depression? There are still 20,000,000 persons on relief. Has it raised prices to the 1926 level? General prices have risen just 9 percent since the dollar was debased 41 percent. Has it taken the wealth away from the rich? The rich have become richer in the past 3 years, some of them directly through this devaluation law.

"So much for what this 1933 law to expand the currency has not done. Let's see what it has done. First, it has destroyed our money system. We have no standard money. We have only a floating mass of nondescript, irredeemable paper money, while there lies in the Government vaults a great mass of idle gold and silver, so dead that the Government is planning to bury it in a hole in Kentucky. Second, it has retarded recovery all over the world by sucking gold from foreign countries badly in need of it, by demoralizing the recovery of foreign trade, and by preventing the international stabilization of currencies on which world peace and world prosperity alike depend. Third, and worst of all, it has set the stage for a calamitous inflation. The failure of the whole money program led the Government to a desperate effort to squander its way out, which has resulted only in a huge burden of debt and a vast accumulation of unused private bank deposits.

"There are $11,000,000,000 of idle gold and silver in the vaults. Yet the total circulation of money in the country is less than $6,000,000,000. The difference of five billions measures the gigantic failure of 3 years' effort to expand the currency. All that it has done is to prove once more the elementary principle that business creates currency, not currency business.

"And now tonight we have presented to us a proposal to issue two or three billion dollars of paper money. For 3 years they have taken the horse to water and tried to make him drink, and we are now considering a plan to put a little more water in the tank. And this when there are freely available at any moment that business can use it enough excess reserves and unused bank credit to provide any sum up to a hundred billion dollars. It is proposed to issue this paper money against the gold and silver in the vaults. But that gold is locked up and a new issue of paper money would be merely an unneeded addition to the floating mass of irredeemable paper we now have.

"The mounting Government debt, the swollen bank deposits, and the excess bank reserves make an explosive combination ready to blow up in a headlong inflation. Did you see where a great university has asked authority to change its bond assets to more speculative securities in a last effort to save its endowment from inflation? Do you see the advertisements offering to tell rich men how to protect their fortunes against inflation? The issue of unneeded paper money at this time might easily be the match to set off this explosion.

"Senator THOMAS and I have the same desire here tonight. We both want to see the end of a depression that ought to have been over long since. We both want to see an end to unemployment and distress. We both want to see this country escape the miseries of inflation. But we differ fundamentally as to the policy to achieve these ends. I am going to tell you here how we can end depression and avoid inflation. Have the Government quit spending money like a drunken sailor. Have the Government restore an honest gold-standard currency. And have the Government guarantee to the people that juggling the currency will not again be tried in this Nation. It has suffered enough already."

REGULATION OF IMMIGRATION

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Sun-Telegraph of March 9, 1936, entitled "Control Aliens."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Sun-Telegraph of Mar. 9, 1936]
CONTROL ALIENS!—THE REYNOLDS BILL FOR THE REGULATION OF IMMIGRANTS SHOULD BE PASSED

The bill of Senator REYNOLDS, of North Carolina, requiring the registration of all aliens in this country, a rigid system of selective immigration and the deportation of all undesirables, will appeal to every patriotic and intelligent American as a needed regulation in a very important field of Government responsibility, and should be promptly passed.

The purposes of the bill are several, and each is vital.

It would rid the country of lawbreaking aliens and bar the entrance of aliens who are criminally communistic or associated with any organization advocating the overthrow of our Government by force and violence.

It would also relieve the Federal and State Governments, as well as private charitable organizations, of the expense of maintaining a horde of destitute foreigners in addition to the millions of our own people who are now dependent on our overstrained relief agencies, both public and private.

Another merit of the bill is that it would simplify the problem of finding reemployment for Americans who are out of work by saving available jobs for our own citizens.

The registration and fingerprinting of all aliens in the country would be required, and in addition there would be set up under the bill a system of intelligence tests for admission of immigrants to this country and effective machinery for the prompt deportation of undesirables.

The extent to which the influx of aliens under our present lax administration adds to the burdens of our citizens was revealed by Senator REYNOLDS in his speech in the Senate accompanying the introduction of his bill.

"In 1935", he said, "189,000 aliens of all classes were admitted; in 1934 the number was 163,000; and in 1933, 150,000.

"Each year since 1933", he continued, "we have admitted more and more immigrants in disregard of our millions of Americans who were seeking employment on every hand and in every section of the country."

The Reynolds-Starnes bill is a constructive step in the direction of a solution of our alien problem.

It is infinitely to be preferred to the Kerr bill, sponsored by the Department of Labor.

Unlike the Kerr bill, it substitutes impersonal and legal tests for admission and deportation instead of the discretionary powers asserted by the administration and so liable to abuse.

The Reynolds-Starnes bill does not attempt to deal with so-called deportation hardship cases, which are in part the subject of the Kerr bill.

The much needed power to exclude or expel any person whose presence or activities are inimical to the public interest is, by the terms of this bill, confided to the Executive.

It would be better that this power should be lodged in the courts to insure its impersonal exercise in accordance with the law, and nothing else.

To confer it upon the Executive is, in effect, to lodge it with an Executive subordinate, and to invite abuse through an unwise amplitude of discretion.

The power, however, to exclude or expel undesirables is one which is possessed and exercised by every enlightened nation save our own.

This country is dedicated to liberty, and only those who love liberty and will maintain and defend it, and not abuse it, should be allowed to immigrate to our shores.

In fact, the Reynolds-Starnes bill shows careful drafting and a just appreciation of the grave abuses that have resulted from our weak and vacillating policy with regard to immigration.

It not only points the way to a just solution of this vital administration problem, but travels far along the way of achieving such a solution.

WILL CONGRESS FAIL?—EDITORIAL FROM THE CHARLESTON GAZETTE

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Charleston Gazette of March 5, 1936, entitled "Will Congress Fail?" This editorial was written by a distinguished and beloved former Member of this body, Hon. William E. Chilton.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette of Mar. 5, 1936]

WILL CONGRESS FAIL?

Life is short, maybe too short. Few men live to see their original thoughts accepted. Socrates, centuries before Jesus, exposed the errors of the old thought, died for the idea that the soul is immortal. The people from whom descended the men and women who now grapple with the problems of life in the United States, lived through centuries when thought was a slave to tyranny, ignorance, and superstition. Copernicus, Galileo, and Roger Bacon, dared not to express the thoughts that later gave us modern machinery and most of the conveniences of home. Yes; any new deal has always been dragged through and over all the rough going that entrenched power could devise. Those who have thought ahead of their day have been made to suffer or die. People have acted like children called upon to swallow castor oil after taking calomel.

Take these thoughts to your study and consider them in connection with human impatience, such as expected Washington to defeat England, when his army was ragged, hungry, and without guns and ammunition. The fellows who are always united to preserve the status quo can always find a plausible reason, and the means for checking for awhile the wagon of progress. Those now seeming only to acquiesce in the demand for relieving the farmer, the worker, and the small-business man, are saying: "Go on and amend the Constitution; if the people want to change it, the Constitution provides the way." Then they look for a roar of "ayes". In the first place, a proposal to amend must receive the affirmative vote of two-thirds of both branches of Congress. That is hard to get even after the subject matter has been fully discussed and considered.

But the proposed amendment is not submitted to the people but to the legislatures of the several States, or to conventions in the several States, "as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress." The "people" must take their consolation in the words, "We the people of the United States" in the caption. Below those words the "people" are left to "cut in" as, if, and when they may be able to do so.

Draw near and observe that—

1. It requires three-fourths (now 36) of State legislatures or conventions to ratify an amendment.

2. There is no provision for selecting the members of the conventions. Why can they not be appointed? The Tories and their henchmen are always organized to check any progress but their own.

3. It would require, in most of the States, at least 4 years to change the political complexion of both branches of the legislatures of 36 States. The people vote tickets made and alined on partisan issues. It is difficult—almost impossible—to elect State legislators committed to the ratification of a constitutional amendment. There is almost the certainty that other State questions and personal considerations will complicate the election issue; and where one of the leading political parties goes a hundred percent Tory, and seeks to draw the decisions of the courts into an attitude of endorsement of governmental policy, then Congress is challenged, as was the English Parliament under the leadership of Cromwell.

The people cannot turn out a Federal judge as they can a Member of Congress. The framers of the Constitution, however, provided for this contingency of public demand and national necessity on one hand, and an opposition with magnifying glasses looking for constitutional points to delay or obstruct the legislative branch. In England that kind of a clash between the legislative branch and a stubborn king, claiming prerogatives hateful to the people, lost the head of that king and the throne of another; and it delayed, but did not destroy, the onward march of Anglo-Saxon freedom. The acts of Parliament are now the "supreme law of the land" in England.

Congress has the constitutional power to end the present emasse. That power is written in plain English in section 2, article 3, of the Constitution.

But the people are helpless until and unless the Congress shall exercise that power to "protect its prerogative."

No case involving the A. A. A., the N. R. A., or any other economic policy can go to the Supreme Court except an appeal.

This section 2, article 3, of the Constitution is not a stranger to the courts. It has been construed by the Supreme Court to mean exactly what it says:

"In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction." That means that such cases may be instituted in the Supreme Court. Section 2 then provides:

"In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations as the Congress shall make."

Congresses in the past have made "exceptions" and "regulations" to the exercise of the appellate power, and the Supreme Court has governed itself by these "exceptions" and "regulations."

The cases in which the Court has recognized the power of Congress to make "exceptions" and "regulations" to the grant of appellate jurisdiction have been cited in the House by Congressmen RAMSAY, of West Virginia, and CROSS of Texas—probably by others of which we are not advised.

From the speeches of these Congressmen, we can cite the following cases, 260 U. S. 226; 3 U. S. 321; 105 U. S. 381; 148 U. S. 372; 210 U. S. 281.

What is the matter with the Congress? The people cannot exert their power nor express their will except through the Congress. The Court exercises its power—granted, inferred, or usurped—when opportunity presents itself. Thus the Court's decisions become the "supreme law of the land." What is Congress doing to "protect its prerogative" of being the repository of "all legislative power"? Was the Congress bluffing when it passed the laws constituting the New Deal? If not, why not regulate the appellate power and make such exceptions as may be necessary, at least to avoid the consummation that it is the supreme law of this land that the Congress has no power to help the farmer. Power? Congress has the written grant and needs only the will. If the Congress refuses at this time to exercise its granted power, then the people will decide in November whether that is the kind of Congress they want in Washington.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH TO SENATORS IN THE IMPEACHMENT TRIAL

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am advised that the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] desires to take the oath as a juror in the impeachment proceedings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. After a thorough survey of the situation, the best judgment of the Chair is that Senators who have not heretofore taken the oath as jurors of the court should take it after the Senate resolves itself into a court; all Senators who have not as yet taken the oath as jurors will take the oath at that time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Senators who have not taken the oath should take notice now that the opportunity to do so will be afforded when the court convenes at 1 o'clock today.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] for the committee amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I feel almost like apologizing to the Senate for taking any of its time in a further discussion of the pending legislation, but I feel that a duty rests upon me as chairman of the committee to make some further presentation of the subject.

The main points in the controversy have been discussed over and over, time and time again. I shall therefore try to avoid vain repetition, although I do not hope to be completely successful. I shall in the main address myself to the points raised by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] in his remarks 2 or 3 days ago. I shall try to bring the discussion back, as it has wandered afield, to the fundamental or to the practical issues which divide the opponents and proponents of the measure.

The practical issue is whether the United States shall regulate and prescribe the tolls which shall be charged and collected on ships transiting the Panama Canal or whether the tonnage and tolls shall be determined by the shipping concerns themselves. That is the practical point involved in the controversy. I should think it unfortunate if the discussion should turn on the use or the misuse of any particular word. Two or three days ago I referred to the pending substitute as a "sham." I find on consulting the dictionary that some of the synonyms of "sham" carry an offensive implication. I disclaim any intention or purpose in my use of the word to convey any such implication. Some synonyms do not carry such an implication, but I withdraw the word entirely, because I wish to eliminate any extraneous questions from debate.

I may not be able to follow the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] in the order of his presentation, but I shall at least begin at the beginning. The Senator from North Carolina stated that he intended to show from the record that, so far as we have any evidence whatever, the shipping interests are supporting the pending legislation. He then added very frankly, "That is a bald statement."

I always like to agree with the Senator from North Carolina, and upon that point at least we are in present agreement. It was a rather bald statement that, so far as we have any evidence whatever, the shipping interests are supporting the pending legislation.

I think, however, there is one other point upon which we will equally agree. That statement is either right or it is wrong. The statement that the shipping interests are supporting this legislation is either correct or it is incorrect. That statement is either supported by the evidence or it is not supported by the evidence. The Senator from North Carolina said that it is supported by the evidence. I say that it is not supported by the evidence.

Not only do I say it is not supported by the evidence, but I say it is contradicted by all the evidence. I undertake to say that so far as the record goes and so far as I have been able to search it, there is not a single witness in all the record to support that statement. So far as I have been able to search the record, there is not one word of evidence to sustain that statement.

This is not a matter of inference or deduction or speculation. It is a matter of fact which can be determined by evidence and by proof, and I shall furnish the proof.

I wish to observe first, however, that it would be strange indeed if every Governor of the Canal Zone for the last 20 years has been urging this legislation, to find that they had, or that they now have, the support of the shipping interests in furthering the legislation.

It would be strange if every Secretary of War since 1914 has urged this legislation to find that the shipping interests have been, or now are, supporting the pending legislation. That would be a revelation.

It would be passing strange if President Wilson was, and if President Roosevelt now is, supported by the shipping interests in their desires to further the passage of the pending legislation.

It is strange that the Senators from the great shipping State of Maine should be here fighting the proposed measure if we should find the shipping interests in their State are supporting this legislation.

It would be strange indeed to find that the Senators from the great shipping State of New York are opposing this legislation while the shipping interests in their State are supporting it.

It would be wondrous strange to find that all Senators from the Pacific Coast States, I believe with one notable exception, are in array against the pending legislation and strange to find that the great shipping interests on the Pacific coast are supporting the measure.

Mr. President, upon what evidence does the Senator from North Carolina base his statement that the shipping interests are supporting the legislation? He invokes the evidence of two witnesses, Mr. Duff and Mr. Petersen. I send to the desk a salient statement in each one's testimony, which I ask to have read to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. PETERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say on behalf of the Pacific coast interests that I have represented them here for about 4 years now, and that we are in hearty accord with the suggestions of the Governor of the Canal that there should be a single system of measurement. We have been on record on that, time after time. * * * So that we are all in favor of the single system of measurement and have been for a long time.

Mr. DUFF. Mr. Chairman, I merely would say in conclusion, that in reply to what Congressman Denison stated, I do not believe it quite correct to say that steamship companies would never agree to a plan for a single system of measurement. On the contrary, a single system of measurement is considered desirable. But we do protest strongly against any toll assessment under a new system that will increase the present total tolls assessed on American ships.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has evidently confused as identical two things that are different. Both of these witnesses declared that they are opposed to the dual system of measurement. The dual system is so indefensible, it is such a self-evident and preposterous absurdity, that neither of those gentlemen was willing to go on record as favoring the dual system of measuring ships passing through the Panama Canal. A dual system which permits the Empress of Britain to pass through the Panama Canal, paying $12,000 less per transit than when she passes through the Suez Canal, did not appeal to these two gentlemen as just; and I will say that Mr. Petersen is a rather audacious gentleman and would not hesitate to defend whatever he thought was defensible. But it does not follow, from the statement that they oppose the dual system of measurement, that they favor and that they are supporting the pending measure, because that is not a fact.

I send to the desk the last hearings held on this subject before the Senate Committee on Inter-oceanic Canals, and I ask to have the clerk read the marked names as they are numbered—the names of the representatives of the shipping companies and the companies represented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statement of W. J. Petersen, Pacific American Steamship Owners' Association of the Pacific Coast.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Petersen appeared before the committee not in support of this measure but against it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statement of Ira L. Ewers, McCormick Steamship Co. and Charles Nelson Co., Sudden & Christensen.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Ewers appeared in opposition to this measure, and not in support of it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statement of A. J. McCarthy, vice president, American Lines Steamship Corporation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. McCarthy appeared in opposition to the bill, and not in support of it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statement of R. R. Adams, vice president, Grace Lines, Inc.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Adams appeared, not in support of the bill, but in opposition to it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statement of H. W. Warley, vice president, Calmar Steamship Corporation and Ore Steamship Corporation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Warley appeared in opposition to the measure, and not in its favor.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statement of Oliver P. Cromwell, traffic manager, Luckenbach Steamship Co.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Cromwell appeared as a witness opposing the legislation, and not supporting it.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statement of D. S. Morrison, vice president, Williams Steamship Corporation, and assistant chairman, executive committee, American Hawaiian Steamship Co.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Morrison appeared in opposition to the bill, and not in support of it. He has been doing us the honor to sit in the gallery during this debate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to read just a few lines from the concluding paragraphs of the majority report of the Senator's committee?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. I read from page 11, as follows:

This whole subject has been so well summarized in an editorial of the March 1935 issue of the Marine Review, a journal devoted to the interests of shipping, that your committee begs leave to quote the following paragraphs from said editorial:

"The Panama Canal rules are the logical standards for assessing the tolls"—

This bill proposes to establish the Panama Canal rules—

"They represent a thorough survey and study of vessel management. They embody the experience of the past. By adopting a single system, using these rules, endless controversy and continual inconvenience are forever eliminated.

"Keeping these rules as the basis, with whatever amendments may be necessary to suit present-day standards and types of ships, and an agreed-upon fair charge per ton"—

Precisely what the Senator contends that this bill does—

"will bring about a solution once for all of this controversial subject which will be satisfactory to all fair-minded men."

That is from the report. I take it that it will not be denied that the Marine Review is a journal devoted to the interests of shipping, and it will not be denied that the majority report concludes with the statement from the magazine representing the shipping interests, and quotes it as supporting the proposed legislation.

I am not making any contention here as to the facts. I am simply saying what the evidence is.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, the Marine Review, like the two witnesses referred to, could not make a stand against the discontinuance of the dual system of measurement. I do not think it has any defense. It has few, if any, defenders.

In order further to present the attitude of the shipping interests of this country in respect to the pending measure, while I had not intended to do so, I should like to have read to the Senate the list of witnesses appearing in the House hearings of last year.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before the reading begins?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. Is not the question that is up here now as to the position of the shipping interests? I think nobody will deny that every representative of a shipping line vigorously opposed the bill, and is still opposing it. The question of shipping interests, however, may be broader than that.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir; there is no doubt about that. I will say that there may be shipping companies and associations in this country which do favor the pending measure. Those shipping concerns which have not abused the privilege, have not manipulated their structures, have not availed themselves of these devices to reduce their tonnage and to reduce their tolls, might well favor the passage of this measure. It would protect them against unfair competition. My point was, they have not so far appeared and testified before any committee of either branch of Congress, so far as I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, the list of witnesses referred to by the Senator from Oklahoma will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Statements of Ira L. Ewers, J. Alex. Crothers, Edward P. Farley, D. S. Morrison, Edgar F. Luckenbach, A. J. McCarthy, R. R. Adams, R. H. Horton, W. J. Petersen.

Mr. GORE. The first list of witnesses, I believe, named 8 different witnesses, representing 13 concerns. I believe there are some 9 or 10 witnesses in the list just read, all of whom represent shipping companies or shipping associations.

Mr. President, we are not left in any doubt as to the position of Mr. Petersen, who, I believe I may say, was one of the star witnesses of the Senator from North Carolina. We are not left in any doubt as to what his attitude is in regard to the pending bill; and I ask that the clerk may read from his testimony on page 41 of the hearings before the Senate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

We would, therefore, suggest the elimination of section 1 of the bill, pass section 2, eliminate section 3, and provide for the appointment of a committee to consider the whole subject matter and report back its findings, and then this committee and the committee in the House could proceed more intelligently than at the present time.

Mr. GORE. Now I ask to have the clerk read as marked on page 43.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

If you insist upon the passage of a bill, pass one that will settle controversies by eliminating section 1 of this bill, thus permitting conditions to remain as they are for the time being and until a committee reports its findings, as provided in section 2.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, Mr. Petersen is one of the witnesses referred to by the Senator from North Carolina. The Senate has just listened to his statement, read from the hearings. What does Mr. Petersen recommend?

When Senate bill 2288 was originally introduced it contained three sections—1, 2, and 3. What did Mr. Petersen recommend? That the committee strike out section 1, which is the substantive part of the bill; Mr. Petersen recommended that the committee strike out section 3 of the bill, which provided when the different sections should go into effect; and Mr. Petersen recommended that the committee report, and the Congress pass, section 2 of Senate bill 2288.

What was section 2 of Senate bill 2288? It authorized the President to appoint a commission to make a study of the subject and report back. Section 2 of that bill is almost identical with the pending substitute, offered as an amendment by the Senator from North Carolina. In fact, in his remarks the Senator from North Carolina stated that he had taken section 2 of the original bill and had embodied it in his substitute.

Mr. Petersen wished to mutilate this bill, as I see it. He wished to strike out section 1, which is the substantive legislation in this measure. He desired to have the committee report and the Senate pass a measure creating a new commission to make another study of Panama Canal tolls.

Mr. Petersen wished the committee to report section 2 alone, which is now pending in the substitute; but the committee preferred to take the advice and recommendation of the half dozen or more Governors of the Panama Canal Zone. The Senate committee preferred to take the advice and the recommendations of the dozen Secretaries of War, every one since this question arose, including both Democrats and Republicans.

The Senate committee did not respond to Mr. Petersen's recommendation; and I hope the Senate will not now accept the recommendation of Mr. Petersen in the premises but will, rather, rely upon the recommendation of the responsible and constituted authorities of the United States.

Let us suppose that Mr. Petersen's recommendation is adopted by the Senate. Let us suppose that this substitute shall be agreed to and be enacted into law.

What, then, will be our situation with reference to this much-controverted subject? Will the shipping interests acquiesce in the report of this new commission when it shall be submitted?

President Wilson promulgated the existing Panama Canal rules in 1913. They were predicated upon an exhaustive report which had then recently been made, the most exhaustive and, as high authority has stated, the best report upon the subject ever submitted in any language. This report had but recently been made when President Wilson promulgated the rules for measuring the Panama Canal tonnage and the tolls to be applied and collected for the passage of ships through the Canal.

Were the shipping interests concluded by that? Did they acquiesce in that? Did they accept the recommendations as scientific, sound, just, and equitable? The shipping interests protested the proclamation of President Wilson, and their protest eventuated in the ruling on the part of the Attorney General, which brought all this confusion upon us.

Mr. President, only 4 years ago, in 1932, the Bureau of Efficiency prepared and submitted an elaborate report on the subject of measuring vessels transiting the Panama Canal and on the subject of the proper tolls to be charged. I hold that report in my hand. It covers more than 80 pages. It concludes with a series of recommendations, which I will print in my remarks without taking the time to read.

This report was up to date when it was submitted. Did it conclude the shipping interests? Did they acquiesce in the report? Did they agree that it was modern, and up to date, and scientific, and just, and equitable? Not at all. At the very next session of Congress which convened after this report was submitted another hearing was had in the House of Representatives, and the shipping interests appeared as one man in opposition to the proposed legislation.

Not only that; on the second day of January last year the shipping interests submitted a questionnaire to the Panama Canal authorities. Twenty-nine questions were submitted. An exhaustive and comprehensive reply was made by the authorities of the Panama Canal, and that reply is contained in the House hearings of last year at page 60. The statistical results of that hearing are contained in the last Senate hearing at page 106, covering practically all the controverted points, exhausting the subject.

Were the shipping interests concluded by the answer submitted on the part of our authorities to their own questionnaire? Did they acquiesce in the conclusions? Did they discontinue their fight to control tolls themselves by manipulating their vessels? Not at all.

A hearing was then in progress, and a hearing has since been conducted by the Senate, and in spite of these four investigations, extending from 1912 down to last year, they have persisted in their opposition to the proposed legislation without variableness or shadow of turning.

Mr. President, if the proposed substitute be enacted, another investigation will be held, and the recommendations of the investigating body will correspond in the main with all the other reports, beyond any doubt, and when the new report is submitted will it meet with any more favor in the eyes of the shipping concerns than have these comprehensive reports in the past?

Mr. President, it is not more facts the shipping interests desire to obtain. It is less tolls that they wish to pay. That is their motive; that is their object; and if they can adjourn the day when they will be required to pay just, reasonable, and uniform tolls, they will have scored a victory. If the proposed substitute is adopted, it will not further the final determination of this issue; it will not eliminate an insuperable, obstructing object in the way. It will only mean one more investigation, it will only mean one more report, in our progress toward the 7th report to be sought and obtained by the shipping interests. As long as they can resort to this method of postponing the day when the dual system shall be abolished, they will escape payment of the tolls which they ought to pay the Government of the United States for using the great facility placed at their convenience at the expense of the people of this country.

Mr. President, I want Senators to look this situation in the face, because there is an anomaly about it which cannot fail to challenge their attention and challenge their interest. The existing Panama Canal tolls measure was enacted in 1912. It fixed a maximum toll of $1.25 per ton; it fixed a minimum toll of 75 cents per ton. It authorized the President, after investigation, to fix and prescribe an official toll to be charged and collected at some point between those two limits, between the maximum and the minimum. In his proclamation the President fixed $1.20 per ton as what was then regarded as a just and reasonable toll. One dollar and twenty cents was the official toll promulgated.

What does the pending measure propose? It proposes to reduce the maximum toll of $1.25 to $1 per ton, and the shipping interests are opposed to that. The pending bill proposes to reduce the minimum toll from 75 cents to 60 cents per ton, and the shipping interests are opposed to that reduction.

If the President should accept the recommendation which the Secretary of War has made public, the President of the United States would fix the official toll at 90 cents a ton instead of $1.20 a ton, the present official toll.

The shipping interests are opposed to reducing the official rate from $1.20 to 90 cents. Is there not something strange about their opposition to this? Why would the shipping interests insist upon retaining these high rates, instead of laboring in season and out in support of this measure in order to reduce the rates? There is a reason, and that reason grows out of the dual system of measurement as applied to vessels passing through the Canal.

In 1913 the President prescribed the rules for measuring vessels passing through the Panama Canal, and fixed $1.20 a ton as the official rate. That was challenged by the shipping interests on the western coast, and the Attorney General of the United States held that the phrase "per net registered ton", as used in the Panama Canal Act, did not apply to net registered tons as ascertained under the Panama Canal rules of measurement, but as ascertained under the United States rules of measurement, as they are called.

The Panama Canal rules of measurement are based on the earning capacity of the ship, based on the cargo-carrying capacity of the ship. The United States rules are not. They had been evolved during several generations, with a view not to ascertain the earning capacity of the vessel, but with a view to cutting down the harbor tolls and the port charges in ports where our vessels enter, here and abroad. Because other countries accept our tonnage certificates, by comity we accept the tonnage certificates of the vessels of other countries.

The charges are low, and there has been a sort of competition to exempt this space and that space, and to cut down the tonnage under the United States rules of measurement in order to cut down these port charges and harbor dues.

The rules of measurement are not at all suited to the Panama Canal. When the Suez Canal was first opened, it adopted that sort of system, taking the measurements of different countries as the measure upon which tolls should be levied in transiting the Suez Canal. It was soon found that they were utterly inapplicable; and a different system, based upon the earning capacity of the ship, was substituted. The Panama Canal rules of measurement promulgated by President Wilson in 1913 were based on the same principle in the light of that experience—that is, based on the earning capacity of the ships.

Let us see how this thing works. Let us say that a Japanese ship—and I want to say that Japan was one of the latest offenders in this matter—let us say that one of these new Japanese ships pulls up to the anchorage of the Panama Canal, and she measures 10,000 tons in accordance with the Panama Canal rules of measurement. That is her earning capacity. Under the present rate she would pay $1.20 a ton, or $12,000 for passing through the Canal. But she asks that her tonnage be measured by the United States rules of measurement; and, owing to her ingenuity in availing herself of these later devices, that ship measures not 10,000 tons—these ratios are correct—she measures 6,800 tons under the United States rules of measurement.

That brings upon her the maximum charge of $1.25 a ton. But $1.25 a ton on 6,800 tons amounts to $8,500. So the ship pays $8,500 for passing through the Canal instead of paying $12,000. That vessel pays $500 less in the present situation than she would pay if the pending measure were enacted into law, and a rate of 90 cents a ton were promulgated by the President. Ninety cents a ton would require her to pay $500 more than she now pays under this confusing and ridiculous system of double measurement.

The next ship which steams into port is an American ship. She is on her maiden voyage, with exactly the same earning capacity as the Japanese ship; but she has not resorted to all these devices, and it might be possible for that American ship to be required to pay from $2,000 to $3,000 more for passing through the American canal than the Japanese ship which just preceded the American ship pays for passing through.

Let us take a hypothetical case. Let us assume that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and I both—

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The statement which the Senator is making seems to me of most extraordinary importance. Do I understand from the Senator's statement that under the present regulations and the law, the American ship might be compelled to pay very much more than the foreign ship in passing through the Canal?

Mr. GORE. Yes; and I am going to illustrate that a little further. I am going to assume that the Senator from North Carolina and I each own a sister ship of the Empress of Britain. They will be domestic, but the example illustrates the point. The Senator from North Carolina sends his ship down to the sea. It passes through the Panama Canal, and it pays for transiting it what it pays for passage through the Suez Canal—$29,000. My ship is the next to pull into the lock. It is a sister ship to the one owned by the Senator from North Carolina, identical from stem to stern and from keel to topmast; but I have taken advantage of all these devices under the United States rules of measurement; and my ship, loaded to her lines, passes through the Canal and pays less than $18,000 for the transit.

That is what happens. That happens now. When the Empress of Britain passes through the Suez Canal she pays the Suez Canal authorities $29,000 for the transit; and when she passes through the Panama Canal she pays less than $18,000 for the transit; and I will say to the Senator from Idaho she cuts down her tonnage 3,300 tons by this simple device:

She had a cloakroom on one of her pleasure decks, where the passengers could park their cloaks and hats and wraps. Her owners found out that by converting that cloakroom into a so-called cabin they could reduce her toll-paying tonnage 3,300 tons; and they did put a bed in that cloakroom with a portable chiffonier and washstand, and by that simple device lifted 3,300 tons out of her toll-paying capacity.

The pending bill is designed to abolish that sort of system. The shipping interests of this country do not want that system abolished. They are here, in season and out, protesting against the passage of such legislation, and have been for 22 years. The Attorney General's decision was handed down on the 25th of November 1914. Within 3 months Mr. Adamson, the then chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, introduced a bill to correct this mischief. The bill has passed the House four times, but never on any previous occasion has it advanced as far as it now has advanced in the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to make a statement, in view of the Senator's comparison of the Panama Canal with the Suez Canal.

The Panama Canal is a canal owned by the United States and operated presumably for the public benefit, and especially for the benefit of the public of the United States. The Suez Canal is a private corporation, and it is making profits and declaring dividends at the rate of 200 percent per year. I do not see why the fact that they get $3,000, $5,000, or $10,000 more by reason of having a monopoly should justify the United States in pursuing a similar policy. I cannot see the basis for the argument.

Let me make one other suggestion and then I promise not to interrupt the Senator further.

The Panama Canal under the existing conditions is a paying institution. Why should we wish to increase the rates? Why should we wish to change the system under which it is paying?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there is no man in the Senate for whom I have a higher regard than the Senator from North Carolina. I sometimes think in this debate he is rather disparaging his own talents. It seems to me he is trying to convince the Senate that he knows less about more things concerning this legislation than any man in the Senate. I do not agree with him altogether.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that has been the point of my argument for several days on this subject—that nobody here knew anything about it, and therefore we needed a commission to find the facts. I am not resenting or repudiating or denying the statement that I do not know much about it, and I am asking the Senate to appoint a commission which will inform us.

Mr. GORE. Another commission to reiterate what has been said so often? I shall not turn back to that point.

Mr. President, if the Senator from North Carolina thinks the Empress of Britain ought to pay the Suez Canal authority $29,000 when she passes through that canal, and, owing to these devices, ought to pay the Panama Canal authorities or ought to pay the Government of the United States less than $18,000 for the same service, it is his privilege to take that position. But the Senator is mistaken in this, as are other Senators. The object of this proposed legislation is not to increase the aggregate receipts of the Panama Canal. This measure is not intended to make a profit-bearing instrumentality of the Panama Canal. The total charge for the maintenance of the Canal and other charges connected with it are about $25,000,000 a year under the present tolls. If enacted the pending measure will not increase the aggregate receipts from the operation of the Panama Canal. It is not intended to do so. It is intended to correct the inequalities. It is intended to correct the absurdities which have sprung up under this dual system of measurement, resulting from the ruling of the Attorney General.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Oklahoma suspend for the purpose of enabling the Senate to carry out its order with reference to the impeachment proceedings?

Mr. GORE. Of course, I yield, and I will resume as soon as the business of the Senate sitting as a court shall have been concluded.

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is now sitting as a Court to try articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

At 1 o'clock the Secretary to the Majority (Leslie L. Biffle) appeared and said:

I have the honor to announce the managers on the part of the House of Representatives to conduct the impeachment proceedings in the impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The managers on the part of the House of Representatives will be conducted to the seats assigned them in the area in front of the Secretary's desk.

The managers on the part of the House, Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, of Texas; Hon. RANDOLPH PERKINS, of New Jersey; and Hon. SAM HOBBS, of Alabama, were conducted to the seats provided in the space in front of the Secretary's desk on the left of the Chair.

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Barkley	Borah	Byrnes
Ashurst	Benson	Bulkeley	Capper
Austin	Bilbo	Bulow	Caraway
Bachman	Black	Burke	Carey
Bailey	Bone	Byrd	Clark

Connally	Hale	McNary	Russell
Coolidge	Harrison	Maloney	Schweilenbach
Copeland	Hatch	Metcalf	Sheppard
Costigan	Hayden	Minton	Shipstead
Couzens	Holt	Moore	Smith
Davis	Johnson	Murphy	Steinwer
Dieterich	Keyes	Murray	Thomas, Okla.
Donahay	King	Neely	Townsend
Duffy	La Follette	Norbeck	Trammell
Fletcher	Lewis	Norris	Tydings

George	Loneragan	Overton	Wagner
Gibson	Long	Pope	Walsh
Glass	McAdoo	Radcliffe	Wheeler
Gore	McGill	Reynolds	White
Guffey	McKellar	Robinson

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The SERGEANT AT ARMS (Chesley W. Jurney). Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! All persons are commanded to keep silence on pain of imprisonment while the Senate of the United States is sitting for the trial of the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings of the last session of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment be considered as having been read and that the Journal be approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Chair will inquire if there are any Senators present who have not taken the oath as members of the Court? If there are, let them do so now.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, before the oath is administered to members of the Court of Impeachment, if this is the appropriate time, I desire, by unanimous consent, to present a request to be excused from participation in these proceedings, to stand aside and to make a statement with reference to my request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator from Colorado being excused from serving as a member of the Court? The Chair hears none, and the Senator is excused.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, as part of my request, may I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the statement to which I referred?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The statement of Mr. COSTIGAN is as follows:

On March 9, 1933, in the Harold Louderback impeachment proceedings, as reported in Senate Document No. 73 of the Seventy-third Congress, first session, pages 14-15, in advance of taking oaths to sit as jurors or Senators in the Court of Impeachment, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], at their respective requests and by unanimous consent of the members of the Impeachment Court, were permitted to stand aside in the trial. At that time the chairman of the Judicial Committee [Mr. ASHURST], with his usual care and decisiveness, helpfully commented on the procedural problems and the propriety of such a request.

On March 10, at page 3485, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD correctly notes my absence when the roll was called, prior to oaths being administered to Members of the Senate, and I was not that day, nor have I since been, sworn as a member of the Court of Impeachment in the Senate impeachment proceedings of Halsted L. Ritter about to commence.

At this time I am tendering my request to the Senate to be excused in these proceedings, as was done in the former impeachment trial on request of the Senators from California and Idaho.

It is not disputed by me that such a request is reasonably subject to the convenience, discretion, and approval of Senators who have already been sworn. It is therefore doubtless desirable that the following further statement be made with reference to this request.

While I am not aware of partiality that would affect my judgment, if sworn, I am conscientiously of the opinion that I ought not to sit as judge or juror in the trial of the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter. This conclusion is not based on knowledge of or information I have on the merits of charges involved in the impeachment proceedings. As to the truth or falsity of such charges I have only such knowledge or information as have other Members of the Senate generally. No one has attempted to discuss such charges or their truth or falsity with me, nor have I expressed any opinion about them. I have not seen or communicated with respondent or any member of his family in recent years, with the exception of a brief chance meeting with the respondent about a year ago. At that meeting the conversation did not exceed 2 or 3 minutes' duration, and it was in no wise related to the issue or issues to be tried. Nevertheless, it should be stated that Mrs. Costigan and I have long known respondent, his wife, and children. Our personal acquaintance began in our home city, Denver, Colo., a number of years before respondent and his family moved to the State of Florida. Of course, I was not a Member of the Senate when respondent was appointed to his present Federal position and was not among those who recommended his appointment or confirmation. But the friendly acquaintance with respondent and his family, which thus began in Denver, was personal and social, and was professional to the extent that at least on one occasion we were associated on the same side in important litigation.

Although I am not conscious of any other attitude than impartiality dictates, I feel, under the specified circumstances, that I ought not to be expected to serve as judge or juror in these impeachment proceedings. I therefore ask unanimous consent of the Senate that I may be permitted at this time to stand aside and may be excused from taking the oath required of members of this Court of Impeachment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will now administer the oath to those Senators who have not heretofore taken it or been excused.

Mr. GIBSON, Mr. STEINWER, Mr. CAREY, Mr. NORBECK, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. KEYES, Mr. COUZENS, Mrs. LONG, Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. DIETERICH, Mr. BLACK, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. CLARK, Mr. BYRD, and Mr. GUFFEY rose from their seats, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I rise to make the announcement that the Journal Clerk will take down the names of those Senators who have taken the oath today.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Journal Clerk will take the names.

The Secretary will read the return of the Sergeant at Arms.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
OFFICE OF THE SERGEANT AT ARMS.

The foregoing writ of summons addressed to Halsted L. Ritter, and the foregoing precept, addressed to me, were duly served upon the said Halsted L. Ritter by me by delivering true and attested copies of the same to the said Halsted L. Ritter at the Carlton Hotel, Washington, D. C., on Thursday, the 12th day of March 1936, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon of that day.

CHESLEY W. JURNEY,
Sergeant at Arms, United States Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary of the Senate will administer the oath to the Sergeant at Arms.

The Secretary of the Senate, Edwin A. Halsey, administered the oath to the Sergeant at Arms, as follows:

You, Chesley W. Jurney, do solemnly swear that the return made by you upon the process issued on the 10th day of March 1936 by the Senate of the United States against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, is truly made, and that you have performed such service as therein described. So help you God.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The Sergeant at Arms made proclamation as follows:

Halsted L. Ritter! Halsted L. Ritter! Halsted L. Ritter! United States district judge for the southern district of Florida, appear and answer to the articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against you.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, and his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., of New York City, N. Y., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., of Miami, Fla., entered the Chamber and were conducted to the seats assigned them in the space in front of the Secretary's desk, on the right of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Counsel for the respondent are advised that the Senate is now sitting for the trial of articles of impeachment exhibited by the House of Representatives against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). May it please you, Mr. President, and honorable Members of the Senate, I beg to inform you that, in response to your summons, the respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, is now present with his counsel and asks leave to file a formal entry of appearance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the appearance will be filed with the Secretary, and will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
SITTING AS A COURT OF IMPEACHMENT

MARCH 12, 1936.

The United States of America v. Halsted L. Ritter

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, having this day been served with a summons requiring him to appear before the Senate of the United States of America in the city of Washington, D. C., on March 12, 1936, at 1 o'clock afternoon to answer certain articles of impeachment presented against him by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, now appears in his proper person and also by his counsel, who are instructed by this respondent to inform the Senate that respondent stands ready to file his pleadings to such articles of impeachment within such reasonable period of time as may be fixed.

Dated March 12, 1936.

HALSTEAD L. RITTER,
Respondent.
CARL T. HOFFMAN,
FRANK P. WALSH,
Counsel for Respondent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I inquire if the honorable managers on the part of the House and the honorable counsel for the respondent have reached any agreement as to a date upon which witnesses shall be summoned to appear and as to the date the trial shall begin.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, I have to inform the Senate that the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent have not been able to reach an agreement as to when the trial shall begin. The difficulty is that the managers on the part of the House are very anxious, if possible, to avoid the trial of the articles of impeachment taking place in what we know as the closing days of the session of the Congress. Aside from that, the managers can accommodate themselves to whatever is the necessity and convenience of counsel for the respondent and whatever is the judgment of the Senate. That is the difficulty we have.

I wonder if we might make an inquiry? Would it be possible for counsel for the respondent and the managers to have some further opportunity for conference upon that point, and also to have a conference with the honorable chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, pursuant to the request made by the honorable managers on the part of the House that a reasonable time be afforded for consultation between the Managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent, I move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, take a recess for 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, took a recess for 30 minutes.

At the expiration of the recess at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m., the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, reassembled.

Mr. POPE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	Keyes	Overton
Ashurst	Copeland	King	Pope
Austin	Costigan	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bachman	Couzens	Lewis	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Logan	Robinson
Barkley	Dieterich	Loneragan	Russell
Benson	Donahay	Long	Schwellenbach
Blibo	Duffy	McAdoo	Sheppard
Black	Fletcher	McGill	Shipstead
Bone	Frazier	McKellar	Smith
Borah	George	McNary	Stelwer
Bulkley	Gibson	Maloney	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Glass	Metcalf	Townsend
Burke	Gore	Minton	Trammell
Byrd	Guffey	Moore	Tydings
Byrnes	Hale	Murphy	Vandenberg
Capper	Harrison	Murray	Wagner
Caraway	Hatch	Neely	Walsh
Carey	Hayden	Norbeck	Wheeler
Clark	Holt	Norris	White
Connally	Johnson	O'Mahoney

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the names of absentee Senators and the reason for their absences which I gave on a previous roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The Chair is advised that there are some Senators who have not as yet taken the oath as members of the Court. If there are any Senators in the Chamber who have not as yet taken the oath as members of the Court and desire to do so now, the Chair will at this time administer to them the oath.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. DAVIS rose, and the oath was administered to them by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I inquire of the honorable managers on the part of the House and the honorable counsel for the respondent if they have been able to agree as to the date on which the trial shall begin?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House have been in consultation with counsel for the respondent, and we have arrived at this agreement: Counsel for the respondent will have their response or reply in the hands of the managers on March 26, but will have until March 30 to file their response in the Senate. It has been suggested that when that is done then an agreement can be arrived at as to when the trial shall begin. That seems to have been the method pursued in the English case, and I am advised by some Senators that that seems to have been the custom in determining these matters in advance.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). We agree to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any unanimous-consent request to be made by any member of the Court?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think there is not a clear understanding as to the arrangement which has been entered into between the managers and the counsel for the respondent. It is my understanding, and if I am in error someone who is better informed will please correct me, that the agreement is that counsel for the respondent will place their response in the possession of the managers on the part of the House not later than the 26th instant, and that the Court may reconvene again on the 30th when the response will be filed in the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to that agreement?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I respectfully insist that there ought to be a time set when the trial shall begin. Am I to understand from the honorable managers on the part of the House and the honorable counsel for the respondent that the trial will begin on the 30th of March?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. No, sir.

Mr. ASHURST. Then no definite date is set?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Mr. President, I was going to suggest—I do not have the calendar before me—that Friday will be the 27th of March.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; Friday will be the 27th of March.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Yes. It has been mentioned as the 26th. It is Friday that we are to have the response in the hands of the managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. Friday will be the 27th. The 26th will fall on Thursday.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). There was simply an error made in the date. The date agreed upon is the 27th.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the situation to be as follows: The respondent will have his answer in the hands of the managers on the part of the House on the 27th instant.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that the trial will begin on the 30th.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. No, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to get that matter correctly presented.

Mr. ASHURST. It has been suggested—and accurately so—that the issue will not be joined until March 30. I respectfully urge that the Court, for many reasons, do not adjourn until it fixes a date for the beginning of the trial. Amongst the reasons is the fact that an order must be entered directing the Sergeant at Arms to subpoena the witnesses, and that both the honorable managers and the respondent should file their lists of witnesses and serve copies of the lists on each other. Manifestly the Senate cannot enter such an order unless and until there is a date set upon which the witnesses are to appear and a date set upon the trial to begin.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has there been a meeting of the minds between the managers on the part of the House and the counsel for the respondent?

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, may I announce to the Senate that the managers on the part of the House and counsel for respondent are not able to agree on the time when the trial shall begin?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Court must fix the time when the proceedings of the trial will begin. The Chair understands there is an agreement between the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent that the reply will be in the hands of the managers on the part of the House by the 27th instant, but there is no agreement as to when the trial shall begin.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I move that the trial begin on Monday, April 6, and that witnesses be subpoenaed to appear at 1 o'clock p. m. on that date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any discussion?

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). Would it be proper for me to make a suggestion?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Indeed, sir.

Mr. WALSH (of counsel). When we attempted to make this agreement with the managers on the part of the House the difficulties which presented themselves were discussed. They may not be able to get ready in 6 days. We are taking this time to file our answer knowing, as we did when we discussed the question, that it would take more than 30 days, but we are willing to get our answer in in the way we have agreed, and then we will know what witnesses we have stipulated away, we will know what witnesses we have to subpoena, and the honorable managers will know what witnesses they have to subpoena. I am just making that suggestion. Of course, I would not be bold enough to discuss it with members of the Court.

At that date I have no doubt we can reach an agreement on the trial date. I think both sides are very anxious to expedite this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is only one motion before the Court at the present time, and that is the motion of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] that the trial begin on the 6th day of April. The agreement, as the Chair understands, has been made by the managers on the part of the House and the counsel for the respondent that the respondent's reply shall be in the hands of the managers on the part of the House by the 27th of this month. The Senator from Arizona has now moved that the trial begin on the 6th day of April. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the further pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I send to the clerk's desk an order, which I ask may be read and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proposed order.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That lists of the witnesses be furnished to the Sergeant at Arms by the managers and by the respondent, and said witnesses shall be subpoenaed to appear on Monday, the 6th day of April 1936, at 1 o'clock p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order is entered.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. It has been suggested to me that the time set—the 6th of April—is too early to give full consideration to all the matters involved. As one member of the Court I am anxious that there should be nothing done by us which would seem unduly to hurry the proceedings or seriously embarrass the doing of justice to all concerned. I simply speak of that because, with all respect, I think that the counsel for the respondent was sort of swept off his feet and not given full opportunity to present his difficulties.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the observations of the able Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] are well becoming, and I am glad he made them, but I believe that no harm will be done and no advantage taken of the managers or the respondent by fixing the date of trial for April 6. I am sure that the Senate will acquit me of any intention precipitately to rush into this matter, but, frankly and in good faith, I do not perceive why April 6 is not an appropriate date. My judgment is that March 30 would afford ample time.

Mr. President, in order that Senators, sitting as judges and jurors, may have an opportunity to study this matter, I ask for the adoption, after it shall have been read, of the order which I send to the desk. This is in haec verba the same order that was adopted in the Louderback case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That in addition to the rules of procedure and practice in the Senate when sitting on impeachment trials, heretofore adopted, and supplementary to such rules, the following rules shall be applicable in the trial of the impeachment of Halsted L. Ritter, United States judge for the southern district of Florida:

1. In all matters relating to the procedure of the Senate, whether as to form or otherwise, the managers on the part of the House or the counsel representing the respondent may submit a request or application orally to the Presiding Officer, or, if required by him or requested by any Senator, shall submit the same in writing.

2. In all matters relating immediately to the trial, such as the admission, rejection, or striking out of evidence, or other questions usually arising in the trial of causes in courts of justice, if the managers on the part of the House or counsel representing the respondent desire to make any application, request, or objection, the same shall be addressed directly to the Presiding Officer and not otherwise.

3. It shall not be in order for any Senator, except as provided in the rules of procedure and practice in the Senate when sitting on impeachment trials, to engage in colloquy or to address questions either to the managers on the part of the House or to counsel for the respondent, nor shall it be in order for Senators to address each other; but they shall address their remarks directly to the Presiding Officer and not otherwise.

4. The parties may, by stipulation in writing filed with the Secretary of the Senate and by him laid before the Senate or presented at the trial, agree upon any facts involved in the trial; and such stipulation shall be received by the Senate for all intents and purposes as though the facts therein agreed upon had been established by legal evidence adduced at the trial.

5. The parties or their counsel may interpose objection to witnesses answering questions propounded at the request of any Senator, and the merits of any such objection may be argued by the parties or their counsel; and the Presiding Officer may rule on any such objection, which ruling shall stand as the judgment of the Senate, unless some Member of the Senate shall ask that a formal vote be taken thereon, in which case it shall be submitted to the Senate for decision; or he may, at his option, in the first instance submit any such question to a vote of the Members of the Senate. Upon all such questions the vote shall be without debate and without a division, unless the ayes and nays be demanded by one-fifth of the Members present, when the same shall be taken.

Mr. BORAH. Am I to understand, under the proposed order, that all questions a member of the Court might desire to address to a witness must be submitted in writing?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. That is the rule in impeachment proceedings.

Mr. BORAH. That may be the usual procedure, but I think it a very poor practice.

Mr. ASHURST. The opinion of the able Senator from Idaho would have great weight with me; I do not desire to be brought into even the most courteous competition with him as a lawyer and student of the Constitution, but the rule, as suggested, has been followed in at least three cases.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I may say, in response to what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said, that not only has it been the rule that has prevailed in recent trials of this nature, but the rule is a sound one, and without some such rule it would be impossible, or at least very difficult at times to have orderly procedure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Idaho to rule XVIII governing the conduct of impeachment proceedings, which is as follows:

If a Senator wishes a question to be put to a witness, or to offer a motion or order (except a motion to adjourn), it shall be reduced to writing and put by the Presiding Officer.

That is already in the rules of the Senate, regardless of what is contained in the order presented by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. BORAH. Nevertheless, Mr. President, it is, in my opinion, an obstacle to securing the real facts in regard to a matter of this kind.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the order submitted by the Senator from Arizona.

The order was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, when the Chair stated the procedure a moment ago I understood that the response was to be served on the managers by the 27th of March. I did not understand, however, that a date was fixed to file the response with the Court. I invite the attention of the Senator from Arizona to that point. Something was said about the 30th of March, but no date has been fixed, as I understand, for filing the response with the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Mexico that the response of the respondent is to be placed in the hands of the managers of the House by at least the 27th of March. What is the suggestion of the Senator?

Mr. HATCH. That some time be fixed for filing the response with the Court.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, evidently the Senator from New Mexico did not hear when I stated the agreement, which was that the response shall be placed in the possession of the managers on the part of the House on the 27th of March, and that it must be filed with the Senate as a Court on the 30th of March. That agreement was entered.

Mr. HATCH. That was the understanding that I had of the statement of the Senator from Arkansas, but a statement was made by the Chair which I did not understand.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Chair submitted the question whether there was objection to the agreement; there was no objection, and it was ordered entered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What is the further pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, inasmuch as it is agreed and ordered that the counsel for the respondent shall file their response or answer with the honorable managers on the 27th of March, it will not be necessary that the Court be in session to hear such answer read. Therefore, Mr. President, at the proper time, I shall move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, when it adjourns, shall adjourn until March 30, and now, if there be nothing further, if neither the honorable managers on the part of the House nor the counsel for the respondent have anything to suggest, and no Senator has any motion to make, I move that the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, now adjourn until Monday, March 30, 1936, at 1 o'clock p. m.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourned until Monday, March 30, 1936, at 1 o'clock p. m.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

(The following occurred while the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, was in recess from 1:15 o'clock until 1:45 o'clock, during which time it resumed the consideration of legislative business:)

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to make it perfectly clear that the pending legislation is not designed to convert the Panama Canal into a money-making institution or to realize a profit over and above the actual requirements to meet its budget. The annual cost of operating the Canal is about $10,000,000. The annual charge to cover the capitalized cost, bonds, and other obligations amount to about $15,000,000. The present tolls realize about that sum annually—on the average about $25,000,000 a year.

If this measure becomes a law and the 90-cent rate is promulgated, the aggregate receipts from the Canal will be approximately the same. It is desired to keep the receipts of the Canal within those requirements. It is entirely a mistaken conception to conclude that any purpose now exists anywhere to increase the aggregate receipts from the operation of the Panama Canal.

Mr. President, I shall try once again to summarize what this measure would do if enacted into law. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] said, and perhaps aptly, that the objectives have not been adequately stated. I shall try to state the purpose and the object and the effect. That this has not been done is my fault, perhaps, or my misfortune.

If the pending measure becomes a law it will abrogate the dual system of measurement now prevailing in the Panama Canal. As I understand, everybody agrees upon that point.

It will also result in the establishment of one uniform system of measurements to apply to all commercial ships passing through the Canal. Those rules of measurement will be based on the earning capacity of the ship.

It will also result in the imposition of one fixed uniform official toll based on tonnage, based on the earning capacity of the ships.

Not only that, but it will abolish, I repeat, the present dual system of measurement. It will take it out of the hands of shipowners to determine what their tonnage is and what tolls they shall pay the Government of the United States.

Not only that, but it will do away with the present discrimination which exists between ships of exactly the same earning capacity where one owner has resorted to certain devices to cut down the tonnage and the tolls and where the other vessel owner has not resorted to those devices to cut down his tonnage and his tolls.

The junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] a few days since raised a constitutional question, asserting that the pending bill would delegate legislative power to the President of the United States. The junior Senator from Oregon generally discusses subjects in a manner, and as a rule, I may say without extravagance, as luminous as sunlight itself; but I think on that occasion the Senator fell into a sun spot.

The Panama Canal and the Panama Canal Zone are the property of the United States. The United States owns that property in the double character of a sovereign and as the proprietor. It has a right to fix tolls for the use of its property. Congress has the right to delegate that power to the President of the United States without raising any of the constitutional questions referred to by the Senator from Oregon. The Constitution expressly provides that Congress has plenary power to make all needful rules and regulations with respect to the territory of the United States.

The junior Senator from Oregon and the Senate were not standing face to face with the question as to whether or not we shall delegate this power to the President of the United States or delegate this power to some commission prescribing the rules for its procedure. The question pending is whether the Congress shall delegate to the President of the United States now, as it did in 1912, the power to prescribe and fix rules for the use of the Panama Canal, or whether Congress shall delegate or continue to delegate that power to the various shipping companies in this country and to the shipping companies of every nation on the earth.

Under the dual system of measurement the power to regulate tolls is largely vested in the shipping companies. Shipping companies of this country, shipping companies of England, shipping companies of Japan, and shipping companies of other countries, exercise the power now to determine in large measure what tolls they shall pay the United States for the use of this great interoceanic highway. The purpose of the pending legislation is to stop that practice and to take over this sovereign power and have it exercised by the Congress of the United States instead of delegating it to the various shipping concerns.

Let us see what has happened under the present dual system. Last year the average tolls charged vessels passing through the Panama Canal were 85.4 cents per ton. That was the average, 85.4 cents per ton. The French vessels on the average paid 80 cents per ton to go through the canal, or 5 cents less than the general average. The Danish ships paid 80 cents a ton for passing through the Canal, or 5 cents per ton less than the general average. Norwegian ships and commercial ships of other nations paid 80 cents a ton for passing through the Canal, or 5 cents a ton less than the general average.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. I yield?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator, as I understand, is contending that under the existing system the Norwegian, Japanese, and English ships pay less than the American ships.

Mr. GORE. Not the English ships.

Mr. BAILEY. Well, the ships of other nations.

Mr. GORE. Yes; some of them. Some pay more.

Mr. BAILEY. And is the Senator saying that the American shipping interests wish to maintain the situation under which they have to pay more in our Canal than the foreigners?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. Very well. It is the first time I have ever heard of a man cutting his own throat, however.

Mr. GORE. That is the anomaly of this situation; but I shall show in a moment why that is true.

The English ships paid 87 cents a ton for passing through the Canal, about 2 cents more than the average; and this may strike Senators as strange. On the average, the ships of Japan pay 94 cents a ton for passing through the Canal. Some of her later vessels pay on only 68 percent of their tonnage, and some of her older vessels which have been reconditioned pay less than the average rate.

Here is the absurdity of this situation, Mr. President:

We wish to pass this bill, prescribing a uniform rule for the measurement of these ships based on their earning capacity, and then fix one uniform official toll to be charged on every vessel of every country passing through the Canal, and make every shipowner pay the same rate of toll on the tonnage of his vessel based on its earning capacity.

The present system permits the very anomaly to happen which I am describing. It permits those countries which go farthest in adopting these devices to cut their tolls down below the average, down below the official rate, while other countries which do not resort to those devices pay more than the average rate.

If this bill passes, and the 90-cents-a-ton rate is promulgated, Japanese ships will pay 90 cents a ton on their earning capacity; English ships will pay 90 cents a ton on their earning capacity; and all other ships, of whatever flag, will pay 90 cents a ton when they pass through the Canal based on their earning capacity. I repeat that the American shipping concerns are opposing the pending bill, notwithstanding in some cases they pay more than other ships, and in other instances they pay less than the ships of other countries.

Here is a figure which cannot be disputed:

In 1931 the tonnage that passed through the Panama Canal in the aggregate went through for $7,000,000 less than if the vessels had paid on their earning capacity. Four million dollars of that saving went to foreign vessels. Three million dollars went to American vessels. We paid a subsidy of $4,000,000 in that year to foreign shipping in order to pay a subsidy of $3,000,000 in that year to American shipping.

That is not all.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAILEY. As I understand the Senator, that comes to $7,000,000, does it not—$4,000,000 for foreign vessels, and $3,000,000 for American vessels?

Mr. GORE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. At the same time, since the Canal paid, that would have been a surplus. That would have been beyond what is contemplated by the whole theory of the Canal and the law.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, that is on the assumption that the vessel owners had not resorted to these devices, and had paid the official rates. The Senator forgets that the present official rate is $1.20, while under this measure it will be reduced to 90 cents, and will obviate the very surplus to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a few questions? I am really seeking light on this subject.

Mr. GORE. Certainly. Would the Senator mind my making one other statement on this very point, which presents the picture better than it is now presented—just one other statement?

Since the Canal was opened there has been a subsidy of that sort amounting in the aggregate to $84,000,000. Forty-seven million dollars of that amount was enjoyed by foreign ships. Thirty-seven million dollars of it went to ships that fly the American flag. We paid foreign ships $47,000,000 in order to pay American ships a subsidy of $37,000,000.

If we wish to subsidize American ships, let us do so; and we could have subsidized them to the extent of $37,000,000 during the history of the Canal, and could have avoided subsidizing their competitors to the extent of $47,000,000.

That is what this bill is intended to correct. The shipping concerns do not want it done because they can manipulate their tonnage—and I shall not go through those various and sundry details—in such a way as to cut down the tolls they pay.

I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Oklahoma, the chairman of the committee, if I correctly understand that the present official rate is $1.20 per ton.

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the maximum rate?

Mr. GORE. Oh, no. The maximum rate under existing law is $1.25, and the minimum rate is 75 cents. The official rate, as promulgated by the President, is $1.20 per ton.

Mr. GEORGE. So that if the Canal is not paying its cost under the present law, the rate could be raised. Do I understand that that is the case?

Mr. GORE. No; it could not be raised above $1.25.

Mr. GEORGE. But it could be raised above $1.20?

Mr. GORE. It could be raised from $1.20 to $1.25; yes, sir.

Mr. GEORGE. And $1.20 is the prevailing rate?

Mr. GORE. That is the present fixed official rate; but I will say to the Senator, as I stated a moment ago, that the average rate paid by all shipping, taken in the aggregate, is a little over 85 cents per ton.

Mr. GEORGE. It is just on that point that I desire to ask the Senator a few questions.

I do not get the Senator's point when he compares the cost of a ship of a given tonnage passing the Suez Canal and passing the Panama Canal. Perhaps that is my fault, and I shall not ask the Senator to go into that subject; but it seems to me we do not need to compare them at all, because certainly the Panama Canal stands on a different basis from the Suez Canal. I think if the Senator will examine our treaties, and I am quite sure if he will examine the treaty which is now before the Foreign Relations Committee, he will find that the neutrality of the Panama Canal as a channel of trade and commerce is especially emphasized.

I do not wish to go into that question, however.

Mr. GORE. No; it is foreign to this one.

Mr. GEORGE. What I do wish to ask the Senator is, Why is it not possible for one ship of the exact tonnage of another ship so to arrange itself by these devices, under the existing dual system, as to put itself on an equality with the ship that pays the less toll?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I had avoided that point, because I have heretofore discussed it in detail; but I shall be glad to explain it to the Senator.

Let us assume that the Senator from Georgia and I own companion ships, identical in every detail, measuring 10,000 tons each, according to the Panama Canal rules of measurement.

The Senator's ship goes through the Panama Canal. He has resorted to no devices to reduce its tonnage measurement. Under the Panama Canal rules of measurement, it measures 10,000 tons. It so happens that it would not quite measure that under United States rules in any event. The tonnage would be a little less; but let us waive that point. The Senator would pay $12,000 for the passage of his ship through the Canal.

My ship pulls in next to his. It is a companion ship in every particular. On the shelter deck of my ship I have cut what is called a tonnage opening, some 4 or 5 feet by 18 or 20 feet. Around that opening there is a coaming some 12 inches high. I may put over that opening planks cut to fit the opening. Over that I spread a tarpaulin, and I tie a rope around this tarpaulin and around the coaming, making it watertight and airtight; but that is a temporary closing of the hatch or the opening. That one device takes all the space between that shelter deck and the next deck below, perhaps 2,000 tons of cargo-carrying space, out of the requirement to pay tolls. Even though every inch of it be loaded with every ounce it will carry between those two decks, it does not pay any tolls.

Now, let us go a little further than that. The space in the Senator's ship between the shelter deck and the next deck below may not carry 1 ounce of freight, and yet the Senator's ship pays tolls on 2,000 tons. If the Senator had cut an identical opening in his ship corresponding with the one in my ship, had put the same sort of planks over the opening and the same sort of tarpaulin over the planks, but instead of using a rope to tie around the coaming to tighten the enclosure, had put a steel band around the coaming and had driven wedges in between the band and the coaming, that would have been a permanent closing of this tonnage opening, and the Senator would still have been required to pay tolls on his tonnage, when the only difference was that I had used a rope and mine was a temporary closing, while the Senator had used a steel band and it was a permanent closing.

There are other small details which will help to carry out this "show"—though I do not want to be offensive by the use of the word—when I cut this tonnage opening in the shelter deck of my ship. I would have had to put in some freeing ports in the sides of the ship near the deck below and some scupper pipes to let the water run out—the theoretical water, which never comes in.

The only object of that opening in the deck of my ship was to cut down my tolls. It is not used for putting in cargo or taking it out. The regular cargo hatches are used for that purpose. The only purpose and the only effect is to cut down my tonnage and cut down my tolls, and that is the reason why the shipping interests of this country do not want this measure enacted into law. They do not want that privilege taken away from them. They do not want to give the President the power to fix tolls. They want to reserve that power in their own hands.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator again, why is it that ships of the same kind cannot install the same devices, if we call them devices?

Mr. GORE. They can.

Mr. GEORGE. Can all ships install these devices?

Mr. GORE. Some of them cannot on account of their construction. Some of them do not yield themselves to these devices owing to their structure.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if I can faithfully follow the argument, it is that all the ship of the Senator from Georgia had to do was to use ropes.

Mr. GEORGE. That is exactly what I am trying to get at.

Mr. GORE. That is all; but this is the point—

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand the Senator from Oklahoma—and I have tried to follow him with exceeding care—the pending bill does not have as its object the collection of more tolls in the aggregate.

Mr. GORE. No.

Mr. GEORGE. If that be true, and there is a discrimination between vessels merely of the same tonnage, my inquiry is, Why cannot all of the boats of the same type install the same devices or appliances, or whatever they may be called, and get the lowest rate of tolls permissible?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, generally speaking, they could. As I indicated a moment ago, there are, perhaps, some which from their structure could not lend themselves to these peculiar devices. I will say to the Senator that this evil is a progressive evil. It is getting worse year by year. Japan has 20 old ships which ply the Canal. They have not resorted to these devices in the past, but within the last year they have reconditioned two of those vessels and have materially cut down their tonnage and have materially cut down the tolls they pay to the United States.

To illustrate to the Senator one of the other devices by which the Japanese ships cut down their tonnage, they used to be coal-burning ships, and, naturally, had bunkers in which to carry their coal. They have been converted into oil-using vessels. A certain percentage of a ship's capacity is exempt on account of engine rooms and propelling space. They cut a door between the old coal bunkers of the ship and the engine room, and by that device materially reduced the toll-paying tonnage, because the bunker space became part of the engine room and increased it beyond 13 percent of the gross tonnage.

Here is another strange feature of our United States rules of measurement. If a ship's engine room is 13 percent or less of the total tonnage of the ship, then she receives a reduction for propelling power corresponding with the actual size of the engine room plus 75 percent of the engine-room space as a fuel allowance. But if they increase the engine-room space to between 13 percent and 20 percent of the gross tonnage, 32 percent of the entire gross tonnage of the ship is allowed as a deduction for propelling power. This is an arbitrary allowance and amounts to much more than the 175-percent method mentioned before.

Some owners have resorted to this to a greater degree than others, some to a lesser degree. The question is, Ought the practice to be tolerated, ought it to be continued, ought the Government of the United States to prescribe the tolls on a fair and equitable basis, which it will charge for the service of passing ships through the Canal, requiring all owners to pay a just and reasonable charge, a uniform charge, or should this question be left to the caprice and whim, I need not say to the avarice or to the cupidity, of these various shipping concerns? Is the system rational?

Mr. President, the 90-cents-a-ton rate corresponds substantially with the present average rate, which is eighty-five and a fraction cents. If we made allowance for certain deductions for public rooms, which the Secretary of War will make or recommend if this measure be enacted, the average rate last year would have been eight-seven and a fraction cents instead of 85 cents per ton, and for 1934 the average charge would have been 88 cents instead of 85 cents. So that this 90 cents a ton corresponds substantially with the present average rate, but it obviates all these discriminations.

The Senator from Georgia can see this point: My ship passes through the Canal, say, for $2,000 less than he pays. He pays the freight. My cheaper rate does not inure to the benefit of the shipper, it operates as a subsidy to me. I simply make my rate just enough below his to insure a cargo, and to subject him to what might be regarded as unfair competition, and I pocket the subsidy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Oklahoma suspend so that the Senate may carry out the order with reference to the impeachment proceedings.

Mr. GORE. I yield.

At this point (at 1:45 p. m.), the recess of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment having expired, the impeachment proceedings were resumed.

CROP-PRODUCTION LOANS

After the conclusion for the day of the impeachment proceedings, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oklahoma yield to me to present a matter other than the unfinished business?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, all Members of the Senate are familiar with what has occurred in reference to the so-called seed-loan bill. The committee has authorized me to make a report as to what has transpired to date. It will be recalled that the committee addressed a letter to the President of the United States, setting forth what was contained in certain telegrams from the regional managers of the seed-loan offices, and suggesting an amount that would be immediately necessary to meet the conditions. The President replied to that letter, and I ask that the clerk read the President's reply, and then I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, according to the order of the committee this morning, the original bill, the veto message, the Executive order, the letter written by the committee, and the reply of the President thereto. I ask that that be done in chronological order, as I have been instructed so to do by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1936.

HON. ELLISON D. SMITH,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is in reply to the letter of March 5, 1936, addressed to me by yourself and other members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with respect to the allotment of funds under my Executive order of February 28, 1936, for the purpose of making loans to farmers during the year 1936 for production of crops.

I note that you and your committee members are of the opinion that at least $28,500,000 should be immediately allotted for the making of these loans and are requesting that this be done.

In my Executive order I set aside, or earmarked, not to exceed $30,000,000 for this purpose, of which $7,000,000 was immediately allotted, and I stated that additional allotments would be made from time to time as might be necessary. I propose to carry out this program. The Governor of the Farm Credit Administration advises me that an additional $13,000,000 will be required on or about March 20, at which time I shall cause that sum to be made available. He further advises that additional funds may be required on or about April 10, at which time I will take the necessary action to see that such amount as may be shown to be necessary is supplied. I cannot see why this arrangement should not be satisfactory to all concerned.

It is not practicable to make an immediate allotment of all of the funds estimated to be required, since it is necessary to follow the routine of drawing in unobligated balances from various allotments of emergency funds and making them available for the making of crop-production loans. This will be done, of course, as rapidly as possible and in ample time to meet the needs of the Farm Credit Administration.

I trust that the foregoing will be sufficient to assure you and the members of your committee that adequate provision will be made for providing funds for the making of the loans in question as the need for them becomes necessary.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, am I correct in understanding from the letter of the President that on the 20th of March there will be $13,500,000 available?

Mr. SMITH. There will be $20,000,000 available.

Mr. BORAH. That is, $20,000,000 will be available on and after the 20th of March?

Mr. SMITH. "On or about" as the letter says.

Mr. BORAH. That disposes of the entire matter, veto and all?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. President, I wish to make just a brief statement and then I am through with this matter. As one member of the committee I did not think, and do not now think, that this sum is at all adequate, but on account of the lateness of the season, crops being planted now and whatever contracts are necessary having been made, we have agreed to accept the amount—not to accept it, but we have agreed to let the matter drop for the reason that perhaps half a loaf is better than no loaf at all.

I now ask that the documents referred to by me may be printed in the order I have indicated.

There being no objection, the documents were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States of America; at the second session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Friday, the 3d day of January 1936

An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1936, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, hereinafter in this act referred to as the "Governor", is hereby authorized to make loans to farmers in the United States and in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, during the year 1936, for following, for the production of crops, for planting, cultivating, and harvesting of crops, for supplies incident to and necessary for such production, planting, cultivating, and harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes. Such loans shall be made and collected through such persons and agencies, upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations, as the Governor shall prescribe.

SEC. 2 (a) There shall be required as security for any such loan a first lien, or an agreement to give a first lien, upon all crops of which the production, planting, cultivating, or harvesting, is to be financed, in whole or in part, with the proceeds of such loan; or, in case of any loan for the purchase or production of feed for livestock, a first lien upon the livestock to be fed. Fees for recording, filing, registration, and examination of records (including certificates) shall not exceed 75 cents per loan, and may be paid from the proceeds of the loan. Each loan shall bear interest at the rate of 5½ percent per annum.

(b) The amount which may be loaned to any borrower pursuant to this act shall not exceed $500: Provided, however, That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed emergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to the foregoing limitations as to amount, under such regulations and with such maturities as he may prescribe therefor.

(c) No loan shall be made under this act to any applicant who shall not have first established to the satisfaction of the proper officer or employee of the Farm Credit Administration, under such regulations as the Governor may prescribe, that such applicant is unable to procure from other sources a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act.

SEC. 3. (a) The moneys advanced by the Governor in connection with each loan made under the provisions of this act are declared to be impressed with a trust to accomplish the purposes provided for by this act (namely, for following, for the production of crops, for planting, cultivating, and harvesting of crops, for supplies incident to such production, planting, cultivating, and harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes); and may be used only for the purposes stated in the borrower's loan application, and until so used shall continue subject to such trust and be free from garnishment, attachment, or the levy of an execution.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining, or assisting another to obtain, a loan under the provisions of this act; or willfully to dispose of, or assist in disposing of, except for the account of the Governor, any crops or other property upon which there exists a lien securing a loan made under the provisions of this act.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person to charge a fee for the purpose of preparing or assisting in the preparation of any papers of an applicant for a loan under the provisions of this act.

(d) Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both.

SEC. 4. The Governor shall have power, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation and duties of such agents, officers, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such officers and employees shall correspond, so far as the Governor deems practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act and of collecting loans made under acts of the same general character, including loans made by the Governor with funds appropriated under the provisions of the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, the Governor is authorized to use the facilities and services of any agency, institution, or corporation operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration, and any officer or employee of any such agency, institution, or corporation, or of the Farm Credit Administration, and may pay for such services and the use of such facilities from the funds made available for the payment of necessary administrative expenses; and such agencies, institutions, and corporations are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for the accomplishment of such purposes.

Sec. 5. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act. Any moneys so appropriated, and all collections of both principal and interest on loans made under this act, may be used by the Governor for making loans under this act and for all necessary administrative expenses in carrying out the provisions of this act and in collecting outstanding balances on crop production, seed, and feed loans made under prior legislation of the same general character.

(b) Expenditures for printing and binding necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act may be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

Message from the President of the United States returning, without approval, the bill (S. 3612) entitled "An act to provide loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1936, and for other purposes"

February 24 (calendar day, Feb. 26), 1936.—Read; referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 3612, a bill entitled "To provide loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1936, and for other purposes."

This bill authorizes an appropriation of $50,000,000 from the general fund of the Treasury for loans to farmers during the year 1936, for production of crops—principally seed loans.

In approving the bill providing $40,000,000 for crop production loans for 1934, I stated that I did so on the theory that it was proper to taper off the crop-loan system, which had been initiated on a large scale as early as 1931, rather than to cut it off abruptly, particularly since such loans would serve a useful purpose in aiding certain farmers unable to qualify for crop-production loans through the newly established farmers' production credit associations, and that the 1934 loan by the Government should thus be considered as a tapering-off loan.

It is true that I gave my approval to a $60,000,000 crop-production loan for 1935, but this loan was primarily for relief purposes principally in the drought-stricken areas, and I recommended to the Congress that the cost of such loans should properly be defrayed from the appropriation for relief purposes. Accordingly $60,000,000 was reappropriated from unobligated balances under allocations from the appropriation of $525,000,000 for relief in stricken agricultural areas contained in the Emergency Appropriation Act passed the previous year.

In my Budget message, transmitting the 1937 Budget, I stated: "If the Congress enacts legislation at the coming session which will impose additional charges upon the Treasury for which provision is not already made in this Budget, I strongly urge that additional taxes be provided to cover such charges."

No provision was made in the financial program for the fiscal year 1936, or the fiscal year 1937, for additional crop loans, and, notwithstanding my Budget statement, quoted above, the Congress by this bill authorizes an additional draft upon the Treasury for $50,000,000 for new crop loans, without making provision for any revenue to cover such loans.

However, while I am returning this bill without my approval, I recognize that there still exists a need for crop-production loans to farmers whose cash requirements are so small that the operating and supervisory costs, as well as the credit risk, make credit unavailable to them at this time through the usual commercial channels and who, unless extended assistance of this character, would no doubt find it necessary to seek some other form of relief from the Government. This is particularly true with respect to those areas in which unusual conditions prevail because of drought, dust storms, floods, rust, and other unforeseen disasters.

I fully agree with the Congress that provision should be made for such borrowers during the year 1936, but I feel that other borrowers should seek credit elsewhere.

I am convinced that the immediate and actual needs to which I have referred can be met during the year 1936 by an expenditure of funds materially less than that proposed in the bill under discussion.

Furthermore, these needs can be met, without the necessity of enacting authorizing legislation, through an allocation of funds by me from the appropriation provided in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act for 1935, which appropriation, I am informally advised by the Comptroller General of the United States, can be utilized for such loans as I might indicate by Executive order to be desirable and necessary as relief measures.

I believe, therefore, that a special appropriation by the Congress at this time is both inadvisable and unnecessary. That being so, and in the absence of such legislation, I propose in order to meet this need to issue an Executive order within the next few days.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

February, 26, 1936.

Seventy-fourth Congress of the United States of America; at the second session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Friday, the 3d day of January 1936

An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1936, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, hereinafter in this act referred to as the "Governor", is hereby authorized to make loans to farmers in the United States and in Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, during the year 1936, for following for the production of crops, for planting, cultivating, and harvesting of crops, for supplies incident to and necessary for such production, planting, cultivating, and harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes. Such loans shall be made and collected through such persons and agencies, upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations, as the Governor shall prescribe.

Sec. 2. (a) There shall be required as security for any such loan a first lien, or an agreement to give a first lien, upon all crops of which the production, planting, cultivating, or harvesting is to be financed, in whole or in part, with the proceeds of such loan; or, in case of any loan for the purchase or production of feed for livestock, a first lien upon the livestock to be fed. Fees for recording, filing, registration, and examination of records (including certificates) shall not exceed 75 cents per loan, and may be paid from the proceeds of the loan. Each loan shall bear interest at the rate of 5½ percent per annum.

(b) The amount which may be loaned to any borrower pursuant to this act shall not exceed $500: Provided, however, That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed emergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to the foregoing limitations as to amount, under such regulations and with such maturities as he may prescribe therefor.

(c) No loan shall be made under this act to any applicant who shall not have first established to the satisfaction of the proper officer or employee of the Farm Credit Administration, under such regulations as the Governor may prescribe, that such applicant is unable to procure from other sources a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act.

Sec. 3. (a) The moneys advanced by the Governor in connection with each loan made under the provisions of this act are declared to be impressed with a trust to accomplish the purposes provided for by this act (namely, for following, for the production of crops, for planting, cultivating, and harvesting of crops, for supplies incident to such production, planting, cultivating, and harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes); and may be used only for the purposes stated in the borrower's loan application, and until so used shall continue subject to such trust and be free from garnishment, attachment, or the levy of an execution.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining, or assisting another to obtain, a loan under the provisions of this act; or willfully to dispose of, or assist in disposing of, except for the account of the Governor, any crops or other property upon which there exists a lien securing a loan made under the provisions of this act.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person to charge a fee for the purpose of preparing or assisting in the preparation of any papers of an applicant for a loan under the provisions of this act.

(d) Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both.

Sec. 4. The Governor shall have power, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation and duties of such agents, officers, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such officers and employees shall correspond, so far as the Governor deems practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, and of collecting loans made under acts of the same general character, including loans made by the Governor with funds appropriated under the provisions of the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, the Governor is authorized to use the facilities and services of any agency, institution, or corporation, operating under the supervision of the Farm Credit Administration, and any officer or employee of any such agency, institution, or corporation, or of the Farm Credit Administration, and may pay for such services and the use of such facilities from the funds made available for the payment of necessary administrative expenses; and such agencies, institutions, and corporations are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for the accomplishment of such purposes.

Sec. 5. (a) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $50,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act. Any moneys so appropriated, and all collections of both principal and interest on loans made under this act, may be used by the Governor for making loans under this act and for all necessary administrative expenses in carrying out the provisions of this act and in collecting outstanding balances on crop production, seed, and feed loans made under prior legislation of the same general character.

(b) Expenditures for printing and binding necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act may be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

KEY PITTMAN,

President of the Senate pro tempore.

[Endorsement on back of bill:]

I certify that this act originated in the Senate.

ED. A. HALSEY, Secretary.

Executive order allocating funds to the Farm Credit Administration and prescribing rules and regulations for the making of emergency crop loans under the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935

By virtue of and pursuant to the authority vested in me by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 115), it is hereby ordered as follows:

1. There is set aside from funds provided by the said act for the use of the Farm Credit Administration for the purpose of making loans to farmers during the year 1936, under limitation (b) in section 1 of the said act, in the United States, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, for following, for the production of crops, for planting, cultivating, and harvesting crops, for supplies incident to and necessary for such production, planting, cultivating, and harvesting, and for feed for livestock, or for any of such purposes, under such terms and conditions as the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration (hereinafter referred to as the Governor) may prescribe, a sum not to exceed $30,000,000, of which the sum of $7,000,000 is hereby allocated to the said Administration to be supplemented from time to time by such additional allocations as may be necessary.

2. The amount which may be lent to any one borrower shall not exceed $200, and each applicant for a loan shall establish to the satisfaction of the proper officer or employee of the Farm Credit Administration, under such conditions as the Governor may prescribe, that the applicant is unable to procure such loans from any other source: Provided, That preference shall be given to the applications of farmers whose cash requirements are small.

3. Loans made under the provisions of this order shall be secured by a first lien, or by an agreement to give a first lien, upon all crops of which the production, planting, cultivating, or harvesting is to be financed, in whole or in part, with the proceeds of such loans or in case of any loan for the purchase or production of feed for livestock a first lien upon the livestock to be fed. Such loans shall be made and collected under such regulations as the Governor shall prescribe, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5½ percent per annum.

4. Fees for recording, filing, registration, and examination of records (including certificates) in connection with each loan made hereunder shall be paid by the borrower: Provided, however, That such fees aggregating not to exceed 75 cents per loan may be paid by him from the proceeds of his loan. No fees for releasing liens given to secure loans shall be paid from the funds made available hereunder.

5. The funds hereby or hereafter allocated may be used also for all necessary administrative expenses in carrying out the provisions of this order to and including June 30, 1937.

6. In carrying out the provisions of this order, the Farm Credit Administration may (a) make expenditures for supplies and equipment, traveling expenses, rental of offices, printing and binding, and other necessary expenses; and (b) accept voluntary and uncompensated services, appoint officers and employees without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and regulations, and fix the compensation of any officers and employees so appointed without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 28, 1936.

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY,
Washington, March 5, 1936.

HON. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,

The White House, Washington, D. C..

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: We, the undersigned members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, ask that $28,500,000 be immediately allocated for seed-loan purposes.

Telegrams received indicate that this is a minimum amount necessary for those, who without funds, must make arrangements now for planting their crops. The committee, in a lengthy session, discussed this matter today. The regional managers of the seed loan have indicated the amounts necessary for their districts. From the tone of these telegrams, or most of them, this amount is indicated as being needed now.

In order that those who receive this aid may know how to arrange their affairs it is absolutely necessary for them to be advised at this time when and how much they may depend upon. The planting season is on, and it is indispensable that this information be available for them.

Yours very sincerely,

Ellison D. Smith, Burton K. Wheeler, Elmer Thomas, George McGill, W. J. Bulow, Hattie W. Caraway, Louis Murphy, James P. Pope, Carl A. Hatch, Theodore G. Bilbo, Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Arthur Capper, Peter Norbeck, Lynn J. Frazier, Henrik Shipstead.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., March 9, 1936.

HON. ELLISON D. SMITH,

Chairman, Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,

United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This is in reply to the letter of March 5, 1936, addressed to me by yourself and other members of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with respect to the allotment of funds under my Executive order of February 28, 1936, for the purpose of making loans to farmers during the year 1936 for production of crops.

I note that you and your committee members are of the opinion that at least $28,500,000 should be immediately allotted for the making of these loans and are requesting that this be done.

In my Executive order I set aside, or earmarked, not to exceed $30,000,000 for this purpose, of which $7,000,000 was immediately allotted, and I stated that additional allotments would be made from time to time as might be necessary. I propose to carry out this program. The Governor of the Farm Credit Administration advises me that an additional $13,000,000 will be required on or about March 20, at which time I shall cause that sum to be made available. He further advises that additional funds may be required on or about April 10, at which time I will take the necessary action to see that such amount as may be shown to be necessary is supplied. I cannot see why this arrangement should not be satisfactory to all concerned.

It is not practicable to make an immediate allotment of all of the funds estimated to be required since it is necessary to follow the routine of drawing in unobligated balances from various allotments of emergency funds and making them available for the making of crop-production loans. This will be done, of course, as rapidly as possible and in ample time to meet the needs of the Farm Credit Administration.

I trust that the foregoing will be sufficient to assure you and the members of your committee that adequate provision will be made for providing funds for the making of the loans in question as the need for them becomes necessary.

Sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was observing that the plan of reduced tolls and permitting ships to evade the proper payment of tolls is a progressive evil. Statistics show that it is growing worse year by year. An end ought to be put to this practice.

I dislike to harp too much on the recent Japanese ships, but they illustrate the point. Japan until recently was paying tolls on 94 percent of the tonnage on which she ought to pay, as compared with an average of 85 percent. Four Japanese ships recently put into commission will pay on 68 percent of the tonnage on which they ought to pay. This illustrates the growing evil.

I may say to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], whether present or absent, that there is no one who has had the hardihood to defend this dual system of measurement and these absurd consequences which follow it.

Mr. President, may I have read at the desk at this point a few remarks made by former House leader Mondell, delivered in the other House October 1, 1919, when this endless question was then before the House for consideration?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MR. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the question is, Shall we have a rule of measurement for the computation of the tolls of the Panama Canal which fairly measures the carrying capacity of the vessel, or shall we have a rule which tempts men to build ships in such a way as to enable them to carry cargo and dodge the payment of tolls—a rule under which certain classes of cargo go through the Canal without the payment of the tolls other classes of cargo pay? In other words, shall we have an honest rule based on the carrying capacity of the ships, or shall we have a dishonest rule under which certain ships and certain classes of cargo will enjoy a certain exemption from tolls, while all other ships and all other cargoes pay full tolls?

It is the fair, reasonable, sensible, honest rule, and it can injure no man.

Mr. GORE. That speech was delivered in the House of Representatives some 17 years ago, when the House was undertaking to rectify the evils resulting from the dual system of measurements. The speech is as fitting today as it was then, and we may be as far from a solution of the question today as we were then.

I now wish at this point to have read at the desk a few remarks delivered in the House of Representatives on the same day by Representative Esch, of Wisconsin, a gentleman known personally to many Members of the Senate, and one who stands high in the esteem of Congress and the country.

Mr. Esch was chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and reported the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MR. ESCH. The effect of this decision was practically to destroy the Panama Canal rules of measurement and substituting therefor the rules of measurement prescribed by the United States statutes. There also resulted a discrimination between vessels of different nationalities and a reduction in the revenues. I wish to state as one of those who helped to frame the Panama Canal Act that we thought we were framing legislation which would enable the Panama Commission to fix tolls under the rules prescribed by the proclamations of the Presidents. It was not our purpose that the tollage should be determined by the United States rules of measurement based upon net tonnage, but the decision of the Attorney General stands to this day, and it is to relieve the operations on the Isthmus of the decision of the Attorney General that this bill has been introduced (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Oct. 1, 1919, p. 6214).

MR. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes before this Congress with the endorsement of the Secretary of War. It comes here with the endorsement of Colonel Harding, Governor of the Panama Canal Zone. It comes here with the endorsement of General Goethals, who knows more about the Canal and its administration than any other living man. It comes here with the endorsement of the Commissioner of Navigation, who stated that the Panama Canal rules of tollage and measurement were the most scientific rules in any nation in the world. For these reasons we ask that this bill be passed (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Oct. 1, 1919, p. 6216).

MR. GORE. Mr. President, the present dual system of measurement results in a ship subsidy—a subsidy not prescribed by the Congress of the United States, a subsidy not fixed by the Government of the United States, but a subsidy which is measured and determined by the ship companies themselves. It is a subsidy not limited to American vessels alone. It is a subsidy which is availed of by foreign vessels as well; a subsidy availed of by the competitors of our own shipping concerns.

I submit to the Senate, if we are to have a ship subsidy, let us limit it to ships of our own registry, ships bearing our own flag. In order to secure a small subsidy to American vessels, let us not continue to pay a much larger subsidy to foreign vessels. That is the point I wish to make in this connection.

The question has been raised as to what effect the pending measure would have, if passed, upon the transcontinental railroads.

MR. PRESIDENT, the railroads did not appear at the hearings before the committee of either House. They made no protest against the pending bill. I think we may safely infer from their absence that their interest was not vitally affected; but we need not rely upon that inference. It is perfectly obvious that their interest will not be materially affected, because this measure, if passed and put into effect, will not materially affect the average rate of tolls now charged for passage through the Panama Canal. I have already indicated that making certain allowances for social halls or public rooms and the like, the average rate charged for 1935 was 87 cents per ton, and the average rate charged for 1934 was 88 cents per ton. We are given assurance that this measure, if enacted and carried out, would impose a toll of 90 cents a ton. That would not materially affect the Pacific railroads. It is a mere trifle; and I may say to Senators that this measure was not drawn ad captandum. It is drawn in the light of the history of the Canal. It is drawn in the light of all the experience we have had. It is drawn in the light of the status quo, and it is prepared with a view to occasioning the least possible disturbances in present relationships.

The shipping concerns are opposed to the bill because they fear its enactment would entail an increase in the tolls which they pay. Undoubtedly it would require concerns which are now paying less tolls than they ought to pay to pay more tolls. Concerns which today—and no doubt there are some—are paying more tolls than they ought to pay would under this measure pay less tolls than they are now paying. That would be merely ironing out these discriminations and anomalies—a course to which I think no one can object.

Of course, Senators understand that the rate referred to here—90 cents a ton—relates to the tonnage of the ships. It has no relation to the freight or to the freight rates charged on the cargoes carried by the ships; and no comparison of rates would be admissible, I believe, as between the ships and the railway companies. So I feel safe in assuring the Senate that there would be not the slightest reaction against the interest or unreasonableness in favor of the transcontinental railroads. The effect would be immaterial.

There is one other point to which I wish to call the attention of Senators.

It has been repeatedly stated here that section 1 of this bill as originally introduced carried substantive legislation, and that section 2 provided for raising a commission to make an investigation and report. Senators have made the point that we propose, first, to legislate, and then to investigate; and they have insisted that we ought first to investigate and then to base our legislation on the report or the results of the investigation.

If that point really represented the facts it would, of course, be well taken. It would be perfectly absurd to legislate first and then to investigate afterward. It would be a good deal like the mob which wanted the jury to give up the room where they were considering the guilt or innocence of the accused party in order that the mob might lay out the criminal in the jury room. They had already taken summary action in the premises.

What does this bill do? Because, if that objection were true, the bill would propose an absurdity and ought not to be enacted.

I ask Senators to go back to March of last year, when this bill was introduced. As I say, section 1 contained substantive legislation. It fixed a maximum rate of $1 per ton in order to protect the shipping concerns. It fixed a minimum rate of 60 cents per ton in order to protect the Government. It then authorized the President to ascertain and promulgate an official rate somewhere between the maximum and the minimum. That is what section 1 provided. The bill, as introduced, provided that section 1 should go into effect on September 1, 1936.

On the first day of the coming September, section 1 was to go into effect. The investigation called for in section 2 did not relate to the objective set out in the substantive portion of section 1. The investigation authorized in section 2 related to new conditions which have arisen with reference to shipping which the President should take into account when promulgating the new rules of measurement under section 1.

Section 2 authorized a commission to be raised to make a study and a report as to the rates of toll which should now be imposed in view of the changed conditions of shipping; and the President, when he proceeded to carry into execution section 1, authorizing him to fix tolls, would have the report of the committee at hand, ready to proceed; and section 2, providing for the commission, was to go into immediate effect. If this bill had passed in June last, the President then would have appointed the commission, and section 2 required the commission to submit its report on or before January 1 of the current year—on or before January 1 last—in order that the President might then take into account the results of its studies and of its recommendations, and embody those suggestions in his proclamation when he proceeded to carry out the powers vested in him under section 1.

MR. PRESIDENT, that explains the anomaly and the purpose. The difference between these dates—January 1 last and September 1 next—was intended to give the shipping companies an opportunity to adapt themselves to the new rules of measurement, to prepare for the new tolls that would be imposed, and to get in shipshape, to set their houses in order, looking to the execution of this measure when it went into effect.

That is all the measure does. It does not, in section 2, raise a commission which is to make any study and report as a predicate for section 1, because section 1 fixes a maximum and a minimum which ought to be fixed, and ought to be fixed now, and authorizes the President to promulgate a system of rules of measurement and tolls. Those two powers which are reposed in the discretion of the President are to be exercised by him on the basis of the report, when submitted. It saves time. It obviates another unending delay. That, I take it, is the reason why the shipping companies are opposed to the bill. It would be ready for enforcement on the 1st day of September.

I repeat, this measure has been drawn not recklessly or ad captandum or without regard to all interests concerned. It has been drawn with reference to all those interests, and it protects them. If the proposed legislation does not pass now, I am afraid it never will pass, because, as I have already suggested, the jurisdiction over this subject in the House of Representatives has been transferred from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, a friendly committee, to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, which I am informed—and I speak only upon that information—is a committee unfriendly to the pending legislation.

There are one or two other collateral points to which I shall merely make reference.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] argued ably and conclusively that the American merchant marine is an essential auxiliary alike to the American Army and the American Navy. There is no dispute upon that point. That is merely demonstrating what is self-evident. But I believe that the Secretary of War, charged peculiarly with the common defense, may as safely be trusted in the consideration of legislation of this sort as may the shipping concerns, who naturally wish to keep their tolls down. There is no controversy on that point.

The Senator from North Carolina also suggested that our coastwise trade ought to be given some special consideration or favor.

That is a question worthy of debate and consideration. It is immaterial now, because our coastwise trade does not now enjoy any particular favor or consideration under existing law. It will occupy the same status, if the pending measure becomes law, which it now occupies. So that point is really foreign to the appropriate consideration and decision of the issue now involved.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina pleaded eloquently, like the old Roman motto, Fiat lux—let there be light. I should certainly be the last to resist a prayer of that kind. Why not, as a matter of practical legislation, defeat the pending substitute for the bill? I should then have no objection to attaching the substitute to section 1 as an amendment. Section 2 was included in the bill when it was originally introduced, providing for the investigation. I have no particular objection to the investigation. I do not think it is necessary; but if other Senators disagree with me, I defer to their judgment.

I ask Senators to defeat the pending substitute; and if they do so, I will then, if it be in order, offer to attach the substitute as an amendment to section 1 in order that the measure may pass; and if there be any additional data, if there be any further information available, or if Senators desire to exhaust the possibility and be assured that there are no further data available, I shall have no objection to that course.

NATIONAL BOY SCOUT JAMBOREE

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House Joint Resolution 443. This measure merely seeks to reenact a joint resolution which the Senate passed last year, and which was approved on June 17, relating to the Boy Scout Jamboree, which was abandoned last year because of an epidemic of infantile paralysis. The only difference between the measure passed last year and the one I am now asking to have considered is that in this joint resolution the date is made 1937 instead of 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 443) to amend Public Resolution No. 31 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, approved June 17, 1935, so as to extend its provisions to cover the National Boy Scout Jamboree now scheduled to be held in 1937.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I may say that my reason for asking consideration of the joint resolution at this time is that about 800 of the Boy Scouts are in session at French Lick at this time, and they would like to have the measure passed while they are in session, between the 11th and the 18th of March.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, That Public Resolution No. 31 of the first session, Seventy-fourth Congress, approved June 17, 1935, is hereby amended as follows: In section 1 of the public resolution after the words "to be held in the United States in" the figures "1935" are amended to read "1937."

THE KERR TOBACCO ACT, THE BANKHEAD COTTON ACT OF 1934, AND THE POTATO ACT OF 1935

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I report favorably without amendment from the Committee on Appropriations House Joint Resolution 514, authorizing the completion of certain records and operations resulting from the administration of the Kerr Tobacco Act, the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, and the Potato Act of 1935 (repealed), and making funds available for those and other purposes. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The necessity for the proposed appropriation arises out of the fact that the Bankhead Cotton Act, the Kerr Tobacco Act, and the Potato Act of 1935 were repealed, and commitments had already been made under them. The unpaid obligations of these Government activities totaled the amount which is unanimously reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That not to exceed $1,068,825 (to be available until Sept. 1, 1936) of the appropriation of $296,185,000 for "Payments for agricultural adjustment" contained in the Supplemental Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936, approved February 11, 1936 (Public Act No. 440, 74th Cong.), may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture for the following purposes:

(1) So much as may be necessary, not to exceed the sum of $1,026,000 (notwithstanding the repeal by Public Act No. 433, 74th Cong., of Public Law No. 483, 73d Cong., as amended, known as the Kerr Tobacco Act, and Public Law No. 169, 73d Cong., as amended, known as the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, except sec. 24 thereof, and secs. 201 to 233, both inclusive, of Public Law No. 320, 74th Cong., known as the Potato Act of 1935), for the redemption of tax-payment warrants as provided in such Kerr Act, including administrative expenses necessary therefor; for salaries and administrative expenses incurred on or before February 10, 1936, under such three acts, or sections of acts, repealed; for such personal services and means in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, including rent, printing and binding, travel, and other administrative expenses incurred after that date as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, respectively, deem necessary, in order expeditiously to complete and preserve all of the administrative records showing the various transactions and activities involved in the administration of such acts; and, if no other funds are available, for such salaries and administrative expenses as were incurred on or before February 10, 1936, in the operation of the several cotton tax-exemption certificate pools established pursuant to regulations prescribed under said Bankhead Act, and such salaries and administrative expenses thereafter incurred as the Secretary of Agriculture finds to be necessary for the purpose of completing the work relating to and liquidating, as soon as may be, such pools.

(2) So much as may be necessary, not to exceed the sum of $42,825, for salaries and necessary administrative expenses in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, to complete the work of auditing vouchers and payment of freight bills in transactions entered into by the Secretary of Agriculture with relation to the purchase and sale of seed as a result of the allocations to the Secretary of Agriculture authorizing the purchase and sale of seed made pursuant to the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer to the Treasury Department, out of the funds made available by this joint resolution, such sums (not to exceed a total of $175,000) as are required for the Bureau of Internal Revenue to carry out the above-stated purposes.

SEC. 2. The sum of $453,100 of the appropriation of $296,185,000 referred to in section 1 hereof shall be returned to surplus immediately upon the enactment of this joint resolution.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN WEST VIRGINIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, yesterday Mr. Harry L. Hopkins, chief generalissimo of the expenditure of relief funds in the United States, wrote me a letter in reply to a number of charges I had made in the United States Senate about conditions in connection with the Works Progress Administration in West Virginia.

I do not know where Mr. Hopkins bought the whitewash, but if I could have had the contract for the whitewash he used in this report, I could retire for life on just the commissions. He whitewashed enough to make a center line from the city of Charleston clear to the city of Washington, and proceeding, according to his usual practice, to erect buildings like the famous house which Chic Sale told us how to construct, he had enough whitewash to whitewash every one of them which he had constructed during the particular time of his administration.

I stated in West Virginia, and I repeat here, that the investigation conducted by Mr. Hopkins' agents under the leadership of Mr. Alan Johnstone was a sham, a fraud, and a farce. There was no intention to investigate. There was no intention in their minds to bring in any reports, except to clear the W. P. A. itself. To find Mr. McCullough guilty would have been to find Mr. Hopkins guilty, and sending any of Mr. Hopkins' force down to investigate Mr. McCullough in the State of West Virginia was like sending "Baby Face" Nelson down to investigate John Dillinger.

Not only that: I really believe that Albert B. Fall, when he was in charge of the Department of the Interior, at least would have brought in a more fair report and a more honest report relative to the Teapot Dome than Harry Hopkins has brought in about the W. P. A. in the State of West Virginia. I think this letter should be preserved in the Smithsonian Institution. There are more lies per square inch in that particular report than in any other report in the history of the United States. In other words, the whole thing was "covered up."

When I brought the charges, Mr. Johnstone came to me and said, "Whom do you want me to see in West Virginia?" I gave him a list of a number of men to see. Did he see them? Not very many. Here are the reports from the men, the names of whom I gave him to go and see to get particular information to substantiate my charges. Here is what Senator Dan Fleming, president pro tempore of the Senate of the State of West Virginia, said in a letter of March 10:

I received a wire from Mr. Johnstone asking that I come to Charleston to meet him if convenient for me to do so. I wired him that I would meet him the next day, Saturday, at 1 o'clock. I called at his room and found that he was out of the city, but had left an assistant to interview me.

Here is a letter I received from a relief administrator whose name I gave him as a particular person to see:

Johnstone sent me the following telegram: "I am advised by Senator RUSH D. HOLZ that you have information which will assist me in my inquiry of the W. P. A. in West Virginia. Will it be possible for you to confer with me here at the Daniel Boone Hotel today or tomorrow?" I wired Johnstone that I would be glad to meet him for an interview at the Daniel Boone Hotel Saturday at 2 o'clock p. m. On arriving at the appointed time I was met by one of Mr. Johnstone's men, a Mr. Shulkin, who wanted to know if I would talk to him in place of Johnstone. He explained to me that Mr. Johnstone was out.

Here is a letter from another one I asked him to call on:

Relative to Alan Johnstone, the W. P. A. investigator, a telegram was received here Friday afternoon asking Pat to go to Charleston either Friday afternoon or Saturday and hand over to Johnstone such affidavits as were available, and any other information we might have relative to the W. P. A. set-up in this district.

It was physically impossible for us to drop everything and rush to Charleston. We already had made definite plans to spend Saturday in Jackson County. We had conferences set for Friday afternoon and today with labor leaders here, and tomorrow we have been invited to attend the opening of court in Wayne County.

We wrote to Mr. Johnstone telling him that the affidavits were available here, and that we could put him in touch with their authors, and others interested in W. P. A. efficiency here, if he could find time to visit Huntington. Thus far, we have not heard from him.

Oh, he wanted to investigate, Mr. President! I am sure he wanted to investigate!

Here is a letter from a man in Logan County, the name of whom I gave him. Here is the letter. Mr. Sedinger wrote:

Due to my not receiving a telegram from Mr. Johnstone, who was investigating the W. P. A., until I reached Charleston on Sunday, I was unable to see him on Monday when I called him at the hotel. I hope, however, that he will be back in Charleston soon and I will have an opportunity to see him at that time. You, however, have the information which I gave you in Charleston recently; and if he desires to investigate those complaints he would have no trouble in doing so.

That is not all. Here are some more of the witnesses, just to show how he dodged the whole thing. Here is a letter from the man in charge of one of the county taxpayers' leagues:

We have not seen Mr. Johnstone, but reported circumstances of interview with one of his staff Saturday, which information you have heard. Nothing since.

Here is a wire from the prosecuting attorney of one of the counties of West Virginia:

Johnstone not in Point Pleasant, to my knowledge. Received letter from him asking me if I wanted to see him, making no definite suggestion for engagement, and not suggesting visiting Mason County, and not asking for any information or the names of individuals whom he could contact.

Oh, yes; Mr. Johnstone conducted a very thorough investigation! Here is another man, whose name I gave him, who was an employee of the W. P. A. He wired me the following:

Johnstone made no effort to see me.

Here is another one from the oldest member of the House of Delegates in the State of West Virginia:

Did not see Johnstone or have any communications from him.

Here is another letter from a man who was the director of the Wheeling district, Hon. George Oldham, who was chairman of the finance committee of the house of delegates, whose name was on the list:

Johnstone called about 10 o'clock Thursday and wanted me to come to Fairmont Hotel to see him. It was impossible for me to leave here, due to several prior engagements. He did not come to Wheeling to see me.

I could go ahead along this line, Mr. President. Those are just the reports of some of the witnesses who had facts, but Mr. Johnstone did not want the facts. Harry Hopkins did not want the facts about the W. P. A. to be known to the people of the State of West Virginia. He is more extravagant with his words than he is with the people's money, and he is about as reckless in handling his words as he is in handling the money of the people of the United States.

I spoke about whitewash a minute ago. Do Senators know what Mr. Hopkins and his friends have done? They have appropriated approximately $644,000 for sanitary privies in the State of West Virginia and approximately $224,000 for feeding children! That is a wonderful exhibit of what he is trying to do.

Let us go a little bit further and see about the investigation as conducted by Mr. Johnstone, who is the star investigator of Mr. Harry Hopkins, whom I spoke about as being "cocky Harry." He is cocky, because he is sitting back on the money bags, and too many of the Senators and too many of the people are fearful of saying anything about it for fear their States will be punished.

I desire to say the persons I named in the W. P. A. staff to contact Mr. Johnstone, after they told Mr. Johnstone a story, were fired from the W. P. A. Let me give you a telegram from one of them.

I told Mr. Johnstone to see Mrs. Helen Gardner, and here is what she replies:

Senator RUSH D. HOLT:

Was seen in your office. Dismissal notice yesterday.

HELEN GARDNER.

But, of course, there is nothing wrong about that—not a thing in the world.

Then down at Charleston the administrative assistant and office manager came in and gave me a story, and yesterday he was fired without any reason at all. He fired him because he told the truth.

I shall give the Senate some more instances at a later date; but I do not want to continue to hold the Senate for so very long, because if I started today telling the rottenness of the W. P. A. in West Virginia, the Senate could not adjourn in time for the conventions. It is the most rotten, reckless expenditure of public money ever known in our State.

I could tell Senators many incidents that I know of. Do Senators know what it costs the W. P. A. to cut down a tree in West Virginia? We have figured it out. It costs them $27 to cut down one tree! That is a wonderful work-relief program they are giving in that State!

Mr. Johnstone comes out in his famous—I do not know what kind of a sheet you would call it—and says that the people in the Parkersburg office had had money demanded from them for my political broadcasts. That is another one of the lies that Mr. Hopkins tells.

Here is a telegram from Parkersburg. I quote it, and put it in the RECORD:

Have wired Associated Press: "Was in charge of arrangements for broadcast of Senator HOLT's speech at St. Marys on February 8. Mr. McCullough's charge that assessment was levied against W. P. A. employees to pay for this broadcast is absolutely false." ALBERT HOY.

Not only that, but he goes ahead and sends me another telegram and wants to know if Mr. McCullough would tell how much he collected from the Parkersburg people for his Christmas present, instead of the political broadcasts. How much do Senators suppose this broadcast cost? It cost $109, and they are very fearful that that would hurt the expenditure of money in West Virginia.

Another thing: Mr. Tucker, who was fired yesterday, used to be my secretary here, and went back to Charleston on the W. P. A. One day the investigator came in to see him. He demanded of him, "Where are the letters from Senator HOLT?"—not from any other person in official life, but "Where are the letters from Senator HOLT?" This young man showed him the letters from me. He said, "Some of those letters are missing. Where are they?" and he put Mr. Tucker through a regular third degree of questions. He was not interested in any letters that were in Mr. McCullough's office or Mr. Smith's office, but he repeated, "Where are the letters from Senator HOLT about the W. P. A.?" and he said, "If you cannot produce them, we will get them from his file in Washington."

Oh, there is no doubt about that, because someone went into my desk while I was down in Charleston. While I was investigating W. P. A. in Charleston, somebody broke in my office and investigated what was in my desk in Washington.

Of course, I would not imply that this wonderful man who would whitewash, and who had such charges as that against him, would do it.

Let me go a little bit further into the charge concerning the W. P. A. Mr. Johnstone, through Mr. Hopkins, says that there is no politics in West Virginia; that everything is lily white and pure; that if anyone mentioned politics he would be put out.

I am going to submit for the record the list of every single person in the State office of the Works Progress Administration and who appointed him, every person in the Lewisburg office, every person in the Elkins office, every person in the Charleston office, and I gave the Senate a list of those in the Fairmont office the other day. Here are the letters sent me by the directors themselves. I wish Senators would check them and see how many political endorsements are listed.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these names and recommendations be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Charleston, W. Va., January 28, 1936.

Hon. RUSH D. HOLT,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HOLT: In keeping with your recent request for the names, salaries, and sponsors of the respective persons upon the administrative pay roll in the State offices of the Works Progress Administration, I beg to hand you herewith the same.

Trusting that this information is that which you desire, or that your request contemplated, I am,

Sincerely,

F. W. McCULLOUGH,

Works Progress Administrator for West Virginia.

Robinson as to her stenographic ability and accepted by me because of her geographical residence for the reason that I wanted a secretary who had no connections in the first district. Miss Schaffner was at that time a resident of Clarksburg.

² All persons indicated in this manner were placed on the administrative pay roll of this office after having been called in to the office and after having worked long enough to convince us of their ability to perform the services assigned to them. These persons were employed because of their own personal ability, and not because of recommendations, political or otherwise.

⁵ Miss Bogdonovich was recommended to me by a Legionnaire friend, W. C. Ingram, of Davis, W. Va., and she was employed after a trial of her ability and I might add that she is now one of the best and most conscientious workers on the administrative staff.

Faye McClung, under stenographer.	60.00	Selected on efficiency basis.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Johnstone says that there is no politics in West Virginia. He decries the use of politics. Let me read a letter from Mr. McCullough to my colleague [Mr. NEELY], in which he says:

Please be advised that Mr. Harmon has been in this office, and I feel that in the future he will be in sympathy with the things that are being done in Putnam County.

Oh, no politics; he was just in sympathy with building something down there!

Let me go ahead and list these. This is what the personnel director of the Fairmont district said on October 30:

I am glad to inform you that we are following certain orders from so-and-so and so-and-so on any suggestions as to personnel in Hancock County.

Here is a letter dated November 25:

You will note in Brooke, Hancock, Harrison, Marshall, Ohio, and Taylor Counties the word "no" is typewritten opposite the name of the sanitation supervisors.

Of course, the Senate knows what they are; I need not explain it.

That means these fellows are not with us, and we are going to change these men as quickly as possible. I thought if you had any special reason to contact these foremen, timekeepers, and superintendents, I wanted you to know that the above-mentioned names marked "no" on this list are not our friends.

Oh, Mr. President, of course there is no politics in West Virginia.

Here is a letter dated November 1, which I want to read into the RECORD, written by the same man:

I am enclosing a copy of the county sanitation supervisors; tentative lists of the safety and compensation departments. By way of explanation, about 6 weeks ago—

I want the Senate to get this—about 6 weeks ago two meetings were held in this office. Those present were: Howard L. Robinson—

I will now identify him. He is United States attorney for northern West Virginia.

William J. Gates, Sandy Toothman—

Who is my colleague's political boss in his home county.

Harry C. Loudon, and Frank Wiley. At that time the enclosed lists were discussed.

Now get this; they were not then satisfied with the people who were there.

By telephone, we contacted J. V. Gibson, Preston County; A. C. Chapman, Wetzel County; W. C. Ferguson, Marshall County; Robert J. Riley and George W. Oldham of Ohio County; Robert L. Ramsey and Abe Pinsky, Brooke County; and Sheriff J. A. Tope, Hancock County.

Of course, they "contacted" them. Let me go ahead with this letter—

After hearing all recommendations and suggestions, the second meeting was held and these lists were drawn up. These lists have been filed with Mr. E. C. St. George, chief personnel director of the Works Progress Administration in Charleston, and an arrangement with him made, whereby these men would be drawn and placed on the pay roll for work as their services were demanded.

Then, he goes ahead and says:

This program has been started with the agreement with Mr. St. George—

Mr. St. George is the State personnel director—and Mr. McCullough—

The Senate knows who he is—that the substitutions shown on the list would be changed as soon as—meaning about 1 month after the program is under way in each county, where substitutions are necessary.

To date no substitutions have been made in the sanitation department, but it is our intention, beginning next week, to notify Dr. Eddy, who is in charge of the sanitation program, to start replacing these men in each county, where replacement is necessary.

Now let me read from a letter dated August 1, signed by the same man:

The time to correct mistakes is before they are made, if possible; consequently we don't want anyone on these jobs who is not right. These hundreds of applications going in should be taken around to the "designated" leaders in each county and sorted; then the local leaders can't blame the personnel office if the right boys are not on. This, to my mind, is paramount if this organization is to accomplish what it has to do in the next year.

What did he mean by "next year"—1935?

Let me go a little further and quote from the director of the Wheeling district. Here is what he says:

I was amused at the letter from Mr. Roth, the former director for the Fairmont district. It was common knowledge at the time I came into the organization that Roth was to be fired and a new director appointed.

This was the man who sent the telegram, who said there was not any politics in it. By the way, he got a new job last night. He is to be appointed in charge of the division in my home district—the man who sent a telegram here criticizing me. All right. That is quick work.

I was so informed by Ned Smith, Mose Darst, and also by Witcher, and the reason given was that he was "playing with Tusca Morris"—

Of course, Senators can ask my colleague who Tusca Morris is—one of NEELY's political enemies; in fact, they told me that Roth and Ashcraft were both to "go", due to their having given Tusca a copy of the pay-roll sheet from the Fairmont office, showing not only the names but the amounts each one was receiving. They had quite a time over this and finally found the sheets under the rug.

It is a bear-in-a-rug proposition.

Here is what he says about an employee who reported.

... He came into my office, produced a little red book, and informed me that his instructions were:

"In Hancock, J. A. Tope—in Brooke, Abe Pinsky—in Ohio, Robert Riley—in Marshall, Tuck Ferguson, and in Wetzel, A. C. Chapman, would name 50 percent of all employees and that he would name the balance."

Of course, there is no politics at all!

I want also to put in the RECORD the actual names handed me by the personnel director of the State, showing who suggested the nutrition supervisors who have charge of feeding the children. I ask that that be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Suggested nutrition supervisors

Mr. HOLT. It has been said that the United States attorney for the northern district did not have anything to do with the W. P. A. A man who is now an employee of the W. P. A. made an application to Robert Roth. He had no connection whatever with Howard L. Robinson, who was United States attorney for the northern district. He had no contact with him orally, by letter, or by messenger. Yet, after he has made application, here is a letter he gets on the 16th day of September 1935. Here is the original letter on the United States attorney's stationery. He says:

I would like to see you tomorrow, if it will be convenient for you to come to the office to see me. You will find me on the ninth floor of the Union National Bank Building.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD L. ROBINSON.

Then on the 23d of October he writes the following letter:

OCTOBER 23, 1935.

I understand that the airport project in Harrison County, just east of Bridgeport, will get under way in the course of the next week or 10 days, and will probably last about a year.

If you think that the work would not be too far away for you, I would like to know if you would be interested in a position as timekeeper at the project, so that I can recommend you for that post.

Sincerely yours,

HOWARD L. ROBINSON.

He writes him again on the 31st of October. Oh, no; he does not have anything to do with it at all.

A man said before a committee in Charleston that the district attorney for the southern district of West Virginia was naming the set-up. He said he named all the appointees. The district attorney wrote me a letter under date of March 4. I will ask the Senate to listen to it very carefully—written by the man who was charged with naming the appointments. Here is the exact language of the district attorney's letter:

I think I can safely say that fully one-half, and I think much more than one-half, of the appointments made in the Huntington office have been made without my recommendation.

No; he did not name all of them. He just named half of them in a whole district of the State of West Virginia. This letter, dated March 4, 1936, is from George I. Neal, United States attorney for the southern district of West Virginia.

May I quote from a letter of December 24 written by J. J. West, acting director of the fifth West Virginia district of the Works Progress Administration? Here is what he says:

All of this personnel except the equipment operators has been selected by this office with the advice and cooperation of friends of the Administration throughout the district.

Oh, no; no politics at all! That letter is from a district director. What did that district director do? Let me read to you. Here is a letter from Huntington received this morning. Mr. West used to be in the city council. This is what happened:

Because J. J. West was and is the W. P. A. Administrator, or rather director here and until 2 weeks ago was also a member and chairman of the finance committee of our city council. He has in his employ as such director wives, children, and other relatives of five of the members of the council.

There are 13 members of the city council of Huntington, and he has put the immediate families of 5 of those 13 members on the pay roll in order to control them.

I exhibit to the Senate, to show that he is not interested in politics, a copy of the record indicating his influence in the Huntington City Council meeting. All underscored portions indicate where J. J. West took part. He is a director of the W. P. A.

I have another letter from Charleston naming certain individuals. I will not name them, because it is not necessary, but it contains a list of five members of the Kanawha County committee, every one of whom was put on the W. P. A. list. No politics at all!

Let us go a little bit further. Here is a letter written on the 26th of November 1935 by the administrative assistant in my colleague's home city and home district.

MR. GEORGE OLDHAM,

Director, Sub-Office, W. P. A. District No. 2,

Wheeling, W. Va.

DEAR MR. OLDHAM: I hand you herewith a list of doctors in Ohio County.

Kindly separate the Democrats from the Republicans and list them in order of priority so that we may notify our safety foremen and compensation men as to who is eligible to participate in case of injury.

Yours very truly,

MOSE M. DARST,
Administrative Assistant.

In other words, if a man would go to a Republican doctor he could die if he was injured. I will quote that again.

Kindly separate the Democrats from the Republicans and list them in order of priority so that we may notify our safety foremen and compensation men as to who is eligible to participate in case of injury.

Darst was carrying out his assignment from higher-ups.

Harry Hopkins may think a whole lot of people are dumb, using his favorite expression, I want to tell him that the people of West Virginia are not so "damn dumb" that they will not take care of him at the first opportunity.

Let us go a little further into the political set-up in the relief projects. I want to read another letter. Here is a letter that a man who is an applicant for a job in Parkersburg wrote on the 25th day of February to the sheriff of Calhoun County. I have here a photostatic copy of the letter. Here is what he says:

PARKERSBURG, W. VA., February 25, 1936.

Due to the fact that the professional and service division has been combined with women's division, it greatly handicaps my opportunity of being of service to my friends in the various sections of this district, and I have a proposition in mind that if successful in matriculation would enable me to assign people you need and ask for in your county.

In other words, relief workers. Get this:

I have a proposition in mind that if successful in matriculation would enable me to assign people you need and ask for in your county.

After he wrote this on the 25th of February, on the 29th of February he was called down to Charleston and had a conference with Mr. McCullough and was put on the pay roll on the 1st day of March 1936. This [indicating] shows that he was put on the pay roll at $150 a month—$1,800 a year—to look after historic and scenic markers and redistribution and reindexing.

Not only did they put him in the district but on March 10 there was an order from Frank A. Wyant, acting director, saying to take him off the project pay roll and put him on the administrative pay roll. Do you know how many people are on that particular pay roll on which this man is? I understand 28 workers, and they put him on and took $1,800 out of the fund to pay him.

Here is another letter I want to read at this time about that same man. Here is what he said:

DEAR—

I will not quote his name because there is no need of involving him at this time.

We are mighty glad you are back on the job and know we have a friend of the court in Parkersburg.

There is a letter that had been sent at that particular time. Let us go a little bit further. I ask to place in the RECORD the letter containing the actual order, of which I have a photostatic copy, where the Charleston division assigned five engineers—Mr. E. B. Snider to get $200 a month, Mr. H. R. Wiley to get $150 a month, Mr. A. J. Foy to get $150 a month, Mr. J. B. Alderson to get $150 a month, and Mr. H. S. Dilcher to get $150 a month, and charge the same to the road project. Where there was only $20,000 to spend they put on that project $800 worth of engineering service a month, beside the engineers they already had. The timekeeper would not charge it, and on the 17th day of February, 1936, a letter was sent to him telling him not to put them on, that they would be put on in the office. I ask that the letter may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION,
Charleston, W. Va., February 17, 1936.

Re: Project no. 65-41-3016.

Mr. J. W. FARRY,

W. P. A. Timekeeper, 1803 McClung Street, Charleston, W. Va.

DEAR SIR: We have been requested by Mr. S. Grover Smith, district director, to advise that it is not in accordance with instructions received in this office that you will not include on your time report time for the following persons:

Mr. E. B. Snider.

Mr. A. J. Foy.

Mr. H. R. Wiley.

Mr. J. B. Alderson.

Mr. H. S. Dilcher.

This time will be submitted to this office by Mr. Dorr Tucker, office manager.

Yours very truly,

HARRY S. TROTTER,

District Supervisor, Division of Finance and Statistics.

Let me read from an actual copy of a letter of March 5, 1936, after the investigation was started. Here is the actual letter:

The division of operations is firmly convinced that the problem as outlined above may be solved in a simple routine manner and in strict accordance with Federal regulations. We further believe that it will not be necessary to alter or destroy any official records as has been suggested in round-table discussion of the matter.

Get that:

I further believe that it will not be necessary to alter or destroy the official records as has been suggested in round-table discussion of that matter.

Here is the letter itself written on the 5th day of March, addressed to this particular person.

Here is the best one of all. I do not know whether Senators can see it or not. Here is a piece of hay-baling wire. I do not know whether any of you are farmers or not, but if you are I would not advise you to buy this kind of hay wire, because if you should use three strands of it around an acre of land it would cost you $93,000. This hay-baling wire I refer to was purchased on an order signed for and agreed to. This wire, one-sixteenth of an inch by 12-inch lock wire, cost $38.75, or $77.50 for 24 inches of this lock wire. If anyone cares to inspect it, here is the purchase order which I now exhibit to the Senate. I am going to take this wire down to an alchemist and have it inspected to see if there is any platinum in it.

Of course, Mr. Hopkins would not say that there was anything wrong about paying $93,000 for enough of this wire to put around an acre of ground. Oh, no!

Here are some more expenditures of money for engineering, as written to me by an engineer, and I am going to put these in the RECORD. Of course, this is in the lily-white picture of the W. P. A. in the State of West Virginia. All right!

Here is project no. 56250, known as the Madison Avenue project. The money appropriated was $42,222. The engineers report that all this money has been spent, but the project was closed down and only approximately 2½ percent of it was completed, including a piece of approximately 1 cubic yard of rock, which would amount to approximately $482 per cubic yard.

Think of that, $482 for a cubic yard of rock to be removed. That is in Cabell County, where the Administrator is from.

Here is another project, the project at Sixth and Eighth Avenues. One thousand nine hundred and fifty-five dollars per month was paid for engineers, which should not exceed in the extreme more than $300. This project is closed down now because of lack of funds. How could we expect it to be otherwise when they are paying $1,955 for supervision?

Here is the Fifth Street project, a sewer. On this project there have been 62 lineal feet of 21-inch sewer laid at a cost of $7,300, costing approximately $120 per lineal foot of sewer line. Oh, Mr. Hopkins is a wonderful Administrator.

Here is the Kanawha Avenue project, $32,000, and the actual engineering cost of that, according to the engineers, was but $2,500, or only one-fourteenth of the cost of that particular thing.

I also want to tell about Huntington. Senators know I went to West Virginia, and I will tell about that later, too, but I want to relate about this project. I found in one project where there was only $90,000 to be expended there were 64 bosses. Think of that! Sixty-four bosses on a $90,000 project—not relief workers but supervisors put on at the request of politicians down in my State.

May I give the supervisory costs on some more projects which I have brought along in that particular group? On a $3,392 project I find the supervising cost is $239.40 a month. On a $50,000 project the supervisory cost is $1,454.80 a month plus five other supervisors who get 50 cents an hour, and there is no way to figure out how much that amounts to.

On a $34,000 project I find the supervisory cost was $1,048.40 a month plus 11 other supervisors getting 50 cents an hour.

On a $41,500 project I find four men, supervisors, timekeepers, and timekeepers for the timekeepers getting $1,358.60 a month, and besides that there are 10 other people who received 50 cents an hour as foremen and subforemen. They ran out of names. They might well have had some straw bosses.

Let us look at some more projects listed here. I find a $40,000 project where the monthly expense for foremen and supervisors alone was $1,085 plus seven other timekeepers at 50 cents an hour. I admit they have to keep time on these people. They have been keeping time on them for a long period of time.

It is said the administrative costs were only 4 percent. Let us look and see if the costs were 4 percent. I find in a single county, in the last month, in this one district, that the supervisory cost alone was $45,118, but the only expenditure they charged was—how much? How much do you suppose they charged for supervisory cost? I have the names of the supervisors who drew $46,000. The way they do that is to have the supervisors appointed and put them in charge of projects, just like they did these five engineers. That expense is charged to the poor fellow that has to work, and if the funds run out the men are run out and the brass hats get all that is left.

They gave me a wonderful group of costs showing the non-relief workers were getting 7.2 percent. The best I can figure is that the supervisory costs, the cost of administration, the cost of material, the cost of equipment, and the other costs would exceed 55 cents on every dollar spent in West Virginia. Yet they say that is not cruel.

A few moments ago I gave a figure about the famous little houses they build out in the country in West Virginia. Here is the amount spent on them. They allocated $624,344 on them and $244,171 on feeding mouths in our State, and for taking care of crippled children they allocated $21,495, as compared to the $640,000 I mentioned a moment ago; then to distribute food to the needy—and that is what I thought the relief act was for—we find that the total amount was only $67,805 in the State of West Virginia.

Has Mr. Hopkins, or have any of his agents, denied the fact that all these men have had these increased salaries? In order that you may not forget them, may I repeat them again and put in the Record? because I want it made so plain that Harry Hopkins can understand it.

Here is the list of persons:

Mr. Ed Hart, of the board of control, formerly received $2,400. Today he is on the W. P. A. pay roll at $2,700.

I find that Mr. Ben Puckett was on the pay roll of the F. E. R. A. at $3,600. Today he is on the pay roll of the W. P. A. at $4,500.

Mr. Elmer St. George was drawing $3,060. He drew $3,600.

Mr. Cornwell, of the F. E. R. A., drew $2,600, and today he is drawing $3,000.

Mr. Walter King was employed by the F. E. R. A. at $3,300. Today he is drawing $3,500.

Mr. J. D. Alexander was drawing $2,340. Today he is drawing $4,500.

Of course, Harry Hopkins will tell you that the responsibility of this is on some "dumb politician." All right.

Mr. Amos Morton was drawing $1,800. Today he is drawing $3,000.

Mr. Morris McConihay was drawing $1,440. Today he draws $2,100.

June Moore was drawing $1,320. Today he draws $2,000.

Mr. Nebarith drew $1,620. Now he draws $3,300.

Mr. Homer Frame was drawing $1,800. Today he is drawing $2,400.

Mr. Jim Myer was getting $2,100. Today he is getting $2,400.

Mr. E. D. Johnson was getting $1,560. Now he gets $2,400.

I find that Mr. Melton Maloney was getting $1,800, and on the W. P. A. he got $3,000.

I find that Mr. Joe Blackburn was drawing $2,400, and was put on the W. P. A. pay roll at $3,200.

Mr. Dewey Phares was getting $5 a day when he was working for the railroad, and he was put on the W. P. A. pay roll at $3,400.

Mr. Mosby, a newspaper writer, you will remember, is the one who painted that beautiful lily. I think they must have had in mind that there were going to be lilies put over this investigation, because in the February issue the "Progressor" painted a beautiful lily. This man gets only $3,300 a year for painting lilies on the "Progressor."

All right. I find that Mr. McPherran was on the pay roll at $3,000, when he was formerly getting $2,400.

Frank Carte was on the pay roll at $2,400, and was formerly getting $1,800.

I find that Mr. Kelly was on the pay roll at $2,400. Before he drew $1,716.

But what is the use of going ahead with this? There is plenty of it in West Virginia. There is plenty of it that Mr. Hopkins could see if he wanted to see it, but he does not want to see it. He wants to dodge. He wants to cover it up, because the responsibility lies at his door, and he ought to be required to take the responsibility.

Now, what about this tremendous supervisory cost? Let me show you what has to be gone through with before the final man gets relief.

They have a man here in charge of the W. P. A., and under him they have a State W. P. A., and under the State W. P. A. they have a district W. P. A., and under the district W. P. A. they have an area W. P. A., and under the area W. P. A. they have a county W. P. A., and under the county W. P. A. they have a project W. P. A. How on earth can we expect the man down at the bottom to get anything after they get through with that, I should like to know, after knowing the men that handle it?

In other words, in the State of West Virginia they have to keep the State office, they have to keep the district office, they have to keep the area office, they have to keep the county office, they have to keep the project officers, before poor old John Smith, down at the bottom, gets a penny; and if the funds give out he is the first man to lose out. They have taken these people from private employment—not relief workers—and put them on the pay roll at tremendous increases in salary, in order that some politician may be pleased.

As you know, I went down to investigate the W. P. A. in West Virginia, and, as I said, this woman came to see me, and she was fired the next day.

I called up on Monday and asked Mr. Ben Puckett if he would give me the amount of rent they paid down in Charleston. I understood that they were paying a dollar a square foot for space for which the F. E. R. A. paid 89.65 cents, and I wanted to find out the facts and other information. He said, "It will take a little time to get it, and if you will wait until tomorrow morning I will have it, sure." "All right", I said; "I will wait, Mr. Puckett." So I sent over Tuesday morning, and the report was not ready. I sent over again Tuesday night, and what was the reply? The reply was this: "I cannot give it to you, because I have had orders not to give you any information."

No criticism of Mr. Puckett. He was ordered to do so by his superior. That was during the investigation. In other words, he had promised it, and in 1 day's time he was forced to reverse himself on that particular matter.

I had heard that the order had been issued to clamp down this censorship, so that I could not get particular records that I wanted, so I called up an assistant in the State engineer's office, a Mr. Bennett, who is a high-class man, and said to Mr. Bennett, "I should like to know the number of a certain project." I did not really want to know the number of the project. I did not care what the number of the project was. I just wanted to see if that order had been given; and here is his exact language, taken down in shorthand over the telephone:

An order has been given out that we are not to give out any information while the investigation is going on here. I called Mr. Smith and asked him if it would be all right, and he told me to have you put it in the form of a written request, and we would see what could be done about it. No criticism to Mr. Bennett. He followed the order of his superior.

In other words, if I wanted the information I could write out my request and then they would determine whether I could get it—just the number of projects down at Gauley Bridge. Oh, of course, there was no censorship down there.

Do you know how bad the condition has gotten in the State of West Virginia? I appointed to the Naval Academy a boy who works over here in the Senate Restaurant, a boy who might not have gone to the Academy. His father was demoted from the W. P. A. the next week, as a retribution. It is too bad that people have to suffer because of the fight that I have to make. Oh, of course, you will be told that he was demoted for some other reason; but it seems peculiar that the project was shut down and a new supervisor was put on immediately afterward.

There is constantly going around the fear that they cannot and will not hold their jobs, they are constantly changing projects.

You know, Mr. Hopkins in his famous letter—and it is a famous letter—says that I requested certain things about Mason County. All right; I want to show you just what I did request about Mason County.

He made it appear that I was interested in personnel down there. I want to read you part of a letter written on December 24 by the area engineer:

With reference to my recent telephone conversation with you in connection with the Mason County program, I did not at once take the matter up with you further, due to the fact your very prompt attention to the situation brought most gratifying results.

There was genuine cause for concern on the part of the people of this county that contacted you, Senator. By way of explanation, the project committees of New Haven, Mason City, and Point Pleasant, and their sponsors, had been approached at various times by representatives of the Huntington office who promised approval and allocation of funds to cover various projects, particularly the street-surfacing job in New Haven, street surfacing and storm sewers in Mason, and continuance of the old E. R. A. program in Point Pleasant, which would let several streets out of soft mud occasioned by unfinished graded base that made them impassable.

In addition, the town of Leon had been promised a project, or, failing this, a road job in that immediate vicinity that would absorb the relief case load there.

Now, it happens that both sponsors, in many cases, and private individuals had contributed funds toward preliminary engineering, preparation of maps, etc., on the assurance of those in Huntington that the projects would materialize.

Now, listen to this. Get this: These people wanted to get out of the mud.

As you will readily understand also, the political angle existed that would make it very embarrassing if they failed to materialize.

That is what I was criticizing. I said I did not care what ticket they voted for; I wanted to get the farmers out of the mud in West Virginia, and they made it appear that I was protesting because they would not employ anybody in Huntington. I did protest to West, I did protest to McCullough, and I protested to Harry Hopkins, but he sat there just as dumb as some of the people he speaks about being dumb.

All right. Another thing: The reporter took away part of my papers. While I am talking about that, I want to put in the RECORD a letter of September 10 from the Huntington Central Labor Union in protest to the administration of West in the W. P. A. in West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

SEPTEMBER 10, 1935.

HON. F. WITCHER McCULLOUGH,
Works Progress Administration for West Virginia,
Charleston, W. Va.

DEAR SIR: At a regular meeting of the Huntington Central Labor Union held on August 26, and again at the next regular meeting, held on September 9, that body stated in most vigorous terms at the first meeting and reiterated even more strongly at the second meeting its deep, profound, and unalterable opposition to the appointment and his retention in the position of acting director of the fifth district, Works Progress Administration, of John J. West, and ordered conveyed to you (with copies to Senators NEELY and HOLT and to Representative JOHNSON) an insistent, vigorous protest against this man, and to ask for his removal from office forthwith and the appointment in his stead of some other of the many qualified men whose record is free from the consistently obnoxious opposition to the principles and ideals so highly cherished by this large group of your constituency that has always characterized the activities of this man, John J. West.

The central body desires to call to your attention also that John J. West, in his capacity as chairman of the Huntington City Council, true to his background, sympathies, and interests, has proposed, fostered, and apparently succeeded in passing measures of taxation that fall upon those least able to pay; at the same time he used his considerable influence against the plan of organized labor to place the proposed increase in taxes upon those most able to pay. His policy is to soak the poor and humble of small earning opportunity in favor of the interests of big business and the utilities.

Further, and especially, the Central Labor Union would have you know that during the past several years John J. West, while engaged in the general contracting business in this vicinity and in neighboring States, has ever and always refused to have any dealings with organized labor, but invariably hired only the rats, scabs, renegades, and potential strike-breakers in the field of labor as his employees.

Another thing, as an indication of the true popular estimate of his worth in civic affairs, it is pointed out that John J. West has frequently been a candidate for election to public office, but always repudiated at the polls. The only offices he has ever held have been by appointment; never elected by the votes of the people. Therefore, his removal from office in this instance would please not only your petitioners but a vast majority of the population of all rank and class who, knowing him, are thus in a position to best judge and pass upon his lack of worth.

Praying your thoughtful consideration of these representations and for a course of action favorable to the request herein laid before you, we are,

Yours sincerely,

HUNTINGTON CENTRAL LABOR UNION,
Per CHAS. R. WOODS, President.

Mr. HOLT. Now, let me read again part of the letter of this Mr. Forsythe that they say is such a fine man, who would not sell his products.

In January I applied to the State administration for a position in the liquor set-up, but Pete Gibson and his crew were effective enough to keep me out; and in the meantime I got back into my business, and also got into the sale of some road material (Kentucky sandstone rock asphalt) which I am promoting as a seal coat for bituminous roads; and then I told the State administration that I was not an applicant for a position. However, my dear friend Witcher offered me a very fine position last week; and after careful consideration with Mr. Neale and Mr. — we decided that with their help and yours and Senator NEELY's that by letting me make a decent living in business that I could do the party considerably more good than by taking a job. He has appointed John J. West to the position offered me, and his appointment is very satisfactory.

That is what he said; and he got a job at $3,600 a year and also maintained the continuation of his place of sale of his products, according to the picture shown at that time.

All right.

I was going to put into the RECORD Mr. McCullough's statement about the Parkersburg district, which he says was so terrible that it required the dismissal of my brother, whom Mr. McCullough had put on the pay roll himself, an appointment with which I had nothing to do. He says that was done in order to correct the district. I wanted to show the Senate exactly what was said about that district in February, but, at the moment, the paper to which I had desired to refer, has been misplaced but will be produced next week.

Mr. President, Mr. Harry Hopkins did not want to know the facts; he never expected to get the facts. He wanted to whitewash Mr. McCullough. He said the charges about Mr. McCullough in connection with the Huntington State Hospital were not true.

To whom did he go? He did not go to the Governor of the State, or to the ex-Governor of the State when Mr. McCullough was in. He did not go to any member of that board of control. Where did he get his information?

I challenge Mr. Hopkins to produce the records of the Huntington State Hospital in August 1931, which show that Mr. McCullough, the present State administrator of the W. P. A. in the State of West Virginia, told Mr. Haddox, a bookkeeper of the board of control, that unless he wrote off an overdraft of $672, or about that amount, he would see that he was fired. Who was in charge of the Huntington State Hospital? Mr. McCullough's father-in-law, Dr. Guthrie, was in charge. He came out $672 short; I think that was the amount. He did not get that affidavit.

There is another thing I should like to have Mr. Hopkins investigate. I should like to have him investigate Mr. McCullough's activity with a Mr. Ben Jesselson, of Ashland, Ky., who had Mr. McCullough as a lawyer in a pardon case, when Mr. McCullough was on the board of control. It is said he represented this fellow in the pardon case, but the pardon was not granted. And this is the fellow running the W. P. A. in West Virginia.

Hopkins says the 42-percent loan-shark bill is all right. Mr. McCullough admitted he helped put it through. Mr. McCullough himself was so ashamed that when I charged him with it, and showed the picture of his window, he had it taken off; he wiped it off. But Mr. Hopkins says it is all right. Mr. Hopkins accepts what Mr. McCullough is ashamed of, the 42-percent loan law, which operates against the poor people of the country who have to borrow less than $300.

I again repeat the charges I made, and I challenge Mr. Hopkins, I challenge any of them in the State of West Virginia, to meet me at any time and admit these charges or deny them.

First, that the people in the State of West Virginia had to get the O. K. of a political boss before they could get on relief.

I charge that increasing the salaries of many, he increased them far beyond reason.

I charge that he shut down projects for political punishment.

I charge that people were dismissed and intimidated and driven to the point where they would not talk for fear of losing their jobs.

I desire to say to the Senate that the State of West Virginia is ashamed of the continuation of such practices as those which have characterized the administration of the W. P. A., such reckless expenditure of money as the State has never seen.

"Boondoggling" as known in my State must come from the old term of the feudal law, "boon." Under the old feudal law the serfs had to give their lord so much money. That was called a "boon." So it is in the State of West Virginia; we have the brass hats who collect the money and who distribute it.

What did McCullough do? Let me tell more about John-son's investigation. He went into West Virginia and said,

"Did Mr. McCullough ever ask you whether you would support him if he were a candidate for Governor?"

Was not that a wonderful procedure? "Did Mr. McCullough tell you he wanted you to support him for Governor?" Of course, they would not tell him. He brought them into McCullough's own office and asked some of them that question. They knew they would lose their jobs if they said anything.

The only way to get down to the facts in this thing is to subpoena individuals and to bring in records, so that we can get the actual truth. If the things with which Hopkins has charged me are true, why should he not want a senatorial investigation?

If they cannot be proven, I certainly would be put in a bad light, but if they can be proven, they ought to be cleaned up, and those who are responsible for them should be driven from office.

Johnstone spent 8 days in West Virginia. I know how Mr. McCullough takes care of the investigators. I lived at the Daniel Boone Hotel long enough to know about that. Whenever the investigators came in to investigate Mr. McCullough's activities—the old expression will be recalled, "wine, woman, and song." Of course, I do not know about what happened at that particular time; the investigators can themselves disclose what happened.

They spent 8 hours investigating the Parkersburg office. I had those men trailed. They thought they were fooling me, but I had a man on their trail, watching where they were going. So we find that they spent 8 hours in Parkersburg, and 5 of the 8 hours were spent in Mr. Forsythe's hotel room and office. They went and looked at the files and said, "This fellow is recommended by John Jones. This fellow is recommended by Bill Smith." They did not know whether Bill Smith or John Jones were in politics or not. They never went to the people I charged with naming these directors in the State of West Virginia. In other words, their investigation was a sham; it was a fraud; it was a whitewash. But no matter how much whitewash is used, there is not enough whitewash in the world to cover up this thing in the eyes of the people of West Virginia, who know what is going on there.

Mr. Hopkins can be reckless with his money, Mr. Hopkins can be reckless with his words, but he cannot cover up the worst maladministration—I use the word seriously—ever known in the history of America. He cannot cover up those things.

Of course, "Cocky Harry" is going to sit back and say we are "too damned dumb" to understand how he is spending the money. I admit that we would be smart if we did know how he was spending it, but I do not know that much of the money spent in West Virginia that should go to the men with picks and shovels is going to the men at the top. Two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars, or approximately that amount, is spent in running the State office. Approximately $125,000 to $150,000 is spent in running each of the district offices. Then there are the area officers, and the supervisors to be taken care of. There is little left for the people who work.

Of course they can whitewash it, of course they can cover it up, but they will never cover it up completely, because I state now that I am going to West Virginia again this week, and I shall come back to the Senate with more disclosures to make of the W. P. A. activities in that State. I shall come back and tell about certain things which I know to be true, but I want to get the actual documents in order to charge just exactly the details of the worst administration of funds that has ever been known, and to show that everyone knew that it was guaranteed in advance that the report would be satisfactory. That was guaranteed in advance.

When I talked to Mr. Johnson, one would have thought from his attitude that I had done something. He tried to put me through the third degree.

He said, "You did likewise, did you not?"

I said, "If I did, that does not excuse the others." I said, "Whatever I had to do with the W. P. A., I am ashamed of; what little I had to do with it I am not at all proud of, and I will regret it as long as I live."

He said, "Did you not ask for the appointment of Mr. McCullough?"

I said, "I did go along on his appointment, that is true, because there were but two candidates, one from the old rotten Relief Administration, and Mr. McCullough himself."

I did not think anything could be rottener than the F. E. R. A. in West Virginia, but I have learned something. I am just a youngster, but I learn something every day. I have learned that there is something worse than the F. E. R. A., and that is W. P. A.—"Witcher's Political Army", or now known as "Whitewashing Political Activity"—as it is administered in West Virginia.

I did go along with it, but I will offer a prayer for forgiveness for what is done in the State of West Virginia. If I am responsible for Mr. McCullough's acceptance, if I am responsible for him being in charge and direction of the W. P. A. activities in West Virginia, it is something that I regret, and something for which I will make public confession, and I hope that I will never do any such thing again.

Not only that but I think the Senate ought to know this is not a political battle, as is shown by what I requested Mr. Hopkins to do a long time ago. "Appoint a man who is not in West Virginia. Appoint a man who is not connected with Senator NEELY. Appoint a man who is not connected with Governor Kump. Appoint a man who is not connected with Witcher McCullough. Appoint a man who is not connected with RUSH HOLT. Appoint a man who is not connected with any political activity in the State of West Virginia, make him administrator of W. P. A. funds, and let him administer the W. P. A. funds."

He would not do it, because poor Harry was so busy telling the people of the country, through his press conferences and his written letters, about how much he had given to the people in expenditures of money.

I am not criticizing the expenditure of money. I am criticizing the distribution of the money. I want more of it to go to the relief workers and less of it to go to the "brass hats" who are sitting down there drawing $150, $200, $300, and $500 a month. That is what I want. I want the relief act administered for the people for whom the relief act was intended to be employed. I want to say again that, although some Senators may not like it, I am going to come back here the first of the week and tell some more concerning the W. P. A. as it affects the Fairmont district, and I am going to keep on telling it until the people know that Harry Hopkins should go down on record as the greatest teller of untruths, the greatest spender of money that this Nation has ever known; and I hope those who hear it will defend him if it is not so.

EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONNEL OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 223, relating to the employment of the personnel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in carrying out certain governmental activities.

The joint resolution has been reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and has to do with establishing the personnel for carrying out the work provided for in what now is known as the new farm act. The joint resolution clarifies the situation as to the appointees. I do not think it will create any discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 223?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the joint resolution. I think the Senator should make some explanation of it. It may be necessary for it to go over to another day.

Mr. SMITH. The joint resolution is very short, and I think most of the Senators who are not members of the committee are apprised of the nature of it.

The joint resolution is confusing in its terms. It provides for soil-erosion prevention and soil conservation, and also has in it a provision that sections 7 to 14 of the act shall be administered as the old A. A. A. was administered. There is some confusion as to what personnel they are going to use, and those who are in a position to know have asked that this joint resolution be enacted in order to clarify the situation.

I may say that the joint resolution has already passed the House, and it merely prescribes who shall carry out sections 7 to 14 of the act; namely, just as many as are necessary of those who are now on that roll and are thoroughly familiar with the work.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the explanation of the Senator from South Carolina satisfy the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. McNARY. I prefer to read the joint resolution and have it go over for the present.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to state to my colleague and friend from Oregon that there is a possibility of the Senate recessing until Monday, and time is the very essence of this matter. I wish the Senator had been present when the committee passed favorably on the joint resolution. It can be very readily understood that in administering sections 7 to 14 of the act it is essential that the old personnel, so far as it may be used, shall be kept, rather than to have the personnel come from some other source.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Oregon satisfied with that explanation?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I stated, as I thought with some emphasis, that I did not wish to have the Senate consider the joint resolution at this time, that I desired to look into it. I am not aware that we are going to adjourn or recess until Monday. I will look into the joint resolution later. I have not had time to read it. I notice there is some change in the language. I do not know of any emergency situation requiring its immediate consideration.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, the organization of this force is progressing rapidly every day. I would have spoken to the Senator about the matter heretofore, but I was under the impression that he was in the committee when we discussed the subject fully, and the joint resolution was ordered to be favorably reported. The organization work is going on every day, and the officials are very anxious to have the question of the personnel clarified.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, on March 10 I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 227, to authorize the completion of work contemplated by Executive Order No. 7075, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I intended to ask that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I have talked with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, and understand that he has no objection to the change of reference being made. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 227, and that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Committee on Commerce will be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 227, and it will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND RELIEF SITUATION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the remarks I am about to make have not been occasioned in any sense by the address just concluded by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt].

During the past several days a great many statements have been made on the floor of the Senate concerning the Works Progress Administration. Criticism has been leveled at the administration of the emergency-relief fund. Many things have been said and various charges have been made. The leader on this side, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], and the able senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] have clearly and forcefully pointed out errors contained in some of the criticism, and each of these Senators clearly demonstrated the worth and benefit arising out of W. P. A. projects. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. Hayden], in a very comprehensive review of public-works projects, gave the Senate and the country much information and enlightenment concerning the vast and splendid program being carried on by the Public Works Administration.

It is not my intention to enter into the discussion of these matters at this time. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to two measures now pending before it which relate somewhat to general propositions in connection with relief—measures which I hope will be constructive and helpful.

The first measure to which I call attention is Senate bill 2711, introduced by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] and myself at the last session of the Congress. I call attention to it now simply to show that some of us anticipated that perhaps there would be those who would seek to use for political advantage and gain the vast fund appropriated by Congress for emergency-relief purposes. The bill was designed to prevent the use of these funds for political purposes. It is not a perfect bill. It does not cover all the possible conditions which might arise, but it does aim at an evil which might arise.

Senators, and, for that matter, all others who have had any connection with public life, public affairs, and especially with practical politics, know full well the dangers which attend the spending of vast sums of money for public purposes. They know that unless checked and restrained, men will seek to use the expenditure of public funds to obtain political gain and advantage. This statement is made without regard to what political party, group, or faction is in control. In looking back over the history of the country, may I not say with pardonable pride that the Democratic Party has been freer from this sort of thing than any party.

While, as I said, it was not and is not my intention to discuss these matters today, I would digress long enough to pay this tribute to the President, the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Hopkins, and Aubrey Williams. For whatever criticism may be heaped upon them today or in the days to come, or if there has been misuse of funds or wrongdoing any place, it has been without their consent and against their wishes and desires. In fact, the President, Mr. Hopkins, and others connected with relief have tried valiantly to keep the administration clean from the sort of thing which has been charged here on the floor of the Senate and elsewhere.

Recognizing, however, the frailties of human nature, and desiring to safeguard and protect the officials charged with the administration of the fund and to prevent some of the very things which have been criticized and condemned here, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] and I introduced the bill to which I refer and which I shall now ask the clerk to read.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2711) to amend the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935

Be it enacted, etc., That the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section to read as follows:

"Sec. 17. No person, firm, or corporation entering into any contract with the United States or any department or agency thereof, or performing any work or services for the United States or any department or agency thereof, or furnishing any material, supplies, or equipment to the United States or any department or agency thereof, or selling any land or building to the United States or any department or agency thereof, if payment for the performance of such contract or payment for such work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or building is to be made in whole or in part from funds appropriated by this act, shall, during the period of negotiation for, or performance or furnishing of, such contract, work, services, material, supplies, equipment, land, or buildings, directly or indirectly, make any contribution of money or any other thing of value, or promise expressly or impliedly to make any such contribution, to any political party, committee, or candidate for public office or to any person for any political purpose or use; nor shall any person knowingly solicit any such contribution from any such person, firm, or corporation for any such purpose during any such period. Any person who violates the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I call attention to this bill now because it was introduced in the last session and because so far no action has been had on it. I believe the time is opportune for the committee having consideration of this bill to report it to the Senate and for it to be passed. Surely no person can object to the passage of a measure designed to aid and assist the officials administering the emergency-relief fund without prostituting it.

It may be said the general laws are sufficient and there is no necessity for this legislation. Before the bill was introduced, I made some investigation of that question. It is doubtful whether the general laws are sufficient. They may be. Nevertheless, it seemed to me that it would be well to attach this positive declaration as an amendment to the relief act itself, as a declaration and as a warning to all who might be concerned. I believe its effect would be good even at this day. I strenuously urge its earnest consideration and now ask that the committee report the bill and that it be passed by the Congress.

The other matter to which I referred in the beginning is a resolution which I recently introduced. It deals with the relief program and seeks an investigation. But it is an investigation of a different kind and nature than has been proposed on the floor of the Senate by other measures and resolutions which have been introduced. By this I do not mean that there should not be any investigation of corruption and wrongdoing, if such there be. Congress is charged with the duty of safeguarding its measures, and I say nothing against those who seek to go into the question of how public-works funds have been expended. That, however, is a different matter. My thought is along a different line and for a different purpose. Whether the relief funds have been expended wisely or not would not change my plan or purpose except insofar as the expenditure of those funds may furnish light as to the proper method and course to pursue in the future.

In his recent remarks the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] said:

The question of unemployment and relief is a most perplexing one.

Statesmen, writers, economists, and thinkers generally agree that the problem of unemployment is most serious. It has even been said that our form of government may hang in the balance. In an able editorial appearing in the Washington Star a few days ago it was said:

Every other problem facing the country today sinks into insignificance compared with this problem of public relief.

Organized labor and industry alike agree the problem is of most serious import. Many plans have been suggested and some have been submitted to the Congress. All over the country earnest men and women are mightily concerned with this subject. The different departments of government have made their investigations and assembled much data. Other organizations throughout the country have given much time, thought, and study to how the problem can best be met. There are those who propose a continuation of the public-works program. Others insist that it should be discontinued. Direct charity or dole is urged by many as the only solution, and others as vigorously oppose that plan. There are those who claim that private industry can absorb the unemployment and that further expenditure of public funds is but waste and extravagance which will result only in national bankruptcy and ruin. Many other thoughts and theories are constantly being urged.

During the emergency period the administration has met the issue as fairly and squarely as it was possible to meet it. It carried on an emergency program of far-reaching effect and out of which much good has come and much good has been accomplished. Permanent wealth and value have been added to the resources of the Nation. Men have been employed. Many outstanding benefits have accrued and great good has been accomplished. Yet, notwithstanding these efforts, we still have with us the problem of unemployment.

Not as a solution of the problem, but because I believe Congress should not rely on other agencies, that it should not rely on departments of the Government, nor even should it rely on the Executive for its program, I have introduced the resolution referred to, the first paragraph of which is as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to study, survey, and investigate the unemployment and relief situation, obtaining all facts possible in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Senate in enacting remedial legislation. The committee shall report to the Senate, with recommendations for legislation.

By this resolution it is sought to have a committee from the Senate enter upon its own investigation of all the facts involved in this stupendous question, hoping that remedial legislation may result. I insist—to me it seems clear—that Congress is charged with the responsibility of formulating its own plans, of sponsoring its own legislation—in short, of meeting the problem fairly and squarely in an honest endeavor and attempt to find such solutions as may exist. I insist that Congress should not rely upon others, but it should perform its own duty and its own work.

Of course, we know unemployment exists, and we know somewhat of the number of unemployed. We know of efforts which have been made to relieve the situation; but there is much information which can be assembled and made available by such a committee. Surely those who have been charged with the administration of the relief funds can give us much light and much information. When it is realized that the proposed committee seeks only to assemble facts and learn the truth, I know it can and will receive cooperation from many sources.

Labor will gladly lend its support, aid, and assistance; industry will present its case, its theory, and its plans; all people concerned with the problem will be glad to work in a constructive manner, seeking to find some permanent plan which may be put into effect by Congress.

The work of the committee will not be spectacular. There will be no headlines. It will be a laborer's task. Long hours and diligent study will be involved. The best qualified men in the Senate should be assigned to the task. They should be willing to give of their time—and I hope they would be so interested that they would be willing to lay aside their other duties and devote the principal part of their time—to such a study and such an investigation. There are many Senators able to undertake the work. I have in mind one in particular whom I should like to see designated as chairman of such a committee. I shall be bold enough to suggest his name if the resolution is adopted. Needless to say, I am not thinking of myself.

I am very much in earnest when I say I hope the Senate will undertake this work, authorize a committee, and provide it with sufficient funds. There is reason to believe that something good may result from it.

I know there are those who think such studies have been made in the past and perhaps nothing new can be developed. That may be true. However, we have learned much since 1929, and there is much information now which has not been available in the past. Especially the type of the committee I have in mind will not be concerned with approaching the matter from any partisan standpoint, nor in any spirit of controversy. There will be no measure to be advocated and none to be opposed. A calm, dispassionate study by men qualified and able is what is desired by the resolution. Is it too much to ask that the Senate undertake such a study? Is it too much to ask that, after assembling all the information possible and going into the question from every possible angle, the Congress should initiate its own plan and suggest its own program?

Perhaps the thought has no merit. Perhaps such a study is unimportant. Perhaps the Senate has many things of more importance. I say to you, however, it is my thought that the question of unemployment and relief is the most important question before the country. I lay it down as a hard-and-fast proposition that this problem must be met. It must be met intelligently. It must be met wisely. It must be dealt with honestly. To my mind, Mr. President, it is not too early for the Congress to begin its own investigation and its own study.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS AND EMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have had some correspondence recently with the War Department for the purpose of obtaining information that might be useful in a study of the subject of awarding Government contracts for supplies to the lowest bidders. I inquired to what extent this provision of the general law resulted in giving contracts to firms that have maintained low standards of wages and long hours of employment.

I have an illuminating reply from the War Department. Accompanying the letter were two charts. One chart contains an analysis of a representative number of contracts showing certain factors for the period from the date of the Supreme Court decision on the N. R. A. until June 1935. The two factors discussed are the percentage of hours worked per week and the percentage of wages paid.

These charts show that between the date of the Supreme Court decision on the N. R. A. and July 1, 1935, a total of 168 contracts were made by the War Department. There was no change in the hours worked under the N. R. A. in 70 percent of the contracts, and no change in wages in 73 percent of the contracts. There was an increase in hours worked in 26 percent of the contracts, and there was a reduction in wages in 17 percent of the concerns granted contracts. As to 10 percent of the contracts, no information was available as to wage reductions. The wage reduction after the N. R. A. decision was 25 percent in woolen-garment contracts, 25 percent in work garments, but only 30 percent showed no reduction, while no report was had on 45 percent of these contracts. The wage reduction was 30 percent in cotton garments, and 14 percent of the concerns made no report. It is to be noted that these products are among those where it is alleged "sweat shops" prevail. In the woolen textiles, the cotton textiles, and knitted garments there was no change in hours of employment or wages. After July there was very slight increase in hours worked.

To the credit of the War Department it must be stated that every means possible has been used by it to make awards of contracts for supplies to the Army to producers who maintain high ethical standards as to labor and wages. The War Department states, however, that under the present law—namely, that requiring the awarding of supply contracts to the lowest bidders—it is not possible to avoid contracts going to concerns that maintain low standards.

From time to time the War Department has requested from the Judge Advocate General his opinion in reference to certain clauses that the Department desired to have inserted in its contracts that would require a reasonably high standard of working hours and of wages. Recently, in order to keep the hours of work under the Department's contracts within a reasonable limit, the quartermaster general requested authority to incorporate in his contracts the following:

In future invitation for bids for the purchase of supplies to be manufactured, where Government inspectors are to be present at the contractor's factory during the process of manufacture * * * and that inspectors would be assigned to the contractor's factory only during the regular 8-hour workday schedule or shift generally recognized by the trade.

It is to be noted that, while this proviso in the Government contracts was to limit the hours of inspection, it was really designed to regulate hours of labor in Government supply contracts. The Judge Advocate General of the Army, in reply to the request, called attention to an opinion of the Attorney General, dated September 28, 1935, wherein he ruled that a department of the Government would have no legal authority to add a provision regarding the rates of wages and hours of labor in the absence of congressional authority, because of section 3709—

Requiring contracts for supplies or services on behalf of the Government, except for personal services, to be made with the lowest responsible bidder, after due advertisement.

In another effort to maintain certain standards the Secretary of the Treasury requested a ruling from the Attorney General on the propriety of including in Government contracts a provision excluding aliens from employment thereon. The Judge Advocate General ruled, among other things, that the clear purpose of section 3709 is to—Secure full and free competition in supplying the needs of the United States, and the benefit to the Treasury of required acceptance of the low responsible bidder.

He further ruled that:

It removes from competitive bidding on the project an important element of cost and tends to defeat the purpose of the statute.

It was further ruled that:

In my judgment it cannot be said as a matter of law that the insertion in Government contracts of a provision limiting the contractor's field of selection of employees to American citizens would not result in increased cost to the Government. * * * Therefore, I find myself unable to recommend the insertion.

The conclusion reached from the informative letter from the Judge Advocate General is that in the absence of legislation there is no way in which Government departments, in asking for bids and making contracts for Government supplies, can distinguish between bids of producers, some of whom are paying lower rates of wages and operating longer hours than is usually recognized by the trade producing the supplies which the Government desires to purchase.

Mr. President, I ask that the letter of the Secretary of War be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, which committee has legislation pending before it dealing with this subject and which seeks to prevent Government contracts being denied those who are not the lowest bidders merely because they do not maintain sweatshop conditions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Does this investigation show that in addition to the increase of hours there have been instances of reduction in pay?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have the Senator give us that information.

Mr. WALSH. I will repeat it to the Senator:

The number of contracts was 168; and, mind you, these contracts were made between May 27 and July 1. In 70 percent of the 168 contracts there was no change. But in 26 percent of the cases in that period of 5 weeks there was an increase in the amount of time the employees had to work, and there was a decrease of 23 percent in the wages. In that short period of 5 weeks the decreases were most noticeable in what I choose to call the industries which embraced those that are known as sweatshops.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as I understand it, then, this study shows that following the N. R. A. decision by the Supreme Court there resulted longer hours and less pay for labor.

Mr. WALSH. Immediately and instantly in some industries. The study I have mentioned was made by a department of Government to which great credit is due for scrupulously trying to insist on incorporating in its contracts provisions for higher standards of wages and hours and better working conditions.

Mr. NORRIS. But the figures the Senator gives do not purport to cover the entire field; they are just an illustration?

Mr. WALSH. I am glad the Senator made that inquiry, because I expect to get similar information from all departments of the Government. I will also say to the Senator that an extensive study has been made by special agencies of the Government, the results of which I hope later to have available for the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the Senator's committee contemplating making a study also of what happened in private industry?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. Already much information in that regard is available, and I expect that more will be obtained later.

Mr. NORRIS. Does it point in the same direction?

Mr. WALSH. Absolutely, and I hope to present the results of that investigation to the Senate in due time.

Mr. NORRIS. So the result is, speaking purely in a financial way, that the N. R. A. decision has resulted in lower wages and longer hours?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; to a noticeable degree. I will say to the Senator, for his information, that in one case called to my attention, namely, in the case of a contract for Government overalls, the concern which got the contract obliged its employees to turn back all the extra money they had been paid under the N. R. A. However, it is only fair to say that many industries have not changed and still maintain standards set up under N. R. A.

Mr. President, I ask that the letter to which I have alluded be incorporated in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 5, 1936.

HON. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: Further reference is made to your letter of February 8, 1936, in which you requested information that might be useful in your study of the subject of awards of contracts to low bidders resulting in business going to firms that have not maintained high standards of wages.

There are enclosed charts giving an analysis of a number of contracts from the period of the Supreme Court decision on N. R. A. to June 1935, and from July 1935 to date. These charts will give you a picture of the condition as it exists at the present time in connection with this subject.

The War Department is using every means possible within the law to make awards of our contracts to legitimate firms who maintain high ethical standards in carrying on their activities. As the laws at present exist, it is not always possible to accomplish the result at which we aim. A recent suggestion to so word our invitations for bids for shoes was made to The Assistant Secretary of War, and by him referred to the Judge Advocate General, for an opinion as to its legality. There is enclosed for your information a copy of the memorandum from the Judge Advocate General on this subject, which may be of interest to you in your study of the general subject.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN,
Secretary of War.

Contracts and reservations, JAG 163

FEBRUARY 10, 1936.

Memorandum for The Assistant Secretary of War.

Subject: Desire of the Quartermaster General to insert in invitations for bids for the purchase of articles to be manufactured a provision for an 8-hour workday schedule.

1. By reference slip dated January 18, 1936, Office of The Assistant Secretary of War, there was referred to this office for remark and recommendation a recommendation from the Quartermaster General that there be incorporated "in future invitations for bids for the purchase of supplies to be manufactured, where Government inspectors are to be present at the contractor's factory during the process of manufacture", the following provision:

"Inspection: No work during the process of manufacture of the articles called for herein will be done except when Government inspectors are present in the factory where the article is to be manufactured. Except during a national emergency, inspectors will be assigned to the contractor's factory only during the regular 8-hour workday schedule or shift generally recognized by the trade, and with only 4 hours on Saturday. In stating time of deliveries, the bidder must not offer to deliver quantities in excess of the amount that can be manufactured during such a period. The bidder must also make due allowance for probable difficulties which may be encountered, including deliveries running concurrently on any other contract with the Government."

The Quartermaster General gave the following reason for his recommendation:

"1. It is the understanding of this office that as a result of the recent invitation for bids calling for 500,000 pairs of shoes that one bidder obtained the contract for the entire quantity and that his promised deliveries made it necessary for him to operate his plant 24 hours a day. In addition, the price bid was so low as to result in his finding it necessary to reduce the pay of his employees working on this contract. Such a condition would appear to be undesirable and might well result in other bidders becoming disgusted with their attempts to obtain Army business to the extent that they will cease to submit bids on our requirements. This would leave our sources of supply limited and in case of a national emergency we would not have a field sufficiently familiar with the making of Army shoes to meet our requirements."

2. While the proposed provision is labeled "Inspection", it is obvious from its context and from the statement of the Quartermaster General that it was designed to regulate hours of labor on Government supply contracts.

3. On a recent reference to this office a somewhat similar question was considered (JAG 163, Sept. 28, 1935). There the opinion was expressed that in addition to the limitation upon the War Department in the matter of modifying standard Government forms of contracts, it would have no legal authority to add a provision regarding the rates of wages and hours of labor in the absence of congressional authority therefor, adding:

"In an opinion of the Attorney General (19 Ops. Atty. Gen. 685) relative to the authority for prescribing hours of labor for the employees of Government contractors, the view was expressed:

"* * * section 3709, etc., require contracts for supplies or services on behalf of the Government, except for prisoners' services, to be made with the lowest responsible bidder, after due advertisement. These statutes make no provision for the length of the day's work by the employees of such contractors, and a public officer who should let a contract for a larger sum than would be otherwise necessary by reason of a condition that a contractor's employees should only work 8 hours a day would directly violate the law."

"This opinion was rendered on November 12, 1890, prior to the passage of the 8-hour law cited above. The principle still applies to all cases where no express exception has been made by later legislation."

The "8-hour law" (27 Stat. 340, as amended; U. S. C., 40:321, 322) referred to in the opinion above quoted restricts the service or employment of all laborers and mechanics upon a public work of the United States to 8 hours in 1 calendar day and provides a penalty for officers of the Government and contractors who intentionally violate the act.

The Comptroller General, upon considering, at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, the propriety of including in Government construction contracts a provision excluding aliens from employment thereon stated, among other things:

"From what has been pointed out, it necessarily follows that only in a clear case of necessity in the public interest could the accounting officers properly withhold objection to the uses of public moneys that would be involved by a contractual requirement for employment by contractor on the public work involved, American citizens and aliens who have obtained first papers of citizenship over other aliens lawfully here, without legislative authority therefor.

"* * * In so contracting the basic statute to be observed in section 3709, Revised Statutes. The clear purpose of this statute is to secure full and free competition in supplying the needs of the United States (which needs are required to be clearly stated in the request for bids), and the benefit to the Treasury of required acceptance of the low responsible bidder.

"However desirable the contrary may be, it seems clear that in the present state of law the proposal to fix by contract the minimum rate of wages the contractor must pay his employees in the doing of the contract work, assuming a contract otherwise valid and enforceable could be drawn, clashes with the long-recognized intent and purpose of section 3709, Revised Statutes, in that it removes from competitive bidding on the project an important element of cost and tends to defeat the purpose of the statute; that is, to obtain a need of the United States, authorized by law to be acquired, at a cost no greater than the amount of the bid of the low responsible bidder, after full and free competitive bidding.

"What is here involved appears a matter which, in the present state of the law, is not for adjustment through administrative action in contracting, and uses of appropriated moneys in such connection without further expression and authority thereon from the Congress may not properly be approved by the accounting officers.

"* * * Only in such rare case, if one there might be under existing conditions, where the need for such stipulation could on the facts be held as required to accomplish the thing authorized by the appropriation to be done, could objection be properly withheld" (10 Comp. Gen. 294).

In addition to Revised Statutes 3709, referred to in the opinions of the Attorney General and the Comptroller General above quoted, there is also for consideration the act of March 2, 1901 (31 Stat. 905, U. S. C. 10, 1201), which requires, except in cases of emergency, that the purchase of all supplies for the Army be made after due advertisement "where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation and the interests of the Government considered."

Considering the limitations imposed by such statutes upon the inclusions in invitations of provisions tending to limit awards thereon to other than the lowest responsible bidder, the Judge Advocate General says:

"4. Though I am not in accord with the theory, which seems to have been accepted in the earlier opinions of this office, that a contractual restriction like the one here under consideration would be unlawful merely because no statute authorizes it, neither am I in entire accord with the theory that such a provision would be legal solely because there is no statute prohibiting it. Neither the President nor the Secretary of War is limited in the exercise of Executive functions to those acts for which specific authorization may be found in statutes. The President may cause to be embodied in War Department contracts any provisions advantageous to the United States in its contractual capacity which are not in conflict with expressed or implied constitutional, statutory, or treaty provisions.

"5. Congress has seen fit to require that public works, under the direction of the War Department, be constructed and War Department supplies purchased, with certain exceptions, under contracts entered into after advertisement for competitive bids. These statutes indicate a congressional purpose that, except as otherwise directed, such works shall be constructed and such supplies purchased at a minimum cost to the Government. In my judgment, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the insertion in Government contracts of a provision limiting the contractor's field of selection of employees to American citizens would not result in increased cost to the Government. As a matter of fact, information before this office indicates that in certain cases such a provision would result in increased cost. Therefore, I find myself unable to recommend the insertion" (J. A. G. 160, Misc., Aug. 14, 1930).

In addition to the foregoing considerations of the impropriety of including such a provision as that here projected in invitations for bids and contracts awarded thereon is the further circumstance that contracts for "the purchase of supplies by the Government, whether manufactured to conform to particular specifications or not, or for such materials or articles as may usually be bought in open market" are excepted by the act of June 19, 1912 (37 Stat. 138; U. S. C. 40, 325), from the requirements thereof that every contract made by the United States which may involve the employment of laborers or mechanics shall contain a provision that no laborer or mechanic shall be required to work more than 8 hours in any one calendar day.

4. Therefore, in my opinion, in the absence of authorizing legislation, compliance with such a provision should not be made a basis for contracting by the War Department for any of its supplies, unless, however, it is susceptible of determination and it is in fact so determined by the Secretary of War that the doing thereof would be in the interest of the Government as a contractor and not result in increasing the cost to the Government beyond compensating advantages.

Even were such determination made and use were made of the provision in bids and contracts as proposed, it does not seem necessarily to follow as a matter of course that the objective prompting the suggestion, though ever so desirable, would be accomplished. Furthermore, it would have the effect of preventing a reputable but small manufacturer willing to operate his plant in extra 8-hour shifts from bidding on such a contract.

A. W. BROWN,

Major General, the Judge Advocate General.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2288) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] in the nature of a substitute for the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Coolidge	King	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Copeland	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Couzens	Logan	Robinson
Bachman	Davis	Loneragan	Russell
Bailey	Duffy	Long	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Fletcher	McGill	Sheppard
Bilbo	Frazier	McKellar	Shipstead
Black	George	McNary	Smith
Bone	Gibson	Maloney	Stelwer
Borah	Glass	Minton	Townsend
Bulkeley	Gore	Moore	Vandenberg
Bulow	Guffey	Murray	Wagner
Burke	Hale	Neely	Walsh
Byrnes	Harrison	Norbeck	Wheeler
Capper	Hatch	Norris	White
Caraway	Hayden	O'Mahoney
Clark	Johnson	Overton
Connally	Keyes	Pope

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to say for the benefit of Senators who have just entered the Chamber that the question now recurs on the substitute offered by the Senator from North Carolina. I hope the Senate will vote down the substitute, in which event I will offer the substitute as an amendment to the pending bill. Then those who desire that there shall be an investigation will have their wishes complied with, those who desire permanent, substantive legislation will have their wishes gratified, and we will be troubled no more with this vexatious subject. On this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], who is unavoidably absent. Therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BARKLEY. On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is absent. I transfer that pair to my colleague the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHAY], who is unavoidably detained. I do not know how either the senior Senator from Wyoming or my colleague would vote on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. BILBO. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is detained on account of illness; and that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BENSON], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are unavoidably detained.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is detained in an important conference. If present and voting, he would vote "yea."

I also announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS]. If present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea", and the Senator from Indiana would vote "nay."

The Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN]. If present and voting, the Senator from California would vote "yea", and the Senator from Missouri would vote "nay."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR], who has a pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. If present, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea" on this question, and the Senator from Utah would vote "nay."

I also announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], who is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN]. If present, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea" on this question, and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

I further desire to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], whose general pairs have been stated, are necessarily absent. If present, the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea" on this question.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I announce that my colleague [Mr. TYDINGS] has been called to the city of Baltimore. I am informed that he has a pair on this question with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ]. My colleague, if present and voting, would vote "yea" on this question, and the Senator from New Mexico, if present, would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—35

Adams	Davis	Keyes	Reynolds
Ashurst	Frazier	La Follette	Smith
Austin	George	Logan	Stelwer
Bailey	Gibson	Loneragan	Townsend
Borah	Glass	Maloney	Vandenberg

Carey	Holt	Pittman

So Mr. BAILEY's amendment, in the nature of a substitute for the amendment reported by the committee, was agreed to.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, as I stated to the Senate a few days since, my own judgment is that this substitute ought not to pass the Senate. I do not think it solves the problem. In fact, I do not think it discharges the duty of the Senate, as I see it. I think if it goes to the House it will die in the House. I do not believe this legislation will ever be enacted into law; and I may say that since the jurisdiction of the committee of the House has changed from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, I think an open sepulchre is awaiting this legislation when it reaches the House. I am reliably informed that a representative of the shipping concerns said yesterday that if this measure could be defeated at this session, the shipping interests would be stronger at the next session, having reference, as I took it, to the changed jurisdiction in the House of Representatives.

I may say, however, that I have conferred with others who are favorable to this legislation in some form. My associate, who has rendered invaluable service, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. DUFFY], and others think that the substitute—even the substitute—should pass. I do not think so, but I shall interpose no further objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards' Act, 1921, being Calendar No. 1453.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is the motion to take up the bill debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has been very fair. He has given notice of his intention to have this bill brought forward, and for the fairness of his procedure I thank him; but I am much opposed to the bill. I wish to be recorded as voting "no" on the motion to take up the bill.

We all say, quite naturally, "Let us take up the measure and find out about it." We are supposed to know something about the measure before we take it up. I desire to be recorded as voting against taking up the bill, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to consider it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arizona for the purpose of asking for the yeas and nays on this motion?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas does not yield at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, my understanding is that there will be a prolonged debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think I can answer that suggestion. After conference with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], I learn that he is willing that the motion remain in its present status if the Senate may take a recess until Monday.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was about to make that statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I yield for a motion to take a recess until Monday, will the Senator from Texas have the floor when the Senate reconvenes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will try to see the Senator on Monday.

EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONNEL OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] wishes to submit a request for unanimous consent, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield first to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. A short time ago the Senator from South Carolina asked unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 223. I objected then to the consideration of the joint resolution because I had not had an opportunity to examine it. I find that the measure simply means the transfer of the personnel from the old A. A. A. organization to the new organization known as the Soil Conservation Administration, without creating a new personnel. That is my interpretation of the measure. If that be correct, I shall have no objection to consideration of the measure at this time.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, that is correct. Accordingly I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 223.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 223) relating to the employment of the personnel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in carrying out certain governmental activities, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the word "Administration", to insert the words "or so many thereof as may be necessary", so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to employ, in the city of Washington and in the field, the present personnel (including furloughed personnel) of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, or so many thereof as may be necessary, in carrying out the provisions of sections 7 to 14, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, in the work of liquidating the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, and in the administration of the cotton price adjustment program instituted under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, whether or not any of these functions are carried out through the Extension Service, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, or any other agency in the Department of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN JOINT RESOLUTION DURING RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Vice President be authorized, during the recess of the Senate, to sign House Joint Resolution 514.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. It is the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 514) authorizing the completion of certain records and operations resulting from the administration of the Kerr Tobacco Act, the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, and the Potato Act of 1935 (repealed), and making funds available for those and other purposes.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it is the joint resolution to which I called the Senator's attention a while ago.

Mr. McNARY. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of William H. Kelly, of East Orange, N. J., to be collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of New Jersey, to fill an existing vacancy.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy and the Marine Corps.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the following nominations:

Herman G. Baity, of North Carolina, to be director of the Public Works Administration in North Carolina; and Joe B. Mullins, of Tennessee, to be State engineer inspector for the Public Works Administration in Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the calendar. If there are no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE—EDWIN R. HOLMES

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edwin R. Holmes, of Mississippi, to be United States circuit judge, fifth circuit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination?

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I desire to be heard on this nomination, and I should like to have a day set specially for the matter. It will take some time to present my objections. I have been trying to reach an agreement with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to have the 26th day of this month fixed as the date when the nomination will be considered. I have not taken any of the time of the Senate since I have been here, and I am not anxious to break the ice now.

I should prefer a little time for the preparation I desire to make to enable me to present the matter to the Senate for final decision. I was assured by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. ASHURST] that there would be no question about ample time being afforded me to make preparation for the presentation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question of the confirmation is before the Senate at the present time. Does the junior Senator from Mississippi yield to his colleague?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator would agree that the vote upon the nomination might be had definitely at some time next week, I think that would be perfectly agreeable all around. I should dislike very much to have the matter continued indefinitely and in an uncertain manner. The nomination has been pending since the last session of Congress. There have been very long hearings before the committee, and I hope it may be disposed of at a very early date.

If it would meet the convenience and accommodation of my colleague to fix a definite time to vote upon the nomination, so far as I am concerned, I should be very agreeable to such an arrangement.

Mr. BILBO. I had contemplated making a motion, and it may become necessary to make a motion, to recommit the nomination to the committee for further investigation. I do not see why I should agree at this time to have a vote finally on the confirmation.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, of course, such a unanimous-consent agreement would carry with it the understanding that we should vote upon any motion at that time, and if the motion should be defeated, then the vote would come upon the confirmation of the nomination. That would not preclude the Senator from making the motion to refer the nomination back to the committee, but if his motion should be defeated then the vote would come upon confirmation.

Mr. BILBO. I will agree to that. Will the Senator agree to fix the time for the 26th day of this month? That will be 1 week from next Thursday.

Mr. HARRISON. That is 2 weeks from today?

Mr. BILBO. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. That is a long time. Would not the Senator be agreeable to having the vote taken at 5 o'clock next Thursday?

Mr. BILBO. I would suggest that the matter be taken up at 1 o'clock, because I contemplate using possibly 3 or 4 hours of the time of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I myself do not contemplate doing much talking. It would be perfectly agreeable to me, if it meets the approval of the Senate, that the Senate should go into executive session to consider this nomination at 1 o'clock next Thursday, and I suggest that at 5 o'clock a vote be taken. I feel, however, that there ought to be some time left for the members of the committee to say something with reference to the matter.

Mr. BILBO. Will the Senator agree that the discussion shall begin at 1 o'clock next Thursday and a vote be taken at the conclusion of the discussion?

Mr. ROBINSON. On that calendar day?

Mr. BILBO. Yes; at the conclusion of the discussion.

Mr. ROBINSON. That would enable any Senator who desired to speak to have the opportunity to do so.

Mr. HARRISON. That is agreeable to me.

Mr. BILBO. I have no desire to fix an hour for a final vote.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in view of the colloquy that has just occurred, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday at 1 o'clock the Senate shall proceed in executive session to the consideration of the nomination of Edwin R. Holmes; that before the end of that calendar day the Senate shall proceed to vote on all motions that may be pending or that may be offered and on the question of the confirmation unless the nomination shall be recommitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not know why we should waste the hour between 12 o'clock noon and 1 o'clock. I anticipate considerable debate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that is a good suggestion. I will modify my request that when the Senate meets on next Thursday it shall proceed at once to the consideration of the nomination, letting the remainder of my request remain as it was stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the modified request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will state the next nomination on the calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Francis R. Stewart, of New York, to be Secretary in the Diplomatic Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

RECESS TO MONDAY

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 16, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 12 (legislative day of Feb. 24), 1936

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Spera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, grant that by Thy Holy Spirit we may grow into the fullness of that which is highest and best. We pray that we may feel that it is a most helpful service to take reverent thought of Thee, praying that our deliberations may be guided aright. Thou, in whom there is no discord, possess us with humble and contrite hearts. In our deep consciousness keep us mindful of our responsibilities, examples, and influence. Do Thou fittingly equip us to discharge our duties in the exalted relation in which we have been placed. Blessed Lord, enable us always to jealously remember who we are and whom we represent. Bless our brother men and may we lessen their discontent and swell their songs of gladness. Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits; even the God, who is our salvation. In the name of our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10919. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

THE PETTENGILL BILL

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, there was introduced in the Congress during the first part of the Seventy-fourth session a bill known as the Pettengill bill, and this bill will probably be presented before this body at some early date or at such time in the very near future when it shall have received a rule.

The bill in question is receiving considerable attention throughout the country and is being publicized at length by many newspapers of consequence.

This bill deals specifically with the long- and short-haul clause found in the Interstate Act, which regulates railroads, and I am advised that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of this House has unanimously recommended the enactment of the Pettengill bill into law, and that this recommendation from the committee comes after a full and complete hearing by it.

The elimination of the long- and short-haul clause from the Interstate Act, in my judgment, is certainly necessitated by reason of changed conditions in the matter of modern transportation. This long- and short-haul clause was necessary when it was enacted into law back in 1910, because at that particular time the railroads had little or no competition of consequence, but what with the franchises or permits of convenience and necessity granted by most of the States of the Union to bus concerns, who are handling a large percentage of the freight ordinarily handled by railroads and which bus lines, as a general rule, though operating from one State to another, are not compelled to publish tariffs in any form; with water-transportation companies practically subsidized with taxpayers' money paid out of the United States Treasury and operating on a most unfair competitive scale; with aviation transportation growing in leaps and bounds, there is no way in the world to offer encouragement or future hope to the railroads of this Nation except through the elimination of the long- and short-haul clause of the Interstate Act.

No one doubts that the railroads are now highly discriminated against and that their path has not been an easy one during the past 6 years, and unless we meet modern and changed conditions with modern and changed legislation we are striking at a very vital and potential part of our commercial life.

The Pettengill bill will in no particular change any of the requirements of the Interstate Commerce Act, and the Interstate Commerce Commission will continue to hold the balance of power in the matter of discriminatory rates, and the Commission will continue also to prescribe maximum and minimum rates. Therefore, there is no reason to assume under any circumstances that harm would come to the American public in the passage of this bill.

The truth of the business is that if this clause is eliminated from the act, thousands of railroad men long since off the pay roll will be placed back to work, because the railroads will then be in a position to operate almost twice as many trains as they are operating now. This, of course, increases pay rolls, and, in turn, aids each and every little precinct and hamlet of the Nation in the matter of getting back taxes from the railroads which they have been missing to a great extent during this period of depression and unfair competition among the transportation agencies of this new era.

PITHY POINTS FROM PERSHING

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief letter from General Pershing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, on January 28 I sent out to all the retired general officers of the Army, about 285 in number, a letter inviting them to express their opinions concerning many matters relating to national defense and promoting the welfare of the Army. For the information of the House I quote that letter.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
Washington, D. C., January 28, 1936.

MY DEAR GENERAL: About 4 years ago I addressed a letter to all general officers then on the retired list, asking that they give the Committee on Military Affairs, through me, the benefit of their experience and reflections, looking back upon a lifetime of service in the cause of national defense. I am now sending out a similar letter to all the general officers on the retired list and make the same appeal to them, in hope that out of their experience and studies we may obtain useful suggestions.

I am appealing to the retired general officers because they have received the honors of the country as a reward for their abilities and faithful services and are now receiving sufficient financial support from the Government to enable them to be relatively independent. They are, therefore, without any special obligations to any person or group and can speak with complete frankness and candor upon any matter about which they may have conscientious convictions.

I can assure all recipients of this letter that their communications will be received in complete confidence, if they so indicate, as has been the case in those who answered the communications 4 years ago.

Trusting that it may suit the convenience of many of the retired officers to give this request most earnest consideration and as early reply as possible, I remain,

Yours truly,

J. J. McSWAIN.

I have received replies from considerably more than 100 of the retired officers, and many of them have contained exceedingly valuable suggestions. A few of those officers have indicated their permission for me to make their letters public, and at the proper time I will do so. This morning I received a letter from Gen. John J. Pershing, a name known throughout the world, and I immediately wired asking for permission to publish his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have just received a telegram from him granting his permission, and accordingly I am offering his letter for printing.

I want to call especial attention to the fact that General Pershing volunteers his approval and endorsement of the Thomason Act and urges appropriation of funds necessary to make that act effective. This is very strong indeed. I also call attention to the fact that General Pershing recognizes the very supreme importance of R. O. T. C. in preparing Reserve officers for use of the country in the event of mobilization for defense. In his final report as Chief of Staff, dated September 12, 1924, General Pershing, in referring to Organized Reserves, used the following language:

3. Organized Reserves: The successful preparation for defense as contemplated in the act of 1920 for the most part depends upon the Reserve officer. Without adequate numbers, efficiently trained, and equitably allotted to the various units of staff and line, we should, in a great emergency, find ourselves exactly where we were in 1917. It should be remembered that we must turn to the Reserves for all extra officers needed, and that many would be required to fill the quotas of the Regular Army and the National Guard to start with. The efficiency of these officers is the variable in the equation, and the more nearly we are able to approximate to its maximum value the more confidently may we consider ourselves as approaching a condition of readiness.

During the World War the citizen officers constituted 95 percent of the officer strength of our forces. Two-thirds of the Reserve officers today are men who saw service in the war and who have joined up because they realize the significance of preliminary training during peacetime. There is a splendid spirit among the 80,000 or more carried on our rolls, and all they ask is opportunity to learn. Here arises one of the most difficult questions in our efforts to build up a competent Reserve force. Until very recently it has been the rule to encourage all those with war experience to enroll, and practically all applicants have been accepted. In principle it would be advantageous to have all of them who are interested and who are not beyond a certain age. But, without counting those whose civil professions would make little military training necessary, it is probable that the list of those subject to a period of training every third year would severely tax our present facilities, to say nothing of the economical side of the question.

This statement is pregnant with significance for the cause of national defense. It is the very strongest statement of the supreme importance of the Organized Reserves in our defense system.

While General Pershing's letter is dated February 29, it was received by me only today, and I have received the following telegram consenting that the same may be used as I may wish. I wish it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as evidence to all that General Pershing is still in close touch with affairs relating to the Army, and has the constructive statesmanship to see the possibilities of the Thomason Act and the importance of the R. O. T. C. Here is the telegram:

TUCSON, ARIZ., March 11, 1936.

Congressman J. J. McSWAIN,

Chairman of Military Affairs Committee:

Reference your telegram, you are at liberty to use my letter of February 29 in any way you wish.

JOHN J. PERSHING.

The following is the letter dated February 29, but received this March 11:

TUCSON, ARIZ., February 29, 1936.

HON. JOHN J. McSWAIN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. McSWAIN: With reference to your letter of January 28, I have been following with keen interest the press reports of your activities in behalf of national defense, and regard it as very essential that your efforts meet with success. There is very little of any great importance that I could suggest along the lines of improvement in the Army that has not been or is not being considered by the active General Staff and others. I can only point out that my ideas, in general, of the organization of the Army for peacetime service and as a basis of expansion for war were embodied in the National Defense Act of 1920, the attainment and perfection of which seem to be the goal toward which you are working.

At the termination of my tour of service as Chief of Staff I made an exhaustive report, copy enclosed, including recommendations based upon my experience in the World War and later. That report expresses, in general, my views at the present time.

With reference to Army personnel, the so-called Thomason Act, which has my hearty endorsement, will provide splendid officer material, and no doubt will do much to increase enthusiasm for military training in the R. O. T. C. It is highly desirable that this act be made effective by the appropriation of the necessary funds. The R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C. are turning out annually young men who have shown their aptitude for military training, many of whom have demonstrated initiative and leadership of a high order. These are exactly the qualities that we should look for in the selection of young men for appointment to West Point. Perhaps some modification of the present method of choosing appointees to the Military Academy might well be considered with a view of making the most promising of these young men available for selection.

As to enlisted personnel, the higher the class of men drawn into the Army the more efficient will be our armed forces. To secure the type of men desired the service must be made more attractive, and it seems to me that this can only be done by offering additional inducements. Of course, increases in grades and ratings should be provided to meet increases in the strength of the Army, but in any reconsideration of the system study should be given to methods for liberalizing the opportunities for advancement. Certainly, to my mind, the Army should not be at a disadvantage in this regard with other branches of the service.

Yours very sincerely,

JOHN J. PERSHING.

Mr. Speaker, I think most disinterested and impartial thinkers will agree with General Pershing that perhaps some modification of the present method of appointing cadets to the Military Academy should be had so that the most promising young men should be available for that training. I have always refused to appoint any young man to either the Military Academy or the Naval Academy from mere political considerations. In order to free myself from any such temptation, I have made all appointments as the result of competitive examinations conducted by the United States Civil Service Commission to which every young man in the district who applied was admitted. However, on two occasions when there was not time to conduct a competitive examination, I requested the academic authorities and the military instructors of the two colleges in the district represented by me where there are R. O. T. C. units to make the recommendations and I followed their recommendations unquestionably. I have felt for sometime, and this has been based upon much observation and reflection, that we have not been getting the very best material available for our cadets at the Military Academy. Of course, many of the cadets are of a very high order; but I believe the average could be raised by a change in the method of selecting the cadets. I believe that impartial observers will agree with General Pershing and with many others in that conclusion.

Mr. Speaker, in the effort to find the best method possible of selecting the very best young men available to become Army officers and to take appointments to the Military Academy entirely and completely off the political auction block, I have introduced H. R. 10389, on which there will be a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs on next Wednesday, March 18, beginning at 10:30 a. m., and I respectfully invite any Member of Congress and any citizen of the United States that may be interested in this problem to appear and offer any constructive suggestions. Surely no man can contend that the present system is perfect and incapable of improvement. I believe it is far from perfect, and that we have other thinkable ways of selecting such cadets which would be a decided improvement. About this matter there may be honest differences of opinion, but I am inviting all to present their honest opinions before the committee on next Wednesday.

Mr. Speaker, for the information of those concerned, I am printing herewith a copy of H. R. 10389:

A bill relating to the appointment of cadets to the United States Military Academy

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of July 9, 1918 (40 Stat. 894; U. S. C., title 10, sec. 1091), as amended, be, and is hereby, further amended by adding at the end thereof the following language:

"The President shall make said appointments of cadets to the United States Military Academy as a result of competitive examinations which he shall direct to be conducted under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him. All applications for examination by those seeking such appointments shall be filed with the Secretary of War before January 1 of any year during which admission is to be sought to said United States Military Academy. All such applications, to which a recent photograph of the applicant shall be attached, shall be upon forms to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, which shall be uniform in all cases for any one year and shall elicit full information concerning the applicant, his education, and other pertinent facts material to his prospective career as an officer in the United States Army, including any military training he may have received. Said examination shall be conducted prior to March 1 of each year and the results thereof announced as soon thereafter as practicable, and in sufficient time to enable all winners to prepare to enter said Academy on July 1 of such year and in no event later than May 1 of each year. Such examination shall test as near as may be practicable the general fitness of the applicants to become officers in the United States Army. In the rating of said examination the mental qualifications shall rate 75 percent of a total 100 percent, and the temperamental qualifications involving character, leadership, personality, and temperamental fitness, to become officers shall rate 25 percent. Qualifications other than mental shall be ascertained in such practical way as the regulations of the Secretary of War may prescribe by tabulating the answers to questionnaires submitted to former teachers and responsible acquaintances and by examinations of the records or certified copies thereof of the activities of each applicant in athletics, in student welfare work, and in connection with student and community life generally. In all cases there shall be submitted duly certified copies of all school records affecting each such applicant, beginning with the first year of high-school work or the equivalent thereof and continuing with any school, college, or university in which such applicant may have been a student up to the time of such application. The President may direct that the mental examinations herein required shall be conducted by the United States Civil Service Commission. All mental examinations shall be at such times and places as the President deems most convenient for the applicants, and mental examinations shall be held in at least one place in each State and congressional district for applicants seeking appointment from the several States and congressional districts. All examination papers, questionnaires, rating sheets, and other data shall be kept on file in the War Department for 5 years after each such examination. If the applicant appointed by reason of making the highest rating fails for any reason to enter said United States Military Academy on July 1 of any year as intended, the President shall appoint the applicant making the next highest rating, and so on down the list in the order of their rating, but no applicant shall be admitted as a cadet in said United States Military Academy after July 10 of any year. But each vacancy for any State or congressional district shall be filled by a new examination to permit all persons qualified since the prior examination to apply. All persons so appointed shall be bona fide residents of and actually domiciled in the State or congressional district for which appointed."

IRRIGATION PROJECTS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to call the attention of the House to a table I put into the RECORD last night, showing the total cost of the irrigation projects that are in the Interior Department appropriation bill, which were not in the bill when the bill left the House. That table appears on page 3586 of the RECORD. The total cost would amount to $773,000,000, and the appropriations for these particular projects amount to $54,110,000, while the future cost would amount to $574,818,000. I request the membership of the House to earnestly support the House's position in trying to keep out this terrific item of expense, which will fall on the Government and prevent us from keeping taxes down in any shape at all in the years to come.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I looked over this list, as originally printed, I noticed that the projects were very carefully selected from different States, so that enough States would be represented in the omnibus bill or in the pork-barrel bill to insure putting it through another body. Did the gentleman find that to be true?

Mr. TABER. That is the situation.

Mr. SNELL. I think there are seven or eight different States where these amounts are distributed.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. STUBBS. Is the gentleman willing to go on record as trying to strangle out of existence the lives of some twelve to fifteen million people out in these reclamation States?

Mr. TABER. We do not strangle out of existence those people who are there, but simply prevent the opening up of land that is not now under cultivation to be placed in competition with land on which people are paying taxes throughout the rest of the country.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman in his denunciation surely does not include the Central Valley water project of California, which is for the purpose of preserving and not opening up new areas.

Mr. TABER. It is quite an expensive proposition. According to the estimates of the Reclamation Bureau, the total cost of that project will be $170,000,000.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman is aware that project had extensive hearings before the Flood Control Committee of this House and was included in the bill which has been reported favorably from that committee.

Mr. TABER. Oh, yes; but the bill has not been passed by the House.

Mr. RICH. The Flood Control Committee adopted every project that every Member of Congress presented, whether it had any merit or not. It was the biggest pork-barrel bill that has been reported out of a committee since I have been a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, with Mr. Buck in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RAMSAY].

OUR NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. RAMSAY. Mr. Chairman, I desire for a few minutes to discuss our national debt.

Mr. Hoover, in his Lincoln Day speech, quoted Mr. Lincoln's famous statement that "The Lord must have loved the poor people because he had made so many of them."

If this is the true measure of love, Mr. Hoover can truthfully exclaim "Greater love hath no man than this", because I created more poor people in the United States in 3 years than the Lord did in 7,500 years. [Applause.]

Again Candidate Hoover, in one of his most recent attacks upon the New Deal, seemed to express the opinion of the present opposition leadership when he said:

There was no failure, during his administration, to provide for those in real need.

I cannot believe that human memory is so short that it has forgotten the sickening scenes enacted in America before the present administration established relief on a national scale.

Mr. Hoover and his leaders claimed then—as he and they claim now—that the Red Cross and private charity could take care of relief.

During the winter of 1931 and 1932 the situation had become so bad that the mayors of 215 cities sent word to Washington that private charity could no longer be depended upon; Governors appealed; Senators LA FOLLETTE and COSTIGAN demanded Federal action and amassed a staggering array of evidence from more than 800 municipalities showing widespread want, hunger, and unrest. More than 300,000 young men were tramping the streets and fast developing into hoboes; 15,000,000 men were totally unemployed and 30,000,000 were only working part time. The total amount raised by the community chest councils for the year 1932 was only $101,181,949—not sufficient to take care of the unemployed in New York City, so in New York families were existing on $2.39 per week. In Pennsylvania and West Virginia coal fields whole families were existing on an average of $4 per month. During all this time President Hoover was silent and his leaders in Congress were opposing the Costigan bill for relief.

Finally pressure of public opinion became so great that President Hoover and his administration agreed to a compromise offered by Speaker Garner and Senator ROBINSON, leader of the Democrats in the Senate, upon a bill carrying $300,000,000 for relief among the States. But the Hoover administration agreed to this bill with their tongues in their cheeks, designating it as "pork."

But remember! Before one penny of this sum was distributed among the States, Mr. Hoover—through his Finance Corporation—had authorized more than $1,000,000,000 in loans to railroads, insurance companies, banks, and other business firms.

The record of the last Republican administration does not warrant the American people listening to these same politicians with patience in their plea for a return to power so these same "gangsters-up" may return to the benevolent care of private charity, the welfare of the 10,000,000 men still unemployed. And this is the only substitute these objectors can offer. Wonderful statesmanship! And they really think they ought to win.

But when these gentlemen cry about deficits that have been caused by the recent administration in its successful effort to relieve unemployment, save business, save the homes and farms of the people, increase wages of labor and the products of the farm, mill, and mine, they should explain why the Hoover administration created a deficit of over $5,000,000,000 in the last 3 years of his administration in his efforts to only meet the ordinary expenses of the Government, forgetting entirely the sufferings of the people in his fright over the breaking up of over 2,000 banks during his administration and the other 8,000 that had drifted on the rocks during the administration of Coolidge and Harding. Let them also explain the European loans that were made during the Harding and Coolidge administration that should have been applied to the reduction of our own national debt instead of being given to foreign peoples and the debts now repudiated and collections denied.

Yes; before we again place these gentlemen in control of our Government let us be assured we want to turn back to these good old days of Mr. Hoover, for that is the kind of policies in which they believe; and, of course, if returned to power they will be consistent and again restore this Government to the special interests and the unemployed to the care of charity.

While discussing the hatred public-works program of the administration with one of the lawyers of big business who, like the reactionary press, rants day and night about this subject; I inquired of him what he would propose to take care of the 10,000,000 men out of employment in this country. His reply was frank and to the point: "Hell! Nothing! We need that many men out of employment in America so that labor can be kept in its place, so employers can hire them at their own terms."

Here is at least one honest objection to the efforts of the administration to give every man a chance to earn a living.

But what about the spending of money by this administration? As I understand it, the present administration will have created a deficit of some eight or ten billion dollars at the end of its present term, January 1, 1937.

During the administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover billions of dollars of American money was loaned to foreign countries upon the condition that the borrowers would spend it in America, compelling them to pay higher prices for such products than they could be purchased in the open market, thereby creating a fictitious prosperity in America. That immediately collapsed when loans were cut off, and, to add insult to injury, practically every one of such loans have been repudiated and the deficit charged to the good old United States Treasury. Yet we never hear anything about this deficit, but, instead, it has the approval and blessing of every mother's son that is now yelling about the administration taking care of our own suffering people. Admit that all of this money has been spent—as it has not, because billions of it has been loaned to home and farm owners, banks, manufacturers, and others and will come back to the Government—but, even if it has been spent and a deficit created, the very fellows who are doing the most yelling have received benefits they never dreamed of; they own most of the stocks and bonds of this country. Such stocks and bonds have advanced in value $35,000,000,000 from their value of March 4, 1933. These owners themselves could pay off all the deficit that has been created by this administration and still be to the good by $25,000,000,000.

I often wonder how they have the nerve. How can any man be so heartless as to desire that 40,000,000 of his own people should suffer for want of the actual necessities of life in order that employers of labor be enabled to employ them at starvation wages.

In addition to the denunciation of the present administration for spending money to feed the unemployed, the opponents of the administration make a great ado about the rise in prices—except prices of all commodities they themselves are interested in, either in manufacturing or selling. I will wager no one can quote any of such critics dissatisfied with the rise of stocks or bonds. Of course not! They own these. But they shout, "Look at the price of pork, beef, and food-stuffs."

Does any sensible or reasonable man believe that conditions could improve and that we could crawl out of the cellar of depression without a rise in prices? Such increases were necessary. It was the first objective of the administration. The President and Congress did everything they could to raise prices, well knowing that to do so would immediately start us on the road to better times and conditions.

Today the prices of meats and foodstuffs are, of course, much higher than the 1932-33 range, but about on a line for the average of 15 years before the Hoover panic.

Take, for instance, pork—the article always cited and mulled about by the critics of the New Deal. In the year of 1920 it sold at wholesale for 39 cents per pound, while today it is selling for 23 cents per pound. Of course, this seems high, when compared with the Hoover panic price of 9 cents per pound. But we must remember that the reason for these low prices in 1933 was because few in America were earning sufficient to purchase the necessities of life, and the loss of trade and sales brought everything in America down to ruinous prices that all but destroyed our country.

Does anyone believe that the farmer could continue to raise pork for the 3 cents per pound he received for his hogs in 1933? This price did not cover the cost of producing the animals, and so it was with everything the farmer raised. Wheat was selling at 30 cents per bushel; his corn was bringing him 20 cents per bushel. Of course, he could not raise either for such prices, so he fed these cereals to his hogs and cattle in order to make his own market for his crops, and because nearly every farmer had the same idea, they all produced an oversupply of both cattle and hogs for a market that had no buyer, caused primarily by unemployment and low wages. Today these products are only bringing an average of 88 percent of the prices for the same articles in the years of 1925-26.

It is true, however, that while meat and food products have reached recovery in prices equal to 88 percent of normal, wages have only reached an average of 78 percent of normal for the same period of time. It has been proven, however, that during the life of the N. R. A. and before its assassination by the court of appeals, the desired increase in the cost of living and wages were advancing exactly parallel.

It is my belief that the desired and proper thing to do is not to injure the farmer and producer by the destruction of his prices, but see to it that the earnings of the wage earner are increased commensurate with the increase of his living and housing, and this can only be brought about by the restoration of work and the chance for every man in this country to earn his living by an honest day's toil. But this can never take place so long as we have millions of unemployed who are willing to work for starvation wages in order to eke out a mere existence.

I have no patience with the theory that this country owes every man a living, but it does owe every man a chance to earn a living; a chance to rear his family in a manner that will make them true, loyal Americans, proud of their country, and enable them to utter the proud boast of their fathers: "To be an American citizen is a greater privilege than to be a king in any other land."

The American people must have been astonished at the monumental gall of certain bankers who recently attended the bankers' convention in New Orleans when they criticized and denounced the New Deal. It certainly took real and actual gall for some of these bankers, who—through their absolute incompetence, negligence, and failure—brought so much grief to the American people during the last 10 years.

From January 1, 1920, to March 3, 1933, 10,000 commercial banks, or 52 percent of the total number, were closed. It was necessary for the Government to advance to these bankers, whose banks had closed, three billions of dollars to save the remainder, 48 percent, from also collapsing.

Through Government aid millions of dollars have been restored to the stockholders and depositors of such banks that would have been permanently lost. In addition to this, the depositors have lost over three billions of dollars through these failures, which is a permanent loss and cannot be made up—even by the aid of the Government. This is one permanent deficit we never hear these bankers mention, and if it were not for the Federal Deposit Insurance Company, which materially stopped the loss of the banks and prevented more of them from collapsing and restored the confidence of the people in the security of their banks, there would not have been 10 of them left to have met and denounce the administration because it was far-sighted enough to save them from utter destruction.

Talk about gall! These fellows must have forgotten very quickly, or they must believe that the American people have forgotten all about the grief they have brought this country. Why can they not go along; make loans and aid their country in a real come-back, and accept wholeheartedly the great improvement in business conditions that has taken place in our country during the past 2 years.

Mr. Chairman, the '36 campaign is fast approaching. What are the issues? The one name, the one word "Roosevelt." Are you for him or against him? That is the issue; none other.

Roosevelt represents those who believe in government of the people and by the people; in equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

The opposition oppose him. Not because he has failed to improve business conditions, not because he has failed to aid business in every way possible, but because he has aided by legislation and by all the powers of government the unemployed, the aged, the poor, and the helpless. This, the old order and some big-business men, the "gangers-up" can never forgive. Therefore the shouting, the tumult, and the noise; the charges, condemnation, and abuse by every special interest, together with their bought-and-paid-for press, who are constantly shouting "Freedom of the press"; "Roosevelt is an anarchist, Socialist, and a dictator. Why, he actually refused to take our dictation and is helping the poor. Down with him! Let's have another Coolidge or Hoover, then our voices will again be heard in Washington; we will then restore the care of the unemployed to private charity; we will transfer the burden of taxation from the broad shoulders of the rich and those who have large incomes and place it on the poor by sales taxes and higher tariffs; we will destroy the old-age pensions and unemployment insurance. In fact, we will go back to the good old days of '32, when 15,000,000 men were out of employment and 30,000,000 more were only working part time; to the time when we could employ men at our own terms and conditions."

These are the issues. Where do you stand? With Roosevelt and the new day, that is seeking better things, or with the old order of charity, unemployment, depression, coercion, low wages, and starvation? Make no mistake. This is the issue. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS].

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, for 5 long years the Frazier-Lemke bill has been before the Congress. These years have meant only 60 months to most of us, but to the farmers of the Nation who are in real distress and who have been looking toward their legislators in Washington to correct the faulty economic situation which has enmeshed them, these 5 years have seemed like 5 decades. Some criticize the farmer for looking to Washington for succor. The fact is that Washington, and almost every candidate for office from a rural district, has encouraged the farmer to look to him and to the Federal Capitol for a solution to the farm problem, and it is up to us to make good on our promises.

I believe that the time has arrived for us to act. Let us not go home again without having given the Frazier-Lemke bill a chance to be heard on the floor of the House and brought to a vote of the Members. We have tried many avenues of approach which appeared to be solutions to the problem. Some have been successful in a measure and others have been tossed out the window as unconstitutional. I commend the Congress for these efforts to alleviate farm distress.

But the farm problem is not solved. We have not exhausted every resource. It is a national headache. While the Farm Credit Administration has been of some assistance to agriculture by extending $2,200,000,000 in financial aid to distressed farmers, we still have approximately $5,800,000,000 in farm mortgages which are in bad shape. We are faced with the task of refinancing the larger part of this $5,800,000,000 in unsatisfied mortgages or suffering the national disgrace of seeing them foreclosed. Foreclosure would only place them in the hands of large finance concerns. It would eliminate the individual farmer and make tenants out of those who till the soil. We are not a Nation of tenants; we are basically a Nation of individuals who prefer to work out our own problems if given half an opportunity. This bill would not increase the national indebtedness. It would not cost the Government a dime in the long run—we believe, in fact, that the Government eventually would realize a few million dollars in profit, while the farmer would be saved and our financial structure strengthened.

Those of us who believe sincerely that the Frazier-Lemke bill, with its $3,000,000,000 program, would alleviate a large group of distressed agriculturists are chagrined at the failure of Congress to give the bill a chance to reach the floor for open debate.

A program of such major importance, which has been reported upon favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and which has been advocated by many Members and supported by almost all farm groups, surely should be given a hearing before the House once within 5 years. Rarely has a measure been sidetracked so long. As you know, there is a petition on the Speaker's desk. When the petition bears 218 names the bill will be brought before the House for debate and a vote. At the present time the petition bears 212 names—only 6 from the objective. I am advised that no less than 234 Members have signed this petition during the current session, but that, for one reason or another, they have removed their names. Thus at no one time has the petition borne the necessary 218 names. Whenever it seems that we will attain the goal of 218 names something always occurs which causes some Members to remove their signatures.

I have signed the petition. I am no. 16 on it. I also have induced several of my colleagues to sign it. I, of course, intend to vote for the bill, because I believe in the principle involved. No one can criticize me for believing in a principle and working for it. However, if you will sign this petition so that we can get the necessary 218 names, you are not necessarily obligated to vote for the bill or defend it in debate. You may demonstrate by such action, however, that you believe no legislation of such importance to a great many people should be sidetracked because of a rule promulgated by ourselves. After all, we should not consider ourselves the sole judges of what should be heard in this legislative hall. We are the representatives in a democratic form of government. We are here to recognize the voice of our people. Those who favor the Frazier-Lemke bill, while they may not constitute the majority of the people, do constitute a large part of the Nation's population, and their voice has a right to be heard. I recommend that you sign the petition and give us a chance to get this bill out of its pigeonhole and bring it before the House for debate and a vote. No request could be more sincere. Those of us supporting the measure are confident that its merits will win the approval of the Congress. Give us a chance to present our case to you. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SCOTT].

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, sometime ago I attended a meeting at which I saw a very interesting experiment staged. The speaker got up with a bottle in his hand and told the audience that the bottle contained ammonia. He pulled the cork out of the bottle, shook the contents over the floor, waved a paper behind it, and said, "Now, just as soon as you people in the audience smell this ammonia I wish you would put up your hands."

Almost immediately a man in the front seat stuck up his hand. He smelled ammonia. Gradually back through the audience, until they came clear to the back, the hands were still going up. People had smelled ammonia. Just as soon as the man in the back seat had signified the fact that he smelled ammonia, the speaker took the bottle and drank part of it. He said not to be disturbed about that part of the experiment, because the bottle contained pure water.

It illustrates very nicely, I think, the power of imagination. Those people in the audience knew that they should smell ammonia and immediately started to smell it. That was a harmless experiment. It was perfectly harmless on the part of those people who stuck up their hands, but when the imagination begins to run riot and when, in addition to the imagination, the malicious element begins to enter, then it ceases to be a harmless thing and becomes a dangerous thing. I refer, of course, to the practice in recent years of individuals with very active imaginations who see red riots and troublesome radicals all over the country. They can see it in anything that comes to their attention.

We have annually a red scare, annually a red-baiting campaign. Most of the people of the country, because we have had so much of it, are beginning to realize the fact that a lot of it is purely imagination and malicious propaganda. We have heard a lot of talk recently about the same subject, but I want to take a different slant at it this morning. I want to refer to the activities of one of the most malicious red baiters in the country, the editor of a large chain of papers, Mr. Hearst, and his recent attacks upon the Works Progress Administration.

It is perhaps both futile and unnecessary to waste your time and mine in showing up the malicious and absurd perversions of facts which accompany the annual red-baiting campaign. Fortunately the great majority of our citizens have too much common sense and common decency to be taken in by such patently false and vicious propaganda.

This method of sweeping accusation and underhanded libel has so long been a weapon of the enemies of democracy that the great mass of voting and taxpaying citizens in this country recognize and ignore it as such.

But I cannot stand by and permit to go unanswered such deliberate falsehoods and gross distortions of the truth as have recently appeared in the guise of news on every street corner in this country.

I refer specifically to a recent series of articles, sponsored by that great un-American and high priest of yellow journalism, William Randolph Hearst. In these he accuses the Works Progress Administration, through its Education Division, of spending taxpayers' money to spread the "red" gospel, to preach communism, class hatred, and racial strife in the cottonfields and mill towns of the South.

That these accusations have not a single basis of truth is obvious to anyone who knows anything at all about either communism, education, or the Works Progress Administration. Ordinarily I would not bother to take the time to refute them—they would be discredited by their own falsity. But circumstances have convinced me of the real and immediate danger to freedom of thought and speech in this country. We cannot ignore the recent passage of teachers' oaths in 19 different States—oaths which on their face value are harmless enough, but whose admitted and obvious purpose is to disenfranchise those teachers who will not dishonor their profession by placing propaganda before education. We cannot ignore the attempts to legalize the suppression of free speech and free opinion by means of the Tydings-McCormack disaffection bill and the Kramer sedition bill.

It is high time that we enter the lists on behalf of our much-abused constitutional liberties, ere to late we find ourselves muzzled and buried in the bastle of San Simeon. High time that someone show up in their true colors the cheap tricks of that super sob sister of autocracy, hypocritically parading under the banner of constitutional freedom.

Let us examine the record of the W. P. A. educational program. When the Federal Government first undertook to meet the relief needs of our millions of unemployed and to find socially useful and socially needed work-relief projects, it saw the need of extending public educational opportunities and of making those opportunities genuine mediums of training for citizenship. Government of the people depends on the ability of the people to govern. To prepare citizens to understand the social, economic, and political issues of the society in which they live and on the basis of a thorough knowledge of all the facts to participate intelligently in the processes of self-government, this was the purpose for which more than a hundred years ago we established a system of free public education. But, having achieved this, we rested on our oars. Our educational facilities and our educational curriculum have not kept pace with increasingly complicated and rapidly changing social and economic conditions. In spite of our boast of free education for all, there are at present in the United States 12,000,000 voting adults who cannot read a newspaper or write a letter, in addition to many millions more who have been forced by economic necessity to leave school at 13 or 14. It was the double objective, therefore, of giving constructive employment to thousands of unemployed teachers and professional workers and at the same time meeting the generally recognized need of the educationally underprivileged that the Government organized a work-relief project in emergency education. This project has been going on for three winters. Last winter more than 2,000,000 men and women were enrolled in classes. Over 40,000 teachers were employed in the program. Classes were conducted in 47 States of the Union—the one exception being Delaware—and were administered and supervised with the cooperation of the State departments of education. The majority of the classes were conducted in public-school buildings, the others in parish houses, settlement houses, and Y. W. C. A.'s. At this point Mr. Hearst has the nerve—or is it the naïveté?—to announce that he has just discovered that this program of emergency education has been surreptitiously undermining the morals of our good citizens, quite unbeknown to our public and State officials. Would he insinuate that these public servants are too dumb to recognize that they are sponsoring sedition and disseminating communistic literature? Or would he have us believe that those conscientious, hard-working men who daily superintend the public education of our children are wolves in sheep's clothing and secret apostles of the red gospel?

Mr. Hearst replies that he does not object to the splendid work of this project of combating illiteracy, in teaching homemaking, sewing, cooking, in establishing nursery schools, in providing vocational training. He centers his attack most ferociously on the division of workers' education. Now, workers' education is not new in the educational field—workers' education classes have been carried on in the United States since before the World War; departments of workers' education have even been incorporated into some of our State universities; in some countries in Europe—for example, in England and Denmark—workers' education has been supported by State funds and recognized as a proper and necessary function in the department of public education.

Let us look at the official memorandum of educational policies put out by the Federal office. What is workers' education and what has it done to draw down upon its head such vituperation?

Workers' education offers to men and women workers in industry, business, commerce, domestic service, and other occupations an opportunity to train themselves in clear thinking through the study of those questions closely related to their daily lives as workers and as citizens. The instruction program is based on an attitude of scientific inquiry in the light of all the facts and implies complete freedom of teaching and discussion. Its purpose is to stimulate an active and continued interest in the economic problems of our times and to develop a sense of responsibility for their solution.

Is it subversive, I ask you, for the American citizen to take an interest in what his Government is doing, to discuss the economic and social issues, upon which he is periodically asked to express an intelligent opinion? If democratic government is ever to function successfully, certainly the citizen must be equipped to understand and analyze problems of public importance intelligently and rationally. But why restrict this commendable educational program to one group of citizens as if they were a class apart? I heartily agree with the school superintendent who said, "This should be done for everybody."

As a matter of fact, it should be and is being done for everyone—workers' education is only one phase of the whole field of adult education. But at the present moment separate and special provision must be made for those men and women who have been unable to finish formal schooling, but who are, nevertheless, mature people, as vitally interested in current affairs as any college graduate, and with far more practical experience.

For these people, for whom the average college extension course and public lecture is so much shibboleth, couched as it is in technical, academic phraseology and dealing with topics which have little relation to what the worker wants to know or learn, special educational facilities must be set up. The curriculum offered is not considered in any sense to be a substitute for classes in the elementary tools of reading, writing, and arithmetic or training in technical skills, but to supplement this practical discipline with the equally necessary training in social intelligence and citizenship.

The program works quite naturally in close cooperation with the recognized representatives of organized workers—the labor unions. It frankly recognizes the right of the worker to determine his own educational needs and to plan his own educational program. Although approximately half of the classes are held in public-school buildings, nearly all the others meet in labor temples and union halls. Advisory committees are made up of not only public officials and educators, but leading labor leaders. New responsibilities acquired by the labor movement demand an informed and trained leadership to carry them out.

Last year over 40,000 men and women workers were enrolled in these classes in 30 States in the Union. These classes were jointly administered and supervised by the State relief administrations and the State departments of education. Letters of endorsement and resolutions of approval from educators, social workers, labor leaders, students in these classes, and nationally recognized professional organizations and social organizations, are public evidence that the people of this country and their elected representatives are fully aware of the implications of this program and are vigorously supporting it.

I wish to inform you of the very splendid work being accomplished in my State through the workers' education program—

Writes the State superintendent of public instruction in a big Middle Western State.

In my opinion the workers' education program in our State is the most vital part of the emergency education program—

Is a statement which may be duplicated in every State in which the program is being carried on.

The secretary of a State employees' association writes in:

Students of these classes have been instrumental in avoiding major industrial difficulties. They are a stabilizing influence in workers' groups.

Organized labor is also behind the program, a State Federation of Labor writes in endorsing the Federal projects—

In my opinion these classes are rendering incalculable service to the masses of this country in teaching the workers many of the fundamentals in which they are so lacking.

The emphasis of the curriculum is on the social sciences—current social and economic questions—as they particularly relate to the problems of the workers and workers' organizations. Classes in American history, practical economics, economic history, community problems, government and social legislation, the history of the labor movement, industrial and labor problems, international affairs, are offered. That these involve the discussion of controversial issues is obvious; in my mind it would be deeply regrettable if they did not. Would Mr. Hearst deny that the fundamental purpose of education was not to produce citizens understanding present-day problems? How can the worker or any other citizen make intelligent decisions on matters of current policy if he is denied the opportunity to study and discuss these questions?

The social sciences may not be exact sciences but they may be studied in the true scientific spirit of impartial inquiry. Particularly in dealing with facts of a controversial nature it is important that information from every source and from every point of view be investigated. Freedom of teaching and the impartial discussion of all points of view is implicit in a workers' education program. Yet it is exactly this determination to avoid the least possibility of partisanship or indoctrination which arouses the most bitter indignation on the part of the "red" baiters. They point to the fact that the Federal office sends out recommended reading lists on which the names of liberal and radical pamphlets and organizations appear. I have seen one of these so-called seditious bibliographies. Let me quote from the preface:

In order to insure that discussion may be based on facts and not on vague impressions, this office attempts to inform its instructors of available material on pertinent questions of the moment, written from various points of view. An attempt is made to list material which will present the authoritative points of view of each and every group concerned.

If you read the bibliography, you will find that, with what seems to me admirable impartiality and restraint, such organizations as the American Liberty League and the American Library Association are listed side by side with the American Federation of Labor and liberal organizations such as the American Civil Liberties Union. On another page, as the alphabet is no respecter of personal preference, you will find the Chamber of Commerce of the United States followed closely by the Cooperative League of the United States. Further reading shows that the majority of sources listed are such impeccable fact-finding agencies and community organizations as the United States Department of Labor, the Department of Agriculture, the United States Office of Education, the Russell Sage Foundation, the Foreign Policy Association, the Methodist Federation for Social Service, the Federal Council of Churches, and the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations. In another bibliography, under a section called Current Trends, you will find not only a book published by the Socialist Rand School Press, but what our shocked critic did not choose to mention, Mr. Henry Wallace's New Frontiers, and last but not least Mr. Herbert Hoover's Challenge to Liberty. No one surely can honestly deny the right and imperative need of every citizen to obtain all the facts in a given situation in order to make an intelligent and sane choice between visionary and unsound utopias and constructive social progress. Is it possible to prevent the mass of people from obtaining these facts in any case? History is too full of examples of the colossal failures of censorship, indoctrination, and the suppression of free speech in preventing the people from "hearing the other side."

This is the program that Mr. Hearst would have us believe is surreptitiously teaching hatred of American institutions, class strife, and the destruction of democratic liberties. Let me refer to these articles—they appeared in the Washington Herald on February 23, 24, 25, and 27, and were syndicated broadly throughout the country. They purport to be the result of "an exhaustive personal study" made by one of Mr. Hearst's agents describing a training center for teachers in workers' education carried on at the University of South Carolina, Columbia, S. C., and a camp for unemployed women located at a Y. W. C. A. camp outside of Smyrna, Ga. As a newspaperman, surely Mr. Hearst is slipping—his agent never saw any of the projects he so glibly described! He did not get down there until long after they had closed!

Where does he get his information, then? Primarily, he says, from two W. P. A. relief teachers who resigned in disgust after discovering, they say, the foul doctrines they were forced to teach. One of these teachers actually furnished a signed statement that the program was "nothing but a propaganda machine for communism." This discovery was so intolerable to her that "when camp was over I telegraphed my resignation to the W. P. A." As matter of record, after camp closed this woman was approved for a W. P. A. job and taught in one workers' education program. She wired her resignation, curiously enough, 2 days before Hearst's reporter had interviewed the State officials in Georgia. Mr. Hearst's other informant is quoted as saying that "when camp was over I just didn't go around to the W. P. A. any more and went out hunting a job on my own." Another deliberate lie—as the record shows that this teacher was also continued on the program until she obtained a regular teaching position in the public schools.

The article goes on to state that the camp was carried on "under the sole supervision of Federal officials sent down from headquarters at Washington", that the State W. P. A. "had no control over the program." May I presume to give Mr. Hearst a little elementary information regarding the organization of the Works Progress Administration? This camp was one of 43 similar camps for unemployed girls sponsored not by the Education Division but by the National Youth Administration. Complete responsibility for the organization and supervision of this project as well as other youth programs rested with the State youth director. The director of the camp and all the teachers were appointed by the Georgia State youth director. The statements that this reporter claims to have obtained from State officials to the effect that "they had nothing to do" with the camp are pure unadulterated cheap fiction. Field representatives from the Federal office served only as advisors. The Federal office of the Workers' Education only approved the director recommended by the Georgia officials and merely drew up a suggested curriculum outline. This outline was also followed in every one of the other 43 camps and included classes in home economics, health education, arts and crafts, recreational activities, as well as classes in civics, American history, current events, and social problems.

The training center referred to as a "hotbed of radicalism" was also one of 24 similar schools carried on for the most part at State universities in 21 other States and in Puerto Rico. The courses taught dealt only in the very simplest terms with elementary economics, political science, current events, and rural problems. At the close of the 7-weeks' term the teachers report that the students were only just beginning to get some slight understanding of what organized-labor movement means. The instruction was of such an elementary character that by the time the center closed the social-science classes had only just started to discuss the history and problems of the labor movement. "It was only on the last 2 days that we thought we ought to tell the students what such words as socialism, fascism, and communism meant", says the director. The topic of Soviet Russia was not discussed in any lecture or study group. The background and experience of the teaching staff—graduates of their local State colleges, public-school teachers with splendid records, social workers, Y. W. C. A. secretaries—is sufficient proof that they could hardly have been the fiery young revolutionaries they were supposed to be.

The chief burden of Mr. Hearst's complaint seems to be that this school was "kept so quiet" that no one knew it was going on. As his source for this astounding statement he quotes a certain Ben S. Adams, member of the State legislature. Would it be too impertinent to ask where Mr. Adams has been keeping himself? Again it is a matter of public record that the school was visited by officials of the State department of education, of the W. P. A., of the Rural Resettlement Administration, the State industrial commission, leading labor leaders, and even the Governor of South Carolina—not to mention speakers from the local Y. W. C. A., local churches, and other community organizations. The president of the State Federation of Labor visited the classes on many occasions. Visitors were never barred from classes nor was work halted on appearance of visitors.

The camp is described as a "concentration" camp, shut off from the world by a 100-foot deep chasm, spanned only by a narrow footbridge. This bridge, which is stated was the only entrance to the camp, was always guarded and visitors denied free access to the camp. This is not only a completely inaccurate statement but surprisingly stupid reporting. It is so easy to prove it is not true. This camp happens to be an old Y. W. C. A. summer camp, which was lent to the Youth Administration, and was not changed, rebuilt, or converted in any way. The footbridge was by no means the only entrance to the camp—there was also a main automobile road.

"We were especially warned against reporters. All unauthorized visitors were kept at the administration building" is another statement intended to show that every attempt was being made to keep the program secret. Of course, no organization or public institution permits newspaper statements or interviews to be given except through official channels. The directors of both the camp and the school were asked by the State W. P. A. administrators to make this clear to the girls. Furthermore, visitors were quite naturally asked to come to the office first before listening in on any class. Those asking permission to visit the classes were gladly shown around. This request is commonly observed in any school, public or private, inasmuch as effective study or class work cannot be subject to casual interruption from curious visitors.

Although the same accusations are leveled at both projects, no concrete instances are given. It is plain that Mr. Hearst can find no substantiation of his charges that communism was taught in any of the course outlines given at either the school or the camp. His reporter is forced to the absurd length of saying that "the 'glories' of communism were whispered to the girls at night", that communistic literature was privately and secretly circulated among the students after class hours, that a customary evening feature of camp life were what he so ludicrously calls "cozy-corner chats on communism." "Guitars and banjos plunked out the Communist marching song." He quotes one teacher as saying that "I played The Internationale until I was blue in the face." The Internationale was never played or sung once; in the first place it is much too difficult, and in the second place the background of the two teachers in charge of music at the training center is "insurance" against communism in their teaching. One of the student teachers of music is the sister of a prominent Episcopalian bishop in the State; the other sings as a soloist in the Methodist Church. Furthermore, the glee club sang in several of the local churches. The singing of radical songs is vehemently denied by instructors and students at both the camp and the school. The camp songbook includes among many hymns—incidentally two church services were held every Sunday at the camp—such songs as Annie Laurie and America, the Beautiful.

In insets designed to catch the most casual reader's eye, Mr. Hearst plays his trump card—quotes the titles of allegedly communistic books which were recommended to the camp girls and to the students at the training centers. One of these radical books is a volume by Sherwood Eddy, entitled "The Challenge of Russia." It is enough to turn to the opening lines of the preface of Mr. Eddy's latest volume on Russia and read, "My latest visit to Russia confirmed and deepened my conviction regarding the four chief evils of the Soviet system—that it would make it quite impossible for me ever to accept it", to realize the absurdity of this charge. Incidentally the introduction to this atheistic and seditious book is signed by the dean of Canterbury Cathedral, England. That there were books and pamphlets presenting discussions of current social and economic questions from radical and liberal viewpoints has never been denied. There was never any attempt to hide this fact. But that there was literature presenting every point of view, that many of the books in both the camp and the training center were borrowed from the public libraries and the State universities, and that the choice of books included such innocuous reading as the fiction of Zane Grey and Gene Stratton Porter, our friend did not have the honesty to point out.

These are the facts, gentlemen, you can take your choice—the word of a self-exposed liar against the word of hundreds of students, teachers, and public officials. They say that communism is not being taught through the workers' education program. If any such thing were being fostered by the State departments of education and the local school officials among 40,000 American workers, we would have heard about it, certainly it would not have been left to Mr. Hearst alone to rescue the Constitution from the menace of communism.

I would be the first to object to indoctrination or propaganda of any kind—conservative, radical, sectional, or religious—but freedom of discussion in the classroom and the right and necessity of every citizen to obtain all the facts and hear all the sides of current social issues, controversial or otherwise, is our only defense against indoctrination, against intellectual hysteria, against ignorant and foolish decisions—our only guaranty of sane and sound self-government. The attempt to imply that the correction of existing economic injustices and abuses cannot be secured, or that a better social order cannot be built, by democratic means is obviously a Fascist attempt to discredit any social reform or change. [Applause.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, there were three vehicles of recovery adopted by the present administration for the purpose of bringing the country back to a normal condition. First, there was the N. R. A. and then came the A. A. A. Both of those measures were torpedoed by the Supreme Court.

The third and most complete surrender of power by Congress was the passage of the Trade Agreements Act of June 12, 1934. Under this act the President was authorized to enter into trade agreements with foreign nations and he might do so without the concurrence of the Senate and House. Never under a limited monarchy and certainly not under any existing form of popular government was any such power ever delegated to the Executive. Under this power and by virtue of these treaties, the pattern of America, as regards industry and agriculture, is being changed. Neither the Senate nor the House of Representatives have any part in the making of these trade agreements which to my mind spell certain disaster to the future of America.

The President having sought for and obtained this power as one of the major items of his plans for recovery, of necessity delegated it to the Secretary of State, Hon. Cordell Hull. I yield to no man in my admiration of the high character, sincerity, and ability of the distinguished Secretary of State. But when Cordell Hull gets into the realm of tariff and international trade agreements he becomes a mystic and a dreamer.

The distinguished Secretary believes that the salvation of America will come through free-trade relations with the rest of the world. If you will read his speeches and writings on this subject, you will see my point. He believes that it is the duty of America to surrender its markets to the world so as to bring about "peace on earth and good will to men." He believes that through the instrumentality of these trade agreements, by which American agriculture and American industry are thrown to the wolves, an international golden rule will be brought about not only in the economic but in the political world.

Placing these treaties under his auspices is like giving command of the Army to an avowed pacifist or giving a Quaker command of the Navy. Nor is that all of the story. In turn, Secretary Hull delegated the mechanics of this treaty-making power to Prof. Francis Sayre. Again the destiny of agriculture and industry passed to the control of an internationalist who obviously believes that political internationalism is just around the corner, if he can write the tariffs of America.

Prof. Francis Sayer was born and bred in an international atmosphere. He, too, believes that all nations will live in peace if trade barriers are abolished. He believes that it is the function of America to lead the way, to point the road, and give the example by opening up our great American market to the world. To his mind, every treaty made is a successful one, provided the other country is happy. The Republican Party, historically, differs with him on that. Quite a large section of the Democratic Party, notably those from New England, differ from him on that proposition. It is elementary that our standards of living are different from those abroad. They are higher. We cannot compete with the Japanese, for example, although Professor Sayre believes that we can. Today, therefore, we have writing these treaties two men whose idealism cannot be questioned but who are definitely no match for the realistic, shrewd Dutchman, the able Canadian, and the materialistic representatives of the other nations who sit around the table and make these treaties, largely in secret. Now, I am for idealism in life and morals so far as they are consistent with the preservation of national rights. We need this type of man in our civilization, but America has never before placed the dreamer and idealist in command. Other countries have this type in abundance, but did you ever hear of England or of France placing their economic internationalists in the driver's seat on issues like these?

May I give you an example of the way England handles this sort of thing? J. Maynard Keynes, a distinguished English economist, prescribed a spending policy to the British Government when England was in the depths. The government in power listened to him politely but ignored his suggestion. Mr. Keynes came here to America, stayed overnight at the White House, and sold the President of the United States that policy. Under that policy we have spent billions of dollars. Yet today the American Federation of Labor says that we still have over twelve and a half million unemployed. England has achieved recovery by following her traditional method of balancing her budget and curtailing expenditures.

The distinction between the English type of self-contained government and ours is that while they listen to the idealists and the professors, they place practical men at the helm in all their undertakings. With these prefatory remarks I want to speak briefly on the subject of the Canadian pact.

I hold in my hand a book written by Professor Sayre, who was the man behind the gun in the making of this treaty. This book is entitled "America Must Act." I am not going to charge that Professor Sayre did not write this book. I have charged on the floor that some of the ornaments of the administration did not write the books bearing their names, but that they were written by ghost writers. In this case I assume and believe that Professor Sayre did write this book.

This book is printed at the expense of the World Peace Foundation, an international organization of good people who believe as Professor Sayre does, that the salvation of the world can be accomplished and that the lion will lie down with the lamb if international trade agreements are carried into effect.

The outstanding American authority on this proposition is George N. Peek. He is not a professor but was a leading and successful industrialist with vast experience in large affairs. Mr. Peek has been a sympathetic student of agricultural affairs for many years. He held various posts under the present administration and enjoyed the close friendship of President Roosevelt. His special endeavor has been to build up the market for agriculture, both at home and abroad. Mr. Peek is a real patriot and a sound American. He fought a brave battle for the American farmer against the flabby internationalism of Secretaries Wallace and Hull. President Roosevelt took up the cudgel for his Cabinet members and Mr. Peek retired from public service. To my mind, Mr. Peek is the best equipped man in America to handle the matters involved in these treaties, especially where they relate to agriculture. Some days ago the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] made some remarks on the floor in reference to the Canadian pact. At that time I wrote Mr. Peek and I requested him to give me his opinion on the discussion. I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. Peek on this question which seems to me to be very much to the point. So that the Members of the House may have an opportunity to read this, I am including it in my remarks:

GEORGE N. PEEK,
600 INVESTMENT BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1936.

HON. FRANCIS D. CULKIN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CULKIN: Referring to our telephone conversation, I have examined with considerable care Mr. HARLAN's speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 4.

In his discussion of trade balances with Canada, Mr. HARLAN appears to have confined himself to the figures on merchandise trade and to have taken no account of the striking changes in our trade and financial relations with Canada and with the rest of the world which have come about in recent years as a result of such factors as increased prices paid by us for gold and silver. The extent and trend of these changes is shown in the attached tables, table I covering visible trade with Canada.

Following the break-down of international exchanges, gold and silver have ceased to function largely as balancing items in international trade and have become in effect merely highly salable commodities which are exported and imported like other commodities.

The United States Treasury apparently has acted on this basis in its purchases of silver on the London open market and in its recently reported direct negotiations with Mexico, Canada, and with South American countries for the purchase of newly mined silver. In fact, it might be said that the changed position of gold and silver in international trade has been generally recognized by authorities in this country and abroad, except for the special group in the administration immediately charged with the negotiation of the so-called reciprocal-trade agreements.

It appears to me utterly fallacious in formulating or discussing a trade policy to ignore this changed position of gold and silver in our foreign trade. The failure of the administration to take it into account in negotiating the Canadian and other trade agreements has been one reason for my opposition to the present trade-agreement program. I would make much the same criticism of Mr. Harlan's defense of the Canadian agreement. If, as I believe, the premise upon which the present policy was framed is false, the whole structure of the so-called trade-agreements program would appear to be undermined.

If we are to offset these items of gold and silver in our trade with Canada and with the rest of the world under present conditions, we shall have to do it by maintaining a large favorable balance in merchandise trade, by limiting imports, and increasing our exports greatly. Accounts have to be settled. Increasing general imports merely makes the task of settling our accounts that much harder. If we do not settle them by merchandise shipments, we shall have to do it by transferring to foreign nations capital assets now held by us. This latter course involves the establishment of a degree of foreign control over our economic life and resources which may well prove highly undesirable.

You are at liberty to use the contents of this letter and the memorandums in any way you desire.

Very truly yours,

GEORGE N. PEEK.

TABLE I.—Recorded exports and imports

1935.....	37,000,000	—12,200,000	—95,200,000	—70,400,000

The foregoing letter and table illustrate the fallacious arguments being advanced by Secretary Hull and Professor Sayer on trade balances.

I make bold to say that the Canadians got everything they wanted in these treaties. Canada is an agricultural country, and she obtained substantial concessions for agricultural and forest productions. The theory on which these concessions are made was that we in turn would obtain larger markets in Canada for our productive machinery. Professor Sayer apparently did not know that all of the American larger plants have production units in Canada, and so his expressed belief that we will sell more productive machinery to Canada necessarily dies aborning.

The weird thing about the whole performance is that while agriculture, particularly dairying, is betrayed by this agreement, he permits the system of British Empire preference to remain undisturbed. It follows, therefore, that the products of the British Empire will have a preferential status in the Canadian market. Already the results of this treaty are apparent. It is now certain that more than $50,000,000 additional increase of agricultural products will come here in the year 1936. The dairymen of America have already seen the price of cheese broken and their losses already run into $10,000,000. The cattlemen of America have also been sold down the river. They are coming to realize that. This treaty was in violation of the platform pledges of the Democratic Party and of the pre-election speeches of President Roosevelt. In his Baltimore speech of October 26, 1932, the President said:

I know of no effective excessively high duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program.

In that speech he expressed his firm belief that—

The future of industry depends upon establishing a market for American-made goods among American farmers.

This Canadian treaty will retard recovery. It will destroy the buying power of the farmer in the North and East and, in turn, will retard the recovery of industry. This agreement is a definite breach of the covenant made by the President to American agriculture when he was running for office. At the time of the promulgation of this treaty the President stated that if it had a disastrous effect on any branch of agriculture that he would recall and annul any section of the treaty which brought about such results. The time has come for him to make his word good. Under his informal arrangement with Premier King, of Canada, he has that power. He likewise has that power under the Trade Agreement Act. If the President intends to be true to his campaign promises and to those made at the time of the promulgation of the treaty, he will cancel and abrogate this treaty that spells certain disaster to so many of his own countrymen. If he does not do so the situation spells certain disaster for him in the next election. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not blame the business people of the country, the bankers, the insurance companies, and all those people anxious to see our country prosper for having the jitters at the present time. My correspondence—and I think the correspondence of every man on this floor—will show that they are frightened to death at the suggestion of the taxes about to be laid. Now, I want to relieve this feeling to this extent: Various reports have been circulated as to what the Ways and Means Committee may or may not have done. I am going to convey to the House—and I hope to the country—the information that they have not done a blamed thing, not a thing. They are making progress rapidly backward, as I said yesterday. We have not yet caught up. The subcommittee studying these questions, listening to the so-called experts of the Department, have not yet got to scratch. Now, I will leave that matter there for the time being; and I hope, as a result of this remark, which I think can be verified, there need not be quite the worry at present, but there will be worries. I am not trying to relieve the feeling of worry and jitters that the suggestion of these taxes has brought throughout the American business world. The element of uncertainty is very trying, but there is no immediate prospect of a new tax bill.

Mr. Chairman, the real problem before Congress today is not how to get more taxes, but how to spend less money. This is the way to gratify and satisfy business and the country as a whole. Taxes now are plenty high enough to raise sufficient revenue for the necessary needs of Government, including adequate relief. I am perfectly astonished, Mr. Chairman, to see how the taxes have increased during the present administration.

I have in my hand some sheets of statistics. I wish I could elaborate on the whole picture that is before me, but here is a partial list of the taxes which aggregate $1,272,100,000 laid by the present administration. That does not cover, of course, their expenditures, but the taxpayer is being bled today to the tune of $1,272,000,000 more than he was when this administration came into existence.

Let me recount a few of these taxes: The A. A. A. Act went through, of course, because orders came up from downtown that it should. The processing tax, so-called—it is no compliment to the Democratic Party that $543,000,000 was expected to be raised from this unconstitutional tax in the year 1937, according to the Budget estimate. The N. I. R. A. totals up for capital stock and excess profits and dividends, $168,000,000; liquor tax, $9,700,000; the Vinson excess-profits tax of 1934, $1,000,000.

The coconut-oil tax is omitted, which amounts to something like $35,000,000, but does not come into the Treasury. Then we have the Silver Purchase Act, the National Firearms Act, the tobacco tax, and so forth, all bringing in some revenue. The Social Security Act, it is estimated, will tax the American people in 1937 $433,200,000.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I must yield to the chairman for a brief question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Did the gentleman vote for or against the Social Security Act? As I recall it, the gentleman spoke against that bill and then voted for it.

Mr. TREADWAY. I had to vote for it. I did not have a chance to do anything different. Now, please do not interrupt me. If the gentleman wants to make a speech in opposition let him secure his own time.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman forced us into a hole. What else were we going to do? Do not bring up such a foolish question as that. That is all there is to it, and the gentleman knows that to be a fact.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is very inconsistent in his position.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman desires, I will put in the Record the remarks I made in connection with the Social Security Act at the time of its consideration by the House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman spoke against that bill and voted for it, all in the same day.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman knows how anxious I was to vote against it. As the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has brought this matter up before, I will insert here exactly what I said at that time.

On April 12, 1935, during the consideration of the social security bill in the House—page 5529 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—I said:

If legislation of this nature is to be passed by Congress, there should have been four separate bills instead of one, divided into two categories. * * *

In the first class are titles I, IV, V, and VI, granting aid to the States for old-age pensions, for the care of dependent children, for maternal and child welfare, and for public health. They carry with them an appropriation for each of the various purposes, which will aggregate less than $100,000,000 the first year. I am in favor of all of these titles.

On April 19, the day the bill passed the House, I moved to recommit it to the Ways and Means Committee with instructions to strike out titles II and VIII, and increasing amounts for the items I favored. Failing to have this motion adopted, no other course was open to me than to vote for the bill.

I do not yield any further for any such purpose. Now, I yielded as one Member to another, expecting a respectable question from the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I was simply asking the gentleman how he voted on that particular question.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not yield any further. Mr. Chairman, who is running this party, the gentleman or me?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not yield. If the gentleman has a respectable question to ask, I am always courteous and will yield to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee for a proper question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If asking the gentleman civilly how he voted on a question, which is a matter of record, is not a respectful question, what would be a respectful question?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I want to return to the question of the amount of available money from taxation. I hold in my hand the balance sheet from the Treasury Department dated March 9, 1936, which shows, Mr. Chairman, a favorable, unexpended balance of $5,988,451,000. That is an unexpended balance. If anybody can come in here, even the President of the United States, and justify to the Congress a request for $620,000,000 more of tax money, with an unexpended balance as of March 9 of $5,988,000,000, I should like to have the explanation.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, there is a campaign coming on.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Knutson] injects the remark that there is a campaign coming on, which is true. It is a very strange feature that all previous tax measures from the beginning of this administration to the present have been written downtown. I am a member of the Ways and Means Committee. These bills are put into our hands after being prepared downtown by the folks in charge of the New Deal, until a week or 10 days ago, at which time the President of the United States made a very illuminating request for $620,000,000. He said: "Congress, you go and find that money. I want to spend $620,000,000, and you boys up there on the hill can find it for me. I have spent the money. You provide it." The only exception to this was the bill to stop the leaks, which was given careful study.

The reason the President puts this disagreeable job onto the Congress of the United States is, as the gentleman from Minnesota stated, because there is an election coming on, and he wants the burden on Congress, not himself.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Does not the gentleman expect that a bill will come here from down town before the committee concludes its report?

Mr. TREADWAY. It is the only way, evidently, that we are going to get anywhere. We have not made any progress in 2 weeks of subcommittee sessions to date, and I do not think I violate any confidence in making that statement.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; for a question.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Did I understand my colleague and friend to criticize the President for sending down bills already drawn and then criticizing him for not doing the same thing?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will be very frank and say to the gentleman that I criticize him either way. I will criticize him going and coming. There is no doubt about that. He is very inconsistent, because for 3 years he has prepared these tax measures, and now just previous to an election he tells the Congress to prepare them.

Now, what does some of this money consist of that is now unexpended? The Emergency Relief Act of 1935 included the language "to increase employment by providing for useful projects."

Useful projects! The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] yesterday listed a large number of useless projects. Why not begin some of our economy here and show the lack of need of a tax measure by cutting out, as the gentleman so well recommends, measures that total $574,000,000 of unexpended future costs? They are most useless projects, and yet the only right under the relief appropriation bill is to expend them for useful projects.

I have here the official report of the President of the United States on the Emergency Relief appropriation, and I call the attention of the House to the fact that out of the $4,880,000,000 only $2,400,000,000 has actually been expended. Of the rest, just half as of January 1, 1936, is listed under these euphonious titles, unobligated allotments, unallotted allocations, allocations available for project authorizations and warrants pending. This makes up the balance.

If anybody can explain to me what these various colored things here represent beyond the green [showing the cut], I shall be very pleased to listen to him in his own time.

The next is more or less a confirmatory program. This pointer here shows expenditures of $1,800,000,000, and the next pointer goes to $2,400,000,000. These are obligations. The rest of it is unobligated, and still we are called upon to go into session here for the purpose of making up extravagant tax bills.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. BOLTON. I want to inquire if it was not to these unobligated funds that the gentleman's amendment referred at the time the payment of the bonus was before us?

Mr. TREADWAY. There is no basis for the statement on the part of the administration that the tax is necessary because the bonus must now be paid, when at the same time there is $5,000,000,000 available to pay the $1,200,000,000. I agree perfectly with the gentleman that there is no need of a new tax measure so far as the payment of the bonus is concerned.

Mr. BOLTON. As I recall, the gentleman suggested at that time that these unobligated funds be used for that purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. We had unobligated, according to the synopsis of December 31, $2,340,000,000 of unexpended balance according to these official records. As of December 31, 1935, $2,627,000,000. In other words, there is $2,000,000,000 of unexpended balance out of the $4,880,000,000 of emergency appropriation more than this new tax bill calls for. So why bother about this new taxation?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman must not forget that the total operating expenses of the Government last year were $1,000,000,000 greater than the total receipts from all our farms.

Mr. TREADWAY. It is worse than that, I will say to the gentlemen. Our operating expenditures have been more than $2 for every $1 of receipts of all kinds in the Government. That is worse than just segregating the agricultural part of it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does not the gentleman think it is pretty bad when 6,000,000 farmers have to work to support the Government?

Mr. TREADWAY. I go further than the gentleman himself goes. Why these reciprocal tariff treaties bringing in agricultural products at half-duty rates in order to crowd our farmers off the map?

Mr. KNUTSON. How are we going to be good neighbors without giving away our markets?

Mr. TREADWAY. We are not going to be internationalists if we can help it. We are going to kick like thunder if we have to be. This is my attitude: I think there is no question about what kind of people are running this Government. They are theorists and they are internationalists, and they are running us in the hole every day. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I should like to call further attention to some of these useless projects that the gentleman referred to yesterday. We cannot impress the public too strongly with this definite feature of useless expenditure of Government funds.

The appropriation stated for necessary relief—necessary and useful. None of this is useful, and the gentleman from New York could have elaborated on this list and about doubled it.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman believe that the purpose of a good many of them is political?

Mr. TREADWAY. They are worse than that; they are for patronage; and in order to get a job you have to belong to the right party.

Mr. CULKIN. And were they not made with a view to carrying the next election?

Mr. TREADWAY. Passamaquoddy is such a perfect illustration of that fact that we do not need to look any further. We do not need to go to the western country and see the Coulee Dam or the South to see T. V. A., but look right in New England, near where I live, and see if you can find the slightest use for the millions of dollars that have already been expended on that project. I saw some pictures of it the other night, and they are going to have some very nice residences there. I wish they had taken some of that money and built additions to private homes somewhere else.

Mr. CULKIN. Did not the Passamaquoddy project carry the last gubernatorial election in that State, and was not that what it was for?

Mr. TREADWAY. I am told very straight by politicians in Maine that it will not carry the next one, even if the President assigns some of the unobligated money for that project, although Congress has refused to do it. I think this is a prophecy that will be fulfilled in their September elections.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; very briefly.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman from New York is mistaken when he states that these projects are all political. For instance, the dog hospital down in Tennessee is not political, because dogs cannot vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Those who built the buildings can vote, I suppose.

Mr. STACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Is the gentleman going to support the dogs?

Mr. STACK. I wanted to inquire if this is a dog fight or a Republican fight?

Mr. TREADWAY. We are going to have a political fight along in November, and that is where we will be glad to meet you.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman know that we have a meritorious project to establish a golf course on the city dump at Pueblo, Colo.?

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, this public golf course may give some of our prominent Democrats an opportunity to get more exercise and be in better physical and mental trim, because they have an awful job before them after Congress adjourns. I think Pueblo is undoubtedly a good place to build a golf course, but a public dump might be a poor place to play in hot summer weather.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has stated that there are many useless expenditures of money. Does the gentleman believe the construction of thousands of a certain type of out buildings throughout the Southern States are entirely useless?

Mr. TREADWAY. That question is rather a delicate one. I might say that probably they are useful, but they need not be so highly ornamented; I understand that the roses are blooming there, and I do not think that is required for the utilitarian purposes for which they are proposed to be used. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. Referring to the dog kennels, I should like to ask the gentleman if that put the "dog" in "boondoggling"?

Mr. TREADWAY. There is so much "boondoggling" that it would require a long account to check it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include a brief letter from George M. Peek and some brief tables.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time on this side.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No further requests on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, namely:

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

My distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] who just preceded me has gone through the ordinary sniping tactics that we must undergo during the remainder of this session, and which have been conducted by some Republican Members since the session began. The people of the country are awake to the realization that this is an election year and that this is the year when all kinds of tactics are employed, particularly sniping tactics, and that it is all a part of the game. I say this impersonally, because naturally politics is played intensely here, and while some do not engage in sniping tactics, it is recognized that that is the policy in which some do engage.

The gentleman from Massachusetts talks about the deficit. We had a deficit of over $5,000,000,000 during the administration of former President Hoover—not a deficit to relieve human suffering and distress but a deficit in the conduct of the ordinary departments of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman knows very well that that statement—

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, do not give conclusions, but ask me a question.

Mr. SNELL. I ask the gentleman, if the present administration will keep the books the same as they were kept under the Hoover administration, whether we will not find the deficit of this administration more than double the deficit of the last one?

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman will permit me to proceed, we had a deficit of $5,000,000,000 plus during the Hoover administration, incurred in the conduct of the ordinary activities of the Government and despite the fact that in 1930 we passed a tax bill raising $1,641,000,000 each year thereafter, and if we had not passed that tax bill, the deficit of the Hoover Administration would have been $8,000,000,000 plus, in the conduct of the ordinary and necessary departments of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Did the present administration not continue those same taxes?

Mr. McCORMACK. Exactly.

Mr. SNELL. Then it had the benefit of it.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is right; but I am talking about the deficit of the Hoover administration of $5,000,000,000 plus, not one penny of which was incurred in an effort to relieve human suffering and distress, but every penny of which was incurred in the ordinary conduct of the departments of the Government.

Let us analyze a little further what is the cause of the deficit of this administration. The Budget for the ordinary appropriations and expenditures is balanced. This deficit has been incurred as a result of this administration appropriating money, for the first time in the history of our country, for direct aid to relieve human suffering and distress. I respect the opinions of those who say that this should not be done, but I differ with them. I differed with the last administration in its position that the Federal Government should not make such direct appropriations. Simply because the Federal Government had not made appropriations before in its history for relief of its people is no reason why the Federal Government, under the circumstances that existed 3 years ago, should not have made such appropriations. Local government and local charities could not carry on. They had carried the burden for 3½ years courageously and were unable to meet the relief problem and demands that confronted this country on March 4, 1933. Millions of human beings, American citizens, but human beings, were facing starvation. Humanity demanded something be done, if no other call demanded it. Humanity called for the Federal Government to exercise its power, its influence, its functions, to prevent starvation, to relieve human suffering and distress, not only of its own people, but of human beings, living persons; and the Federal Government under this administration responded.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. The Federal Government responded not only to relieve human suffering and distress, which was prevalent, but what about the emotional reactions that would have been the natural and probable consequence with millions of American citizens facing that condition? Does anyone think they would have calmly sat by? Could it be expected that they would calmly sit by? Think of the husband and father coming home to the wife and children looking with longing eyes to see if he had a job. The man was willing to work, but was the victim of a disturbed economic system over which he had no control. He was not responsible for it, but was the victim of it, just the same as all who desired work and who were unemployed are the victims of our disturbed economic system. When he went home, what about the hope, and what about the despair, when the father and husband told them that he was not able to obtain employment. Fifty years ago in the depression of 1873 to 1878, when the conditions were not as crowding upon us as they are today, there was force and violence; there was the burning of factories, the burning of railroad stations and railroad trains. There was an emotional reaction on the part of the suffering unemployed that some particular machinery had taken their job away and there was a desire to destroy that which they thought was preventing them from obtaining employment, which has displaced human labor.

There are gentlemen on the Republican side who voted for direct aid, and who are entitled to credit, just as much as gentlemen on the Democratic side. I do not rise in any spirit of partisanship, but the fact remains that the leadership came from President Roosevelt. He courageously and humanely recommended, and Members courageously and humanely voted, not only to relieve human suffering but to prevent emotional reaction. What about undernourishment and its effects? Does that stop with one generation? Is it not transmitted on? With millions of mothers and fathers, with the arrival of children of undernourished parents distributed throughout the country, the results of undernourishment are passed on. One of the factors we inherit and that is passed on from the parents to children is a weakened physical condition where it exists among parents. It does not stop with one generation. It goes on for two or three generations. I know whereof I speak.

The potato famine in Ireland in 1846, 1847, and 1848 brought about a general condition of undernourishment which is not over yet, prevailing among those of Irish blood with a high tubercular mortality rate existing until recently. I know whereof I speak, being an American of Irish blood. The results of undernourishment do not stop with one generation; they go on for several generations. When we give relief we are not only meeting the problem of human distress, we are not only preventing human emotional reaction, but we are trying to prevent the harmful effects of undernourishment, not only to individuals affected but to the Nation.

I agree that the straight dole costs less. I will agree that work relief costs more; but let us analyze that honestly and fairly. I will agree that many projects are unnecessary, but we must not forget the basic principles—of relief and of work—in order that millions of Americans who are capable of employment may maintain respect for themselves and that there will not be a general demoralizing effect which is harmful to our Government. When we emerge from this depression, with millions who want to work and capable of working having been on a dole, the natural and probable consequence of that condition is bound to be demoralizing. There is bound to be a lowering of respect, or the results will be in that direction. That is going to be harmful to the Government itself. While the immediate result is a greater expense because of the work-relief program, nevertheless, over a long period of time, I claim it is better for the Government to have millions of people working and retaining their self-respect than to receive what the conscious mind will immediately and directly realize—a dole. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has again expired.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] started to make a speech because he said he wanted fair play in politics. Now, I am willing to have fair play. I am not opposed to some political statements, but if there has ever been a political statement made on the floor of this House during the present session, the gentleman who just preceded me has made that statement. If there is any man who has tried to capitalize human misery, it is in the statement just made a few moments ago.

Now, in trying to be fair, the gentleman made the statement that nothing was done whatever out of the ordinary during the Hoover administration, and that new taxes were levied. There were over a billion dollars of out-of-the-ordinary expenses during the last 2 years of the Hoover administration. Not only that, but the new taxes that were put on during the Hoover administration were continued under the present administration, and they have increased those taxes a billion and a quarter in addition.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Did the billion dollars to which the gentleman refers go into Reconstruction Finance Corporation activities?

Mr. SNELL. Your various new activities put over a billion dollars of new and partly covered up taxes on the people, and you have continually put out the statement that no new taxes have been levied by the present administration upon the American people. Those statements have been put out through the newspapers.

Mr. McCORMACK. But were there any emergency appropriations to relieve human suffering and distress?

Mr. SNELL. Oh, you always talk about emergency relief and human suffering. That argument, as far as you are concerned, covers all your misdoings, but you have about worn it out. We are just as much interested in the average poor citizen as you are, and have done more for him during all the years than you have, but you take all the credit to yourselves and claim that no one else has ever thought of that. I challenge you to furnish any statement made by any reputable Republican whereby we were opposed to honest needed relief.

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, was any appropriation made?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; there were. I do not yield further now. The gentleman would not yield to me when he was making statements in regard to the Hoover administration, which, in my judgment, were not correct.

Mr. McCORMACK. I never refuse to yield to the gentleman whenever I see him.

Mr. SNELL. Now, the gentleman has talked a great deal about relieving unemployment. It has been stated on the floor many times when we have been passing these emergency measures that the proof of the pudding would be the chewing of the string. These emergency measures have been in effect for nearly 3 years, and according to the statement of the president of the American Federation of Labor, you have practically the peak time of unemployment today, notwithstanding all the money that has been spent. In addition to that, Mr. Hopkins said that the relief load was at the peak of all time. Over 20,000,000 on relief and 12,600,000 unemployed at the present time. Those are your own figures. The only thing we are complaining about under the present administration is the actual waste in what you call meeting emergency conditions, and how you have turned it into purely political relief. We are willing to go as far as anyone in feeding the poor and taking care of the needy, but the present administration has and is using these funds for political purposes in every State in this Union.

I had this experience when I tried to get a man a foreman's position in a C. C. C. camp. This was an activity created for the sole purpose of relief. That is, relief for everyone, not political relief only. The copy of this letter, which I am including in my remarks, proves conclusively my statement that this administration has used these relief funds primarily for political purposes. Vincent Dailey, referred to in this letter, is Mr. Farley's patronage dispenser for the Democratic State Committee in New York State.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FOREST SERVICE,
Washington, D. C., August 25, 1934.

I have your letter recommending Mr. _____ for the position of forestry foreman at the Benson Mines, New York camp. I shall be glad to send a copy of your letter to the superintendent of lands and forests, New York Conservation Commission, Albany, who is in charge of all forestry camps in the State, and who makes all of the civilian appointments. This office makes none of the appointments in these State camps.

Furthermore, unless Mr. _____ can qualify by actual technical training for a technical position at one of these camps, he could not be appointed unless his name appears on the political advisor's list of New York State. This man is Mr. Vincent Dalley. All appointments in New York State, except those of a technical nature, must be made from a list which is supplied by Mr. Dalley. It is possible that Mr. _____ might get his name on this list. That would be up to him, I presume, to find out.

I am sorry that I cannot take action which would probably be more in line with what you want, but the Forest Service is obliged to comply, and to ask the States to comply, with the procedure which I have outlined.

Very sincerely yours,

R. M. EVANS, Regional Forester.

I also want to say at this time that your Democrat foremen, and so forth, did everything they dared do; used every pressure possible to make the boys enroll locally and vote the Democratic ticket. In places in my district Democrat inspectors of elections enrolled them against the law and we had to appeal to judges of the supreme court to get their names stricken from the enrollment. In the face of this you have the temerity to say we are playing politics.

Just look at the record before you repeat this.

In closing I want to say very definitely that we are willing at all times to join in doing everything necessary for the Federal Government to do to relieve the poor, unfortunate, and needy citizens, but we are absolutely opposed to wasteful use of the taxpayers money and the purely political relief that has characterized the spending of the present administration.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I do.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he sees any need for a tax bill of $620,000,000 for the purpose of immediate relief?

Mr. SNELL. That is a hard question to answer and I am not going to try to answer it in my limited time. But before we furnish any more money we should know how much money is on hand at the present time and what the President proposes to do with it.

[Here the gavel fell]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to talk politics. I am going to talk common sense and shall address my remarks to this side of the House.

Economy is a thing to be practiced and not talked about. The people of this country would like to see this Congress practice a little old-fashioned economy. They do not want the penny-wise and pound-foolish type of economy, nor do they believe that we should practice economy by letting millions starve. What all right-thinking people do believe is that we can, should, and must retrench on the so-called housekeeping expenses of government.

Before this session started we heard a great deal about economy and cutting down government expenditures. Some feeble efforts have been made in that direction. Very soon we will be faced with a new appropriation for relief purposes which will take real money. In anticipation of such a necessary and humanitarian appropriation let us chisel down these increases in regular supply bills and for purposes extraneous to the regular functions of government.

We have before us the bill H. R. 11691, making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937. Now, when I turned to the report on the bill, to my great gratification I found that the bill called for a decrease of $640,092.73 over the appropriation of 1936. But on careful examination of the bill, report, and hearings it became evident that this comparison was the result of adroit manipulation of figures.

The report shows that the appropriation for 1936 was $23,934,660.73. Now, that total constitutes not only the legislative-establishment appropriation for 1936 but also the funds used for those purposes from the Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1936, the First and Second Deficiency Acts of 1936, and Public Resolution No. 39 of the Seventy-fourth Congress. In other words, we are comparing the regular supply bill against the total of four appropriation acts of last session. If this comparison is to have any standing, it precludes any deficiency or supplemental appropriations with funds for the legislative establishment.

Let us examine just a few sections of this bill. Under the section providing for funds for the Senate we have what is purported to be a $253,677.18 decrease over the 1936 appropriation. Actually the decrease is only $5,829, because the 1936 figure includes $247,848.18 drawn from other appropriation acts. Under the section designated "House of Representatives" there is purported to be a decrease of $101,602 over 1936. However, the 1936 figure includes $116,898 drawn from other appropriations. Under the item, "Architect of the Capitol", there is shown a decrease of $344,738. When I check up on this I find that, of the sum given in the 1936 appropriation, $2,550,000 was furnished in the deficiency act to air-condition the Capitol, Senate, and House Office Buildings. Fifty-seven thousand and forty dollars came from the second deficiency act for Senate Office Building maintenance, and so forth.

I am not going on and on itemizing these figures. They are in the report where everyone can see them. The question I want to raise is this: If we pass this appropriation act, what assurance do we have that we will not be called upon to make additional appropriations for the legislative establishment in future appropriation bills? If this bill contains all of the appropriation for the Legislative Establishment Act, there is some economy; if not, this is a grand gesture and waste of words when Members take the floor to say that we want to cut down and are cutting down expenditures.

Gentlemen, no one is more sincere than I am in wanting to provide funds for efficient governmental operation and for necessary relief of human suffering, but I tell you here and now that I am opposed to increased expenditures for the regular operation of government and the constant enlargement of those appropriations. I am equally opposed to bookkeeping tricks which tend to measure ever-increasing expenditures with a cloak of false economy. If we are to come out of our present financial difficulties, we must practice rigid economy and thrift, not only as individuals but also as a Nation. And the sooner we do this the better for all of us.

The Clerk read as follows:

For telegraph and telephone service, exclusive of personal services, $95,000.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 21, line 17, after the word "services", strike out "$95,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$90,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is to reduce the amount of this item carried in the current bill to the amount appropriated last year. The committee did good work in cutting the Budget estimate of $115,000 down to $95,000; but I believe, especially with the prospect of no session during the summer of 1936, we can get along with the amount of money that was appropriated last year. I do not think last year should serve as a criterion, for the session ran right down until practically the 1st of September. I do not think it can be used to justify spending so much money when Congress will not be in session so long.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from New York and the Members to page 48 of the hearings, where it will be found that in 1934 the appropriation was $157,000 and the expenditure $143,770.68. In 1935 the appropriation was $105,000 and the expenditures were $92,504.10.

After careful study and after consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, your committee fixed the amount at $95,000 because there is perhaps $5,000 worth of outstanding message charges that have not come in. It is found that it takes sometimes as much as 5, 6, or 7 months before charges for these telegrams reach the Committee on Accounts from different parts of the United States.

The Budget estimate on this item was for $115,000. Your committee, after careful study and deliberation, allowed $95,000 in order that there would be sufficient, but even with this liberal allowance we anticipate there will be a shortage.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Gladly.

Mr. TABER. The expenditure of $92,000 came at a time when the House was in session a good part of July, in the summer of 1934, and at a time when Congress was in session all the way through the months of May and June of the year 1935. The situation that confronts us now is a probable adjournment before the 1st of May. It seems to me this will make an altogether different situation and that we should not appropriate more than $90,000.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Maine, a member of the committee.

Mr. MORAN. The gentleman also could have pointed out that the appropriation now under discussion is for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936, and therefore the length of the present session of Congress has no bearing whatever on this appropriation, assuming this session ends before July 1. From page 48 of the hearings on this bill it will be noted that the appropriation for each of the fiscal years 1931, 1932, and 1933 was $90,000, and the expenditures for those 3 years were $89,999.75, $89,960.39, and $89,989.92, respectively. But note that the appropriation for the fiscal year 1934 was $157,000 and the expenditures for that year were $143,770.68. This was due, in a great degree, to the necessity of cleaning up old bills contracted but not paid for during the previous years. The appropriations for the 3 previous years were not sufficient to pay the obligations incurred, and a "clean-up" appropriation to take care of old outstanding bills was necessary. These old bills, it will be noted, were incurred during the period from July 1, 1930, to July 1, 1933. As a matter of fact, it is difficult to keep the bills currently paid, as Members may send telegrams from any place in the country, and it takes weeks and sometimes months for the transactions to clear through the telegraph companies to the House Committee on Accounts, which has jurisdiction. Chairman WARREN, of that committee, is doing a splendid piece of work in seeing to it that only bona-fide official messages of Members are paid for by the Government. The Appropriations Committee is confident that the amount carried in the bill now before the House is the absolute minimum necessary, based on past and present experience, to enable Members to render necessary official service to their constituents.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW].

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN] was formerly a member of the Committee on Accounts, and no one knows better than he does how very carefully these expenditures are scrutinized and the rather extreme extent, as some of us think at times, the committee goes in disallowing charges for telegrams that are not clearly within the rule allowing them to be sent at Government expense. It does not make a particle of difference, it seems to me, if there is a slight excess of appropriation here because eventually these telegrams have to be paid for anyway. It is just a matter of bookkeeping. I am convinced, as the gentleman from Maine says, there is not an excess of money in this appropriation to take care of the telegrams that will have to be paid for. Indeed, I think from past experience and from average requirements we may say the appropriation is not large enough. Therefore, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 13, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Government Printing Office and the Washington city post office shall reimburse the Capitol power plant for heat, light, and power furnished during the fiscal year 1937 and the amounts so reimbursed shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the Chamber when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, began his political outburst or oration. However, when I came on the floor I found that he seemed to be very much infuriated and enraged on account of the efforts that are being made by the Committee on Ways and Means to revise the present revenue laws or to write a new tax bill. In the course of his remarks the gentleman went out of his way to criticize the administration rather caustically on account of its procedure with respect to tax legislation and other bills in which the administration has been interested.

The gentleman from Massachusetts made the statement that in the past it had been the custom for the administration to draft the tax bills and send them down to the Committee on Ways and Means for ratification. As my memory serves me, that has not been the custom since I have been chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has been the ranking minority member, during all of that time.

I recall very clearly, and I have no doubt that I can refresh the gentleman's memory, the details of the work of our committee in connection with the tax bill of 1934. That bill closed up the loopholes which had been left open by the previous Republican administrations whereby certain large taxpayers of this country were escaping their just share of taxes, including the Mellons, the Mitchells, the Wiggins, the Morgans, and others. An important work was done by a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the gentleman from Massachusetts was a member of this subcommittee. This subcommittee worked during the entire summer making studies and finally presenting a bill to the House which closed up loopholes and saved the Government, without additional taxes, an amount in excess of $300,000,000. Only seven votes were cast against this bill on final passage.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am only too glad to thoroughly agree with the gentleman's statement that for several months a subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee worked exceedingly hard to prepare this stop-gap tax bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I just yielded for a question.

Mr. TREADWAY. The bill did perhaps plug some holes. But I want to confirm the gentleman's statement that so far as that particular tax measure is concerned, I have no criticism to make whatsoever.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Does the gentleman know of any tax bill or any other important piece of legislation that has been called to our attention by the administration or by the head of the departments of the Government that the committee has not taken the bill, given it careful study, revised it, remodeled it, and changed it to conform to the judgment of the committee? Would the gentleman dare say, as he would have had Members of the House believe this morning, that the Committee on Ways and Means is just a rubber stamp and acts only as a vehicle to carry out the mandates of the administration? I know the gentleman would not want to reflect on the committee in that way; yet that is exactly what he did this morning.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will be more courteous to the gentleman than he was to me. I yield to the gentleman. He can ask me any question he desires. I asked the gentleman this morning about his vote on a certain measure and he flew into a rage. He said I had asked a disrespectful question. I simply asked him how he voted as a Member of the House. He was so excited and so enraged he did not actually know what he was doing.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not think the gentleman and I need to get into a discussion about the Social Security Act.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman was vehemently criticizing it as a waste of money. He referred to that great piece of humanitarian legislation as being a waste of money. He went out of his way to make a partisan attack on it, and when I asked the gentleman how he voted in reference thereto he became enraged and said I was disrespectful to him. That is exactly what transpired.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. If I may proceed just a moment in the gentleman's time—

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is all right. I hope I can get additional time.

Mr. TREADWAY. I shall be only too glad to aid the gentleman in securing additional time. I thought the gentleman was going to ask me something with reference to the remarks I was at the time making on the floor, which he did not do. He asked me about something which happened in April 1935. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to read an extract from the remarks I made at that time, which extract I hold in my hand.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I cannot yield for that purpose. It is a matter of record that the gentleman made a vehement speech against the legislation and yet voted for it the same day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] can explain that, I yield to him now for that purpose.

Mr. TREADWAY. I can explain it if the gentleman will give me the chance.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I cannot allow the gentleman to take all of my 5 minutes, but if I have misquoted the gentleman or misrepresented his position, I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have in front of me the paragraph showing what I said at the time. If the gentleman does not want to yield to me now to read it I will put it in my remarks.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was not present when the question was asked by the gentleman from North Carolina of the gentleman from Massachusetts with respect to how he voted on the social-security bill. Did the gentleman from Massachusetts answer the question one way or the other?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I believe the gentleman said we forced him into voting for it, or something of that kind. I believe that was about his response. It was some kind of lame and halting answer that he gave.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I presume the tax bill was the basis of the gentleman's outburst this morning, although I was not here when he started his speech. The tax bill is now under consideration by a subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means. The gentleman criticizes the administration for drafting tax bills, as he alleges, and sending them to the Congress to have them approved, and then admits that this is one exception where the President, he said, for political reasons, had left it to the Congress and had not pursued his usual course. If that is the case, does not the gentleman think, inasmuch as the President has left the writing of the tax bill to the judgment of the Committee on Ways and Means and to the Congress, not for relief purposes, but to take the place of the revenue lost by the Supreme Court decision declaring the A. A. A. unconstitutional, and also the additional burden placed upon the Government as a result of the passage of the bonus law, for which, I presume, a majority of the Members on the minority side voted, this was not done by the President, but both of these things were brought about by causes other than any action of the President—that is, by the Supreme Court of the United States and by the action of the Congress itself?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have not much time, but I yield.

Mr. TABER. Did not the result of the Supreme Court decision better the President's 1937 Budget by $72,000,000?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, I do not know about that; maybe it did.

Mr. TABER. Certainly it did.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is not under consideration at this time. We all know that this tax bill now being considered to raise the additional revenue requested by the President of the United States is not for the purpose of balancing the ordinary Budget, and would not have been necessary if it were not for the two things I have mentioned. It is not for the purpose of relief, which the gentleman has so severely criticized here this morning. The matter of relief was taken care of previously. This bill is to make up the loss of revenue from the two causes I have mentioned.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield. If the gentleman wants to take up all my time, that is all right.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman explain how he regards an unconstitutional levy as something that must be made up?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is the gentleman opposed to raising revenue to finance the farm program which was enacted by Congress?

Mr. TREADWAY. Does the gentleman want to yield me time enough to answer that question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Everything that is done by the Congress to aid agriculture and help the distressed and those in need of assistance from the Government always meets the bitter opposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and that is what this tax bill is proposed for—to raise revenue to take care of the conditions I have mentioned.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I yield; but I want to say this, because my time is about up: Inasmuch as the President has conformed with what the gentleman from Massachusetts thinks should be his policy and has left it to the Ways and Means Committee to originate a tax bill, does he not think it would look better and would be more consistent and more helpful—and I am not calling any names or being personal—if the members of the subcommittee charged with this responsibility that has been placed on our doorstep, instead of making partisan speeches, would sit in with the subcommittee and help write the tax bill? [Applause.] I would like to have this question answered.

It is very, very easy to criticize. Anybody can criticize. Destructive criticism is always easy, but constructive statesmanship is always very difficult; but, thank God, destructive criticism and throwing obstacles in the pathway of the administration cannot stop nor delay the onward march of the present administration in its courageous battles for the people! [Applause.] This is one thing that such criticism cannot accomplish, and I suggest to my friend now that he can employ his time for a much better purpose.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I thought I was to have a little time this afternoon before the bill was to be read for amendment. I do want to make one or two observations. It has recently been stated that this particular tax bill is really the answer to the politician's prayer. We, on this side, are criticized by you for lack of constructive criticism. We may, however, be pardoned if we make some comment on your rejoicings over the fact that you can tax only the corporations and not run the risk of losing votes by enacting a bill affecting all the people.

I feel that we shall have to continue to offer our criticisms, although whatever arguments we present will never be regarded as constructive by you on the other side of the House. That could hardly be expected.

But, gentlemen, why have a tax bill now, anyhow? Why have a tax bill to recoup these special losses while showing no concern to enact one to meet other requirements? Why is it that billions can be expended for other purposes and no new taxes to meet them be suggested? The President's vagueness in his explanation of his Budget does not furnish an answer that is very satisfactory to the ordinary person.

Let us borrow some more money, under the Eccles theory that the more money we borrow the more the banks will have and the greater will be our prosperity. Let us create more and more bank deposits by the issuance of bonds, if that is really such an aid to recovery. The more bonds we issue the less interest thereon we seem to pay. These have been your own arguments.

Can it be that you really see the approach of the danger point? Do you begin to suspect the Eccles' theory? Why not continue to issue our notes and create bank credits? When the Government spends the money, others receive it, and it is redeposited, keeping the banks eager to invest it and welcoming more and more Government borrowings. You insist that our credit is excellent. It seems to you that the more we owe the better our credit. That is your claim.

Again I say, if borrowing money brings about the return of prosperity, why have a tax bill? [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and, as I quoted from a letter, I ask unanimous consent to put in the whole letter.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY BUILDING AND GROUNDS

Salaries: For chief engineer and all personal services at rates of pay provided by law, $46,720.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. An effort was made a short time ago to reduce the amount of money that is to be supplied for the cost of telephone and telegraph from $95,000 to $90,000. The amendment was defeated. I call the attention of the membership of the Committee to the fact that a great deal of money can be saved by Congressmen themselves, as appears from the testimony of Mr. Elgen, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia. At my request Mr. Elgen appeared before the Committee to tell us the status of the telephone and telegraph companies with regard to public institutions in the District as compared with private institutions. He informed us that the Government rates are exactly the same so far as telephones are concerned, as the rates charged to private concerns. That is, 1¼ cents per telephone call if it is interdepartmental and 3 cents per call if it is outside or from a department to some person or corporation or institution outside of the Government. He called attention to the fact that very often the secretaries or the Congressmen themselves in the legislative establishment pick up the phone and ask for number so and so. If the call is put in in that way the charge to the Government is 3 cents, but if the secretary of a Congressman will pick up the phone and ask for Government, they get the General Government exchange, which is connected with every department of the Government in the District of Columbia, and the cost of the call then is only 1¼ cents. I call attention to this fact because literally thousands of dollars could be saved if we would remind ourselves when we pick up the phone and want to get a department of the Government to simply ask for "Government" and get the Government exchange and then ask for the particular department we desire to speak with. Otherwise the call will go through the general District exchange, and the Government will be charged 3 cents for each call.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman has touched on an important question. I find there are two or three very fine organizations here among the secretaries. I have a secretary that I think is highly efficient and he is just as economical as any Scotchman that I have ever met. He does not know anything about that rule or regulation, and we should get that information before these associations of secretaries so that they will put it into operation.

Mr. KELLER. And I would like to know how many members on this floor do know what the gentleman has just told us. I did not.

Mr. BOILEAU. But why should they have such a regulation? If a call originates from my office for the Department of Agriculture, the operator who takes the call ought to know that it is a Government call. Why should the telephone company be permitted to have such a ridiculous regulation?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. There is a modification at the point the gentleman suggests. If the general operator in the basement of the House Office Building is on her toes, she will get the Government exchange, if not, the call will go through the general District exchange.

Mr. BOILEAU. Are not the operators in the House Office Building employees of the House of Representatives?

Mr. DOCKWEILER. They are.

Mr. BOILEAU. If they are so inefficient that they do not put the call through at the cheapest rate, we should put in somebody who will.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. They should, and I am bringing the matter up so that they will know they will not make any mistakes in the future.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOTANIC GARDEN

Salaries: For the Director and other personal services (including not exceeding $3,000 for miscellaneous temporary labor without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended), $86,262; all under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill, or any other member of the committee, just what is the function, governmental or otherwise, of the Botanic Garden?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I came to Congress in 1932, and the first thing that struck my attention when I came up Pennsylvania Avenue was this beautiful new Botanic Garden Conservatory. I made some inquiry and found that it was constructed at an expense of a million dollars. I made further inquiry and found that the Botanic Garden started back some 80 years ago. I further found that in the Botanic Garden we have some specimens of plant life that are very valuable. For instance, in 1932 the appropriation for the maintenance of the Botanic Garden was $174,000. Your committee has reduced that until this year it is only $115,000. Since the time the new conservatory was built a Hollander was employed who has developed many of the specimens of plant and flower life to a degree that they exceed any in the United States or in the world. Over 100,000 people went into that conservatory last year to view these different specimens. The azalea group we have in the Botanic Garden is rated to be the highest developed and finest azalea group in the world.

Also we have the nurseries at Poplar Point. Poplar Point was taken over by the Government in 1920, and just last year the committee thought of doing away with Poplar Point, but, after making a careful study, they found that Poplar Point could serve a great economic mission if we would plant some of our plant life down there and transfer it up here after it had grown a year or two, instead of paying big money to get our plant life. For instance, tens of thousands of dollars were spent for shrubbery in landscaping the ground around the United States Supreme Court Building which was finished last summer. If this Poplar Point plant had been developed as it should have been we could have raised all that shrubbery and brought it up here and transplanted it. That is in the process of being done now. I would like to ask the members of the committee to go down to the Botanic Garden at Poplar Point and see the progress that is being made. It would not be fair to do away with the Botanic Garden after all this money has been expended to put it in the fine shape it is, until it has been given a fair chance.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have nothing to say against the Botanic Garden, and I am not seeking to contradict the statements that there are some rather valuable plants there, but it strikes me that Congress is going pretty far out of its ordinary function in the maintenance of an agricultural experiment station. It should belong to some other department of the Government.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Under the law it comes under Congress, and it does not come under any department. It does not come under the Department of Agriculture, for instance. It would be necessary to pass another law before it could be given to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They do other things down there besides raising valuable plants, do they not? For example, do they deal in cut flowers?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No, sir; no cut flowers whatever. Even the chairman cannot get a cut flower at any time. [Laughter.]

Mr. WADSWORTH. This has aroused my curiosity for a great many years. I have been trying to find out just what governmental function this Botanic Garden performs.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Educational functions.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am greatly relieved. [Laughter and applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Librarian, Chief Assistant Librarian, and other personal services, $911,365.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I just want to take this opportunity to congratulate this committee upon the very fine presentation they have made in their report and hearings upon the Library of Congress. I know of nothing more important to the welfare of the boys and girls, and even the men and women, of America than this fine library.

I have long been interested in books and reading, and I feel that I know the influence that the reading of good books has been to the youth of the land. For many years it was my ambition to build up a library that would be well-balanced and would fit into one's scheme of life. After many years I have been successful in accumulating more than 6,000 volumes, and I can safely assert that the influence of those books has been of vital importance to me.

Palmer, in his great book on Self-Cultivation in English, aptly says:

He is unwise, however busy, who does not have his loved authors veritable friends in whom he may seek refuge in the intervals of work and by whose influence he enlivens, refines, enriches, and emboldens his own limited existence.

And Milton, in his splendid essay Liberty of Printing, in comparing men and books, says:

Many a man lives a burden to the earth, but a good book is the precious lifeblood of a master spirit embalmed and treasured up on purpose to a life beyond life.

Because of my interest in this subject I desire to call your attention to the fact that the evolution of the Congressional Library in this country has been very remarkable indeed. In 1800 this Congress appropriated $5,000 as the nucleus of a library. In 1814, as you know, at the time of the British invasion, the Library, which was located in this Capitol, was partly burned. Three thousand volumes of that small library were destroyed. Shortly after that our Government bought from the Thomas Jefferson estate his very fine library of 6,000 volumes, the largest private library then in the United States. Again, in 1851, a fire swept the Library, which was still located in this building. As a result of that fire only 20,000 volumes out of 55,000 remained. Then a peculiar thing happened. It required 13 years on the floor of this Congress in debate, in discussion, and in study to convince the people of the United States and to convince Congress that a library was of great public necessity and, therefore, should be properly housed. Finally, after 13 years of debate, the great Congressional Library, as we now know it, was organized. In 1897 the fine building that we see here, with 14 acres of floor space, with more cubic contents than this entire Capitol, was constructed. Now we in America can look the British Museum Library in the face, we can look the Bibliotheque Nationale in the face, and say that today America has the largest library in the world.

I know of nothing that is of more vital importance to America than a fine library and a fine collection of books. At this time over 7,750,000 books, maps, and charts are in this great Congressional Library.

In 1934 the Congress again started a new addition, which will give 20 acres more of floor space, and an investment of over $15,000,000 in buildings and grounds alone, aside from the maintenance, and cost of the books, all in the interest of this fine Library.

Originally it was built for the Members of Congress. Now it is called the great university of the American people. Of all things in my Government, I am proud that the Congressional Library exists, not only for the 30,000,000 boys and girls of America, but for our 125,000,000 people, because each year over a million people come here to visit the Library of this country, and receive an inspiration for reading and study that will favorably affect their entire lives.

I just wanted to take the time of Congress for a few moments to express my appreciation of the fine way in which the committee has handled this matter and to say that there is one thing that we can agree on, Democrats and Republicans, that when we build a fine library for America, we are building something that will bring about the perpetuity of the institutions in which you and I believe. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. [Laughter.]

As chairman of the Committee on the Library, I simply want to say that I more than enthusiastically endorse what my colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY] has just said so eloquently about the Library of Congress. The Committee on the Library has legislative charge of the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, and the Botanic Garden, and is one of the two committees of the House of Representatives which exist by virtue of a law. Our Library and the Smithsonian Institution are known wherever books are known and wherever science is appreciated. We are hereafter, through the cooperative understanding of this body, to have a center from which beauty shall radiate to all the people of our country until the world shall know our Botanic Garden, even as it today knows our Library and Smithsonian Institution. I also want to call the attention of this body to the fact that the Library had to fight its way with this body for every dollar it got until recent years. Now we are all justly proud of our Library of Congress, and have very properly forgotten the struggles it had to make for the money required to make it great.

We are faced with the same condition at present in relation to the Botanic Garden which for so many years halted and limited the development of our great Library of Congress. Must we go through the same sort of scrimping and pinching which for many years delayed the development of our Library? Certainly not, if the men and women of this body who are blessed with vision shall get a real understanding of what a great National Botanic Garden may mean to our country. Because during the past 2 years a great body of scientists have been studying this subject, a bill has been drafted by them and redrafted to meet this great need. At the next session of Congress this bill will be presented to create a real Botanic Garden the equal and ultimately to be the superior of any other botanic garden in the world, just exactly as today our Library is the superior of any other library in the world.

I want to call the attention of this body to the fact that the idea we have of "getting by" and doing things by "the law of scrimp and pinch" never has got us anywhere and never will. When we do things in the interest of the American people we should do them with a fair understanding of what they mean, and finance them in proportion to their importance. Every country except the United States has botanical gardens worth going around the world to see. This Botanic Garden of ours at present is just a nucleus around which we shall build a real botanic garden, with a system of education in beauty that will be as far reaching as our Library of Congress is in the realm of books. Associated with it will go hand in hand the dissemination of science in relation to the beautification of homes, parks, and playgrounds, that our people may enjoy and profit by the great knowledge we are gathering from the 400 other botanical gardens throughout all the cultured countries of the world in relation to botany and what it means to our civilization.

Mr. Chairman, I could not permit this opportunity to pass without making these remarks. It has been a great pleasure to me to lead the work in forming this bill which is to be presented at the next session of Congress. It will be a bill that will meet the full approval of the best scholars and best thinkers in America. I want this body to have in mind that it will be presented, if not by myself, then certainly by someone else, for the consideration of the next session of this House. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchases may be made from the foregoing appropriation under the "Government Printing Office", as provided for in the Printing Act approved January 12, 1895, and without reference to section 4 of the act approved June 17, 1910 (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 7), concerning purchases for executive departments.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

In view of the remarks relative to the Botanic Garden, and also the Library of Congress, I want to toss an orchid to the Public Printer. I do not know whether it will be furnished by the Botanic Garden or not.

Before doing so, however, I think it is worth while to take 5 minutes of your time to refer to this large establishment down by the Union Station employing 5,500 persons, the largest manufacturing establishment certainly of the Government in the District of Columbia.

I was just looking back over some history, and I found that in 1819 it was provided that—

The Senate and House shall each choose, by ballot, a printer to execute the work of Congress; the printer chosen required to give bond to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House, respectively, for the prompt, accurate, and neat execution of the work; and it was also provided that nothing shall preclude the choice of the same printer by the Senate and House.

Then, in 1852:

Congress authorized that a Public Printer be elected for each House of Congress, to do the public printing for the Congress for which he or they may be chosen, and such printing for the executive departments and bureaus of the Government as may be delivered to him or them by the Superintendent of the Public Printing; and the rates of compensation for such printing prescribed.

So the office of the Public Printer was established in the year 1852 primarily to do the printing for Congress, and it has remained under the jurisdiction of the Congress ever since. That is why the appropriation for this work is contained in this bill.

In 1867 Congress authorized a—

Congressional Printer, to be elected by the Senate, who was required to be a practical printer, to take charge of and manage the Government Printing Office under the laws in force in relation to the Superintendent of Public Printing and the execution of the printing and binding, and to be deemed an officer of the Senate.

it was enacted that so much of the act of 1867 as provided for the election of a Congressional Printer by the Senate shall cease and be of no effect from and after the date of the first vacancy occurring in said office; that the title of said officer shall hereafter be Public Printer.

By act of Congress in 1876 it was provided—that the President shall appoint by and with the advice and consent of the Senate a suitable person to the office of Public Printer.

Here I wish to say that while at the time the Government Printing Office was established it was designed primarily to do printing for Congress, at the present time the printing for Congress is only 20 percent of the total work in the Government Printing Office.

As chairman of the House Committee on Printing, I was invited to appear, and did appear, before the Committee handling this bill while it was considering the item for the Government Printing Office. I therefore had the pleasure of listening to the Public Printer present the facts substantiating his recommendations to your committee, and the privilege of extending a few comments of my own.

The work of the world's largest printing plant is worthy of consideration from many angles, but in my limited time I will attempt to touch on only three of them—first, the volume of work it handles; second, the efficient manner in which it is managed; and, third, the service it performs for the other branches of the Government.

Some idea of the volume of work performed may be grasped from the following figures taken from the Public Printer's Annual Report covering the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935:

Ems of type set.....	2,241,746,000
Book pages printed.....	2,361,459
Actual press impressions.....	984,590,000
Postal cards printed.....	1,857,152,220
Money-order forms printed.....	228,187,000
Copies of job work.....	4,847,444,000
Publications distributed.....	428,950,907
Charges for completed work.....	$16,465,431
Salaries and wages.....	$10,797,879.20

The office is now carrying a burden approximately 25 percent greater than that carried during the war period. To mention only a few items, there has been an increase of 863,359 in the number of book pages printed, an increase of 103,907,000 actual press impressions, an increase of 705,165,220 in the number of postal cards printed, 87,308,000 more money-order forms printed, 1,174,522,000 more copies of job work, and a jump in the number of publications distributed from 55,001,603 in 1918 to 428,950,907 in 1935.

This increased production has been taken on in a plant which has been overcrowded and unscientifically arranged for the last 20 years. It happens, I may say, that one of the buildings still being occupied was purchased during the administration of President Lincoln, and is, I think, the oldest public building in the District of Columbia. It would long since have been demolished as a fire hazard if it were not the fact that it is a public building.

Public Printers since 1913 have been recommending legislation authorizing a new building for the Government Printing Office, but it was not until the present Public Printer, who so clearly saw the reasons and necessity therefor, placed the proposition before Congress with such logical and unanswerable argument that the request was granted. The authorization for the building was contained in the act of August 12, 1935, Public, 260, which made $2,000,000 immediately available for expenditure, with a limitation on the total amount to be expended in connection with the construction of the building of $5,885,000.

It is estimated that with the new building—which we hope will be under way by May 1—the Public Printer will be able to reduce the Government's printing bill by $850,000, or approximately 5 percent. Some of the major items on which savings will be made as a result of the construction of the new building are:

1. The elimination of repairs to old buildings..... $25,000
2. Reduction in night work..... 200,000
(By the most advantageous use of additional floor space which will be provided by the new building, it is estimated that the day production can be speeded up to the point where it will be possible to reduce the night work by the figure indicated.)
3. Warehouse rent..... 15,000
4. Senate and House folding-room expense..... 10,000
(By providing space in the new warehouse for the folding rooms, this amount can be saved in rental and trucking expense alone.)
5. Reduction in freight-handling charges..... 100,000
(The new warehouse is to be so constructed that freight cars will be run directly into it. This will mean that all incoming paper stock can be taken direct from the car to the stockroom and, in the case of postal-card and money-order stock, directly to the production room, as the trucking from freight yards to the Government Printing Office will be unnecessary. Paper will be shipped on skids, rather than in boxes. This will not only facilitate the handling of the paper but will keep the paper off the floor and will eliminate the waste caused from dust and dirt and the damage incident to unboxing and unpacking.)
6. Savings by straight-line production..... 500,000

Sufficient space will make possible the placing of machinery on the floor and in the group where it belongs. Due to lack of space—and to prevent as far as possible dangerous overloading—it is now necessary in some cases to place machines in sections other than those in which they belong—sometimes in another building and two or three floors above or below their proper location. This, of course, results in much extra handling, which can be eliminated in the new building by placing machines in their proper locations and by eliminating the unnecessary handling involved in getting the work through the plant at the proper time.

The outstanding saving, therefore, will result from the improved arrangement of the plant and the equipment therein, planned by a Public Printer who, as a result of 28 years' actual experience which has covered all phases of the industry, knows how to plan such a plant as the Government Printing Office, will be in order to get the best results from straight-line production.

The $850,000 I just quoted as the possible saving which will result from the occupancy of the new building was arrived at by reducing the conservative estimates to a most conservative figure; but even if this sum is cut approximately in half the saving will still be sufficient to liquidate the investment in the building, if properly managed, within 10 years.

Added to the increased amount of work which the Government Printing Office has been called upon to perform in overcrowded quarters, the working hours of the employees have been reduced from 44 to 40 per week, and the pay cut has been restored. These increases in labor costs have been absorbed without any appreciable increase in the prices charged by the Government Printing Office for the work it performs for the other departments. This was made possible, of course, by the numerous economies effected by the Public Printer in the method of handling the work. Some of these changes are:

The adoption of a universal metal for all typesetting machines, in lieu of the former method, which involved the use of a separate metal for each class of machine.

The discarding of brass leads and rules, which will result in economy, as all of this material will now be made in the office and the elimination of the brass will render unnecessary the hand sorting of all discarded type.

The adoption of the point system in all type measures, which is the established system in all commercial plants and that around which all typesetting machines are built.

The adoption of a new printing-ink formula in order to give a greater coverage of surface and a quicker drying ink. The quicker drying ink is of great assistance in handling rush work.

The method used in making composition rollers for all printing presses has been changed. This new process is giving much longer life to the rollers.

The installation of modern casting boxes, which will be used in casting flat stereotype plates.

The installation of automatic self-inking proof presses, which will permit the taking of dry, instead of wet, proofs in the printing sections of the office. Dry proofs not only facilitate proofreading, but they provide much clearer proofs for the departments.

The Public Printer is installing a modern cost-finding system, which will enable him to determine the actual cost of each operation performed in the plant and the value of the material produced by the operation. This will enable him to fix his prices more intelligently and will be of inestimable value in arranging to handle the work in the most economical manner.

The Public Printer outlined to the committee many other important changes which he has made in the Government Printing Office. These, and also a more detailed description of the changes I have mentioned, will be found in the hearings held on the bill now under consideration, beginning on page 258.

I said I would touch briefly on three points. I believe I have covered two—volume of work and efficiency in management—as well as my time will permit. The third is the service the Government Printing Office renders to the Government as a whole. The demands upon the establishment are astounding. We have to look no further than the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for an illustration of one of the big jobs performed by the Office. I never fail to appreciate the fact that I can receive a copy of the RECORD, regardless of the number of pages it may contain, by 7 o'clock in the morning, and to realize at the same time that maybe some of the copy did not get into the hands of the Public Printer until midnight; that he has 37,000 copies in addition to mine to get ready and mail out, and that the RECORD was only one of a hundred rush jobs he was trying to get through the plant at the same time. It has often been said that, taking into consideration the time allowed for printing and the condition of the manuscript sent to the Government Printing Office, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is the most accurate publication in the United States. To illustrate further some of the pressing demands made upon the Public Printer for service, I want to cite a few specific cases which have come to my attention as vice chairman of the Joint Committee on Printing and as chairman of the House Printing Committee.

On the afternoon of Friday, February 21, an order was received from the Treasury Department for 100 copies of a brief for the use of the Board of Tax Appeals. The order was accompanied with advice that delivery must be had by Monday morning. The brief made 539 pages. Type was set, proofread, corrections made, and the job was printed and delivered by the time requested, in spite of the fact that Saturday, a holiday, and Sunday intervened.

Another example of the service which the Office extends to the departments is the recent order for 2,230 nickel-faced, blocked electrotypes for bonds and Treasury notes, which were to be printed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. The copy reached the Government Printing Office at 6:30 p. m., March 3, with the request that sufficient plates be ready by 8 a. m., March 4, to start the presses and that the entire job be delivered at the earliest possible moment. One hundred and five plates were delivered at 8 a. m. the next morning; 464 more were delivered during the day; and the remaining 1,661 plates were delivered at 9 p. m. that day—a total of 26½ hours from the time the copy was delivered to the Government Printing Office—and the handling of this job did not interfere with or retard the making of plates for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or the other rush work of a similar nature.

Two orders were received from the Bureau of the Census, aggregating 31,830,000 copies of a card 6 by 4 inches, which was to be printed and punched with a hole at the top of the card. The cards were to be tied in packages of 1,000, making 31,830 separate packages. The orders were completed in approximately 30 days.

The Works Progress Administration ordered 8,750,000 copies of a form 6 by 16 inches to be printed on seven different colors of paper. The forms were to be printed, perforated, gathered, and made into pads of 25 sets each, and delivery was required at the earliest possible moment. The order was received February 3 and was completed February 20.

That the service rendered to the departments by the Public Printer is of great assistance to them in carrying out their functions is indicated by the numerous letters of appreciation he receives from the department heads.

In order to illustrate to you the tenor of these letters I am going to read into the RECORD three of them taken at random from the Public Printer's files. Time and space limit my selection to three.

AMERICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
INTERIOR BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1935.

Mr. AUGUSTUS E. GIEGENGACK,
The Public Printer, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GIEGENGACK: You and your organization are entitled to a warm word of thanks for the splendid appearance of the program for the forthcoming World Power Conference.

Those who had charge of preparing the manuscript tell me that they received courtesy at every turn from your staff. The outcome certainly reflects credit on everyone connected with it. It is one of the most impressive public documents that I have seen.

Speaking for the executive committee, please accept our cordial appreciation and very warm thanks.

Yours very sincerely,

MORRIS L. COOKE,
Chairman, Executive Committee.

UNITED STATES TARIFF COMMISSION,
Washington, February 12, 1936.

Mr. A. E. GIEGENGACK,
Public Printer, Government Printing Office,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GIEGENGACK: I desire to convey to you the official thanks of the Tariff Commission for the notable assistance given us recently by your office in printing for prompt distribution the report entitled "Recent Development in the Foreign Trade of Japan, Particularly in Relation to the Trade of the United States." Upon hearing from our secretary the need for prompt action in this case, you placed the facilities of the Government Printing Office behind this job in such a way that the finished edition of a book, running into 207 pages, much of it statistical tabulations, was in our hands in a few days after we placed the manuscript with you. This exceedingly prompt service enabled us to place the printed report before the Members of Congress and the heads of the executive establishments very shortly after the new congressional session opened. We consider your part in it a distinct service in the public interest.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT L. O'BRIEN, Chairman.

FEDERAL EMERGENCY ADMINISTRATOR OF PUBLIC WORKS,
Washington, October 25, 1935.

Mr. AUGUSTUS E. GIEGENGACK,
Public Printer, Government Printing Office,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GIEGENGACK: I wish to express my deep appreciation for the assistance rendered the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration by the Government Printing Office in connection with the preparation of specifications for 26 housing projects.

When it became necessary to issue specifications immediately for these projects, it was found that the mimeographing facilities of the Interior Department were so overburdened they could offer no assurance of quick delivery, and we were therefore compelled to request your organization to handle the major portion of the printing upon exceedingly short notice. Your response was complete cooperation.

The printing was complex and the copy submitted to you was, of necessity, not in the best possible form; notwithstanding this, your Office accepted the assignment with sympathetic understanding and proceeded to complete the task in splendid style, working day and night as well as on last Saturday and Sunday.

I wish particularly to commend Mr. William A. Mitchell and Mr. R. W. Teague, the chiefs of the day and night forces of your Planning and Job Composing Divisions, as well as their subordinate employees.

Sincerely yours,

HAROLD L. ICKES, Administrator.

But to my mind one of the most outstanding illustrations of the service rendered by the Public Printer is the work he performed in connection with the printing of the applications for payment of adjusted-service certificates. The Veterans' Administration placed an order with the Public Printer for 6,000,000 copies of the application as soon as the act authorizing the payment of the adjusted-service certificates became law. The Public Printer furnished a proof of the job to the Administrator the day the order was received, and the next day 2,000,000 copies of the application were delivered to the Veterans' Administration Building. The entire order was completed in less than 48 hours after it was received. The Administrator, General Hines, was so impressed with the job that immediately upon receipt of the applications he addressed the following letter to the Public Printer:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, January 29, 1936.

HON. AUGUSTUS E. GIEGENGACK,
The Public Printer, Government Printing Office,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GIEGENGACK: Reference is made to Veterans' Administration requisition no. 550, for printing 6,000,000 copies of form no. 1701, known as the application for payment of adjusted-service certificate.

Your personal cooperation in the production of this large quantity of printed matter in 2 days is a service to the Veterans' Administration and to the veterans of the World War which is highly appreciated.

Needless to say such an accomplishment is most creditable to your organization, and I take the liberty of asking you to convey my thanks to all who rendered such valuable and timely assistance to the Veterans' Administration.

Sincerely yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

In conclusion, I desire to add that the affability and personality of the present Public Printer have made him very popular with the employees of the Government Printing Office. His knowledge of the printing industry gained from 28 years of actual experience, part of which was gained as mechanical superintendent of the Stars and Stripes, published in France for the A. E. F. during the World War, has given them confidence in his ability to manage properly this large establishment. This fact, coupled with his well-known reputation for fair dealing, has improved the morale of the employees to the extent that it has been possible to accomplish the results which I have just mentioned.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to talk briefly at this time about the provision covering the legislative reference service. We in Wisconsin count the late Dr. Charles McCarthy as one of the great sons of that State. Dr. McCarthy was the founder of the idea of a legislative reference library for the use of legislators in this country. The legislative reference library at Madison, Wis., was operated for many years under his direction, and after his death it continued under the supervision of Mr. Edwin Witte, who has been executive director of the President's Committee on Economic Security. I mention this background because legislative reference libraries have been established in many States and also in the Congressional Library at Washington patterned after the original library in Wisconsin. But, unfortunately, in many places where the Wisconsin idea of a vital, functioning legislative service has been copied, it has merely become the case of "the letter of the law killeth but the spirit maketh to live."

I have the feeling that the legislative reference library here is completely failing to accomplish the purpose for which it was established. I have frequently had occasion to call the legislative reference library for facts on various matters that have come up for our consideration. Invariably the type of information that I have received from them is such that they apparently do not know what it is all about.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AMLIE. I yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. I can supplement the gentleman's statement by saying that not only did they not know what it was all about but they could not handle the subject, and I had to write home to our own legislative reference library in order to get what I wanted.

Mr. AMLIE. May I ask if the gentleman received what he wanted after writing to Madison, Wis.?

Mr. SAUTHOFF. On each occasion.

Mr. AMLIE. I have had the same experience. I have had occasion several times to write to the legislative reference library at Madison and have been able to secure the information that I desired and have not been able to get similar information from the legislative reference service in the Congressional Library.

The library in Madison, Wis., does not have as large an appropriation as the legislative service branch of our own Congressional Library. The appropriation is much smaller, although I cannot give the exact figure.

Mr. Chairman, I feel the difficulty here is that the work is being done apparently by people who do not realize for what purpose they are clipping papers and accumulating information. I feel it is a situation where perhaps a man under civil service has been charged with the administration of a function to which he is not equal.

I venture to say that very few Members of Congress make any use of the legislative reference service in the Library of Congress; and still if this legislative service were able to render the type of assistance to legislators that was contemplated when this service was created, I am sure that each and every Member of this body would have frequent occasion to call upon the legislative reference service for assistance.

I am not making this statement with the intention of criticizing the present administration. As we all know, the Congressional Library is under civil service, and for that reason; calling attention to the failure of this department to function as intended, cannot be considered as actuated by any spirit of partisanship.

While the performance of routine duties can properly be left to civil service, it has often occurred to me that the performance of tasks requiring imagination and initiative must be kept upon a different basis. The trouble with the civil service is that there is a tendency to reduce all these tasks to a purely routine basis. For this reason there has been a tendency on the part of the legislative reference service to delve into inconsequential matter for the sole reason that vital questions were also controversial, hence to be avoided, as a means of escaping criticism and holding onto the pay roll.

Unfortunately, if the legislative reference service is to perform a real function it must of necessity deal with facts that relate to highly controversial questions.

After all, this is the very reason that a legislative reference service was created. It was created in the belief that a great deal of saving in time and energy might be effected, if a legislator could go to some nonpartisan agency and secure reliable information.

This is certainly the way that things have worked out in Wisconsin. Many legislators have come to the statehouse with notions about facts that were wholly erroneous.

Many of these men, however, were wholly honest and sincere. Many of these men have taken their problems up with the director of the legislative reference service or one of his assistants, who in many instances have been able to dispel some of these erroneous ideas with consequent gain to the public and everyone concerned.

I have had occasion to look at the report of the Librarian of Congress. There is listed in this report a record of the subjects to which the employees of the legislative reference service have devoted themselves during the past year. In my opinion, most of the subjects listed have had nothing to do with vital, controversial questions.

The reason for this, in my opinion, is due to the fact that information of this kind cannot be secured from the legislative reference service.

I am not urging that the appropriation for the legislative reference service ought to be stricken out of the bill. Nevertheless I do wish to state that we are not getting value for the $92,990 that we are spending for this service. In my opinion, my own experience with this department in the Seventy-second and the Seventy-fourth Congresses has been such as to lead me to the inescapable conclusion that the whole department ought to be completely reorganized under competent direction.

I have never met the acting director, Dr. Schulz, although it is only too apparent to those of us who are familiar with the workings of a well-managed legislative reference service that there should be a complete reorganization in the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress.

I do not know whether the employees of that service are competent or not, but I want to say that the civil service should not be made the means of maintaining incompetents in office. Whether it is the director who is incompetent or the personnel, should make little difference insofar as the Members of this body are concerned. For our purpose it is sufficient to know that we are entitled to competent legislative service and that we are not getting it and have not been getting it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear the gentleman from North Carolina speak about the Government Printing Office.

The Congress has had some experience in naming various officials to positions for a long tenure of office. For instance, take the Comptroller General, whose term is 15 years. Although the gentleman is a Republican, I do not think there is a Democrat in the House who would not say that the Government has been fortunate to have a man like Mr. McCarl in the position he has held for 15 years. [Applause.]

We have appointed men on the Board of Tax Appeals for 10 years. We have appointed men on various commissions for 8 and 10 years. Beyond question, this has proved to be very beneficial. Some of the men appointed have been Democrats and some have been Republicans, but it makes for better efficiency when the right men are kept in large and important Government agencies.

Mr. Chairman, the Government Printing Office is a great institution. As the gentleman from North Carolina says, over 5,000 people are employed there. The former Public Printer held office, I think, for over 8 years. With all due respect to that gentleman, practically all his experience he secured right here in the Capitol as clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing. The present Public Printer, Augustus E. Giegengack, has been in the printing business for 30 years. I never met the man in my life until a few nights ago when I ran into him at a social affair. I have, however, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures, had some business with his office and I have read the hearings relative to his accomplishments. I did not even know what State he came from until I looked it up. What I have learned is that he is a man with experience—business and executive experience—and as a result it has already been demonstrated that the President made no mistake in selecting him for this very important office.

I learn that at the age of 25, 7 years after he entered the printing business, he was in charge of the printing division of a large mail-order house. During the war he was in France and he handled the production of the Stars and Stripes, which had a circulation of over 500,000 copies. Two hundred enlisted men were in this establishment. Since 1920 he was in business for himself, so you see that he came to the Government with years of experience, including 2 years as president of the International Printing House Craftsmen, and responsible positions with other organizations.

If this man continues to make the record he has since he assumed office less than 2 years ago, it seems to me that it would be well for the Congress to keep him in his position. Mr. LAMBETH has told you the savings he has brought about, and there is no doubt that you have a happy family at the Government Printing Office. We all know the trouble the former Public Printer had with some of his employees. I am not criticizing Mr. Carter's service, but for some reason he just did not get along smoothly with the employees. He issued some regulations that I did not approve of, including the one that prevented an apprentice from being married while serving as such. I am very glad the present Public Printer has set that order aside.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that in some of these great agencies, where practically every employee is subject to civil service, it would be well for us to consider keeping a man who shows his efficiency on the job, and not remove him every time there is a change in administration.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] smiles. I assume he smiles because the present head of the Government Printing Office happens to be a Democrat. I may say that there is a man at the head of the Bureau of Engraving who is a Republican, who has been retained in his present place by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. REED of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York, as I mentioned his name.

Mr. REED of New York. I believe there is a man by the name of Huse connected with the Government Printing Office, and he has been there many, many years. I do not know what his politics may be. I was smiling, not in opposition to the gentleman's statement but because I thought of the fine record this man Huse has in the Government Printing Office. I happen to know him personally.

FEDERAL REGISTER

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I now want to call attention to a part of the committee report. I am pleased to note that the subcommittee did not give the Federal Register all the money asked for. You say you are putting them on trial, or, rather, to see if the Register is justified.

The statement is made in the report that it will be determined whether or not this is a necessary activity. Although it was an unusual procedure, I introduced a bill to repeal the Federal Register Act before it ever went into effect.

Mr. Chairman, I request every Member on the floor of the House to decide this question from his or her experience. Let us take the question of mail, and I get as much mail I believe as any Member. We do not receive a request for a Government regulation more than once a month, and we do not receive a request for copy of an Executive order once in every 6 months. Now, here is the situation. This Federal Register is going to be printed 5 days a week, just like the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Did you know that? It is going to cost the Government this year several hundred thousand dollars. In my opinion, there is absolutely no necessity for it. You say you are going to give it a trial for 8 months. At the expiration of that time you will find how many people have bought the Federal Register. Check up on that. The public will be charged $1 a month for it. I learned that much the other day. Now, who is going to pay for this Federal Register in the long run? The Treasury of the United States is going to pay for it, and not the individuals who buy it, because we are not going to be able to sell it so that it will be self-supporting. Remember that statement next year and see if I am right. Mark what I say, I warn you to watch this activity. It is just another Government agency created by the Congress that is going to grow, grow, grow.

One reason why it is going to grow if you do not watch it is because you did not put the positions under civil service. You permitted appointments from outside the civil service, not only for the Federal Register but for the Archives. For both the Archives and the Federal Register you will have a force next year of over 250 employees, none under civil service.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say right now that I do not propose to vote, whether my party is in power or not, to put people in a permanent Government agency without regard to the civil service, because every time you do you make a serious mistake. [Applause.] The Republicans have done this just like the Democrats. When you are in power you make the same mistake the Democrats do. We have both made these mistakes.

If there should be a change in administration, what is going to happen? Just as soon as the change occurs they will be looking for jobs, and these permanent Government agencies where the appointments have been made without regard to the civil-service laws will be cleaned out and more political appointments made. How are you going to operate with any efficiency a permanent Government agency when you clean house every time there is a change in administration? Our constituents would fare better if the places were under civil service, for those qualified in our districts would have an equal chance to secure the appointments. Then again, when positions are not subject to civil service you receive 50 applications for jobs, probably get one person a job, and you have 49 disappointed constituents on your hands.

It seems to me the President, by an Executive order, could provide that every regulation and Executive order issued by a Government agency be deposited with some certain official, where copies could always be secured, and if that was done the taxpayers would be saved a large amount of money, and the Federal Register would not be necessary.

What has happened at this session? The independent offices appropriation bill carries an appropriation for the Federal Register for the next fiscal year. The deficiency bill we passed recently carried a deficiency appropriation for the Federal Register, and this bill carries money to print the Federal Register next year. Think of it, three appropriations from three separate subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee in this session of Congress. We must wait now and see if it is justified.

I want again to urge the Members of the Committee and the House to watch the Federal Register and the National Archives. I know they are the adopted children of some who have secured a number of jobs, and they will not like what I say. However, I do not care what they like, if I happen to be here when the next appropriation comes in for the Federal Register and the National Archives I am going to make them justify the expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

In what I shall say, Mr. Chairman, I shall express my own thought, possibly, more than the thought of the subcommittee, as I am not commissioned in respect of this particular matter to speak for them; but I personally agree very heartily with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] in regard to the bill which, I understand, he has introduced repealing the act creating the Federal Register. I think it certainly should be repealed because we do not have any conception of the depth to which we are going when we attempt to print the vast accumulation of orders and proclamations and all that sort of thing that have been issued. It is perfectly stupendous, and it was testified by Mr. Giegengack, the Public Printer, that there are accumulated orders and proclamations enough to fill a building the size of the Archives Building. Just think of it! The cost is inconceivable.

If we are going into the business of printing this vast accumulation in the Federal Register, we might just as well sign over the United States Treasury to do it.

While I agree perfectly with the gentleman that the law should be repealed, I dissent absolutely from any criticism he may have made of our committee for having made an appropriation in conformity with existing law, and I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri how in the world we could do anything except what we have done? The law is on the statute books and until it is repealed it is the function of the Committee on Appropriations, of course, to recognize the fact that there is such a law, and we have appropriated the very minimum we could appropriate in conformity with our obligation to pay some attention to existing law. We could not challenge an act of Congress and say that we would disobey it.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. MORAN. The gentleman has not pointed it out particularly, but it is a matter of interest to the House, of course, to know that under the reenacted supplemental appropriation act approved on February 11 last this program of publishing the Federal Register 5 days a week will begin within a week or so and continue until July 1, 1936, under that particular appropriation bill. The legislative appropriation bill now before the House provides an appropriation to continue this publication from July 1, 1936, to February 28, 1937. The two appropriation bills combined offer a year's trial of this publication, and out of that experience the next Congress will be in better position to pass upon the question as to its continuance and can repeal the Federal Register Act at that time if it so desires. This legislative appropriation bill provides merely a continuation of the appropriation from July 1, 1936, and failure to support the appropriation in this bill would have the effect of stopping the publication as of July 1, 1936. If and when Congress wishes to stop this publication, let it do so by repealing the Federal Register Act itself. With the act in force the duty of our committee is clearly to provide an adequate appropriation.

Mr. LUDLOW. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. He is quite right. It is very true that the only appropriation we have made in this bill is an appropriation to carry on for 8 months the publication of the current orders and proclamations, by which time we expect Congress will have taken some definite action. Personally I hope this action will be the passage of a bill repealing the act.

We have not provided in this appropriation for the publication of any of the accumulations, because that is like trying to publish all outdoors. We have decided not to do that until Congress can consider the matter more fully and sanely in the light of all the facts and decide whether it ought to go into the matter of publishing this enormous accumulation.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that there is a very considerable item carried in the independent offices bill in addition to this amount for the same purpose?

Mr. LUDLOW. That is true; and that is in consonance with existing law. This appropriation becomes effective on the 1st of July, and this will be continuing what the act of Congress requires.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Are we not under the 5-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. We are; but unanimous consents are in order.

Mr. MICHENER. I ask to be recognized when the gentleman from Maine is through.

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the appropriation for the Federal Register contained in the independent offices appropriation bill for 1937 provides the funds for compiling and editing the material to be published, whereas the appropriation for the Federal Register contained in the legislative appropriation bill for 1937 now before the House provides funds to the Public Printer solely for printing the Federal Register. The two appropriations, therefore, are not for the same purpose at all. However, the combined total of appropriations under both bills should be considered when the House at some later date gives consideration to the question of continuance of the Federal Register. Mr. TABER, by his inquiry, properly calls attention to the fact that in such consideration attention should be given to the costs as measured by appropriations carried in both the independent offices and the legislative appropriation bills.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I realize that there is not the necessity for this Federal Register that there was when the legislation was enacted. Much criticism has been made of the enactment of this law, but we must not lose sight of the fact that at the time the law was enacted we had hundreds and even thousands of regulations, proclamations, and orders issued by different agencies, bureaus, departments, and the President, which in their nature carried penalties and often imprisonment, and men were actually arrested and convicted. One case was carried up to the Supreme Court of the United States before it was ascertained that the order, rule, regulation, or proclamation, which the man was accused of violating had been repealed even before the arrest was made. In a hearing before the Judiciary Committee on the original Federal Register legislation, numerous instances were cited where great hardship was worked upon well-meaning people, simply because they did not know what the law as embodied in these rules and regulations was, and there was no one place where they could look to ascertain what they were expected to do to be law-abiding citizens. Now that condition was recognized as abominable, and it was the primary purpose of the Federal Register to codify and bring together all these rules, regulations, and proclamations having the force and effect of law so far as compliance on the part of the citizens is concerned.

I realize that since the enactment of the Federal Register statute the A. A. A. has departed. The N. R. A. is no more. The Potato Act, the Cotton Act, and the Tobacco Act have been repealed. However, in a recent attempt to revive that which is constitutionally dead, new power is given to the Secretary of Agriculture to issue another flock of rules and regulations; and it might be well to have some place where the well-meaning citizen might repair to find out to what extent his liberties and course of living and pursuit of happiness might have been regulated by an order issued by the Secretary of Agriculture or one of his subordinate bureaus. The principle underlying the Federal Register statute, in the light of present-day bureaucratic activities, and in these days when Congress has delegated so much of its power to others, is correct; and we should not think of repealing this statute until methods of legislation are stabilized in accordance with previous law and constitutional authority.

There is now pending before the Judiciary Committee what is known as the Walsh bill, the purpose of which is to make all existing codes under the defunct N. R. A., and which were in effect on May 27, 1935, effective so far as Government contracts are concerned. This bill has already passed the Senate, and if it is ever favorably reported by the committee and passed by the House the old N. R. A. will have full force and effect so far as Government contracts are concerned. Who knows what the codes in force and effect on May 27, 1935, were? Where can any contractor find this information? Yet the contractor would be penalized if he entered into a contract with the Government and failed to observe these regulations. If for no other reason, this Federal Register statute should not be abandoned until the Congress has finally disposed of the Walsh bill.

I have heretofore spoken at some length, I think, on the necessity of the Federal Register law. And at the time the matter was before the House for consideration I objected strenuously to the provision establishing the set-up outside of the civil service. Following practically all New Deal legislation, however, the law exempted all activities under the statute from the operation of the civil service and the classification laws. This Federal Register is established in the Archives department, and if there is a place where the civil service should obtain, it is in this agency.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is exactly correct so far as the civil service is concerned, and I stand with him 100 percent in this particular. It is splendid to see so good a Democrat take so courageous a stand when "the loaves and fishes" are being distributed. Possibly many capable persons have been selected to work in the Archives department, yet they have all had to pass the political test. We would not expect to find anyone rendering service down there unless he was a deserving partisan. This should not be, and these people should be obliged to meet civil-service requirements; and then should be secure in these technical positions. If there is any place in the Government where expert knowledge and training is required, it is in handling the Government archives. And I for one do not want this new agency honeycombed with politicians. Let us provide by law that these people be selected because of their qualifications and that they be permitted to carry on regardless of change of political administration.

It might not be amiss to call attention to the fact that in recent weeks we have been hearing much about the civil service. After all these agencies and bureaus and new activities have been established and the positions filled with the patronage yardstick as the measure rather than the civil-service yardstick, now all of a sudden the powers that be have discovered that these positions should be under the civil service. The same is true in the post offices and other departments; and we may confidently expect an Executive order or legislation in the not far distant future covering all of these appointees in under the civil-service law. That will be bad enough, but even at that this may be advisable in order to eventually get qualified and not political help in the departments.

Mr. CULKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] made a statement here a moment ago with reference to the standing of the Democratic and Republican Parties on civil service which I cannot permit to go unchallenged. In the February issue of the Atlantic Monthly Mr. Lawrence Sullivan, a member of the press gallery here, had a most illuminating article on the destruction of the national civil service by the present administration. He traces the story of the civil service, dating from the assassination of President Garfield, and shows its steady growth. He tells how, under the Republican administrations since that time, the extension of civil service steadily increased and, until the advent of the present administration, it was well-nigh a completed control of the public service. I quote Mr. Sullivan's article:

The present administration has added roundly 235,000 persons to the direct full-time pay rolls of the Federal Government but only 1 in 107 among the new personnel is under civil service.

"Spoils! Spoils!" cry the defenders of the merit system.

"Emergency! Emergency!" respond Postmaster General James A. Farley and all the beneficiaries of "political clearance."

And the issue here joined promises to influence American affairs profoundly, perhaps fundamentally, for a decade; for if the merit system is to be abandoned, as prevailing policies portend, we soon shall find our national affairs dominated by a whole new complex of primary motivations. When partisan activity degenerates to a bald race for the Treasury trough the very concept of public service shrinks, withers, then dies. Thereupon government ceases to be the testing ground for measures of social adjustment and progress and becomes the mere battleground of the "ins" versus the "outs" for the exactly measured plunder of the public pay roll.

Since 1933 the percentage of Federal positions subject to competitive examination, in relation to the total of full-time employees in the executive branch, has declined steadily from month to month, a phenomenon not experienced previously since the establishment of the United States Civil Service Commission in 1883.

In 1884 only 10.5 percent of those in the executive civil service were under statutory merit regulations. By 1904 this percentage had increased to 51.2. Woodrow Wilson increased it to 67.2, Mr. Coolidge to 74.8, and Mr. Hoover to 80.8. In 1928 the Civil Service Commission was happy to report formally: "Every President since the civil-service law was enacted has extended its scope by Executive order, and each Congress finds new avenues for the activities of the Civil Service Commission." The march of merit was unbroken for half a century. But by the end of the fiscal year 1935 the percentage of competitive places had slipped back to 57, approximately the ratio which prevailed in the period 1906-1908.

Nor is this quarter-century retrogression the whole sorry tale. Unrelenting pressure for the rooting out of civil-service employees in department after department, under pretexts often persuasive enough, has broken the morale of the whole Federal personnel. No longer is hard-won civil-service status regarded as security against a patronage raid. Where the job makers will strike next, nobody ever knows. Heaped upon all the recognized frustrations of top-heavy bureaucratic organization is the new, incessant, and demoralizing intrigue of the appointive against the civil-service personnel.

Of course, civil service makes for efficiency. It encourages the career man. The distinguished occupant of the White House gives lip service to the civil service and then the public service is Farley-ized. National civil service today is a mockery and the ground that has been gained in America heretofore has been lost during this present administration.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Not at this time. The public service has been debauched, and I repeat that civil service as an agent of an added and more efficient public service has been hampered and demoralized by this administration. In this same article, as I recall, it told the story of how in England on the occasion of a recent change in Government, when the party in power went out of power, there were only several hundred places which changed in the whole administration.

In other words, civil-service controlled. In England efficiency and technical equipment were the tests, and not the endorsements of the local politicians. That is probably one of the reasons for England's recovery. That is the only way that the public service can survive along orderly lines and along the lines of civic progress. The distinguished President should not say one thing and then wink his eye at the performance of Mr. Farley, who has definitely debauched and destroyed the growth and development of the civil service of America. No man in the civil service today enjoys a secure, serene tenure of office. Without that the efficiency of the civil-service employee is destroyed.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Does not the gentleman understand that the Commissioner of the Civil Service, in a speech recently, gave facts and figures showing that Mr. Sullivan in that article did not know what he was talking about, and that the Democratic Party had put more people in the civil service, in ratio as they went along, than the Republican Party, and that they had taken departments of the Government and put them under civil service and added to the civil service?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not read that statement of the Commissioner; but if he is saying that, he is differing from every organization in America that has the public service and the extension of the civil service at heart.

Mr. CONNERY. He gave facts and figures on that.

Mr. CULKIN. The article to which I refer seemed to me to be well grounded and well justified. The gentleman from Massachusetts must know that this disgraceful performance is current history, of which the Members on the other side of the aisle, the President, and Field Marshal Farley are the principals in the making.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

I would like to call to the attention of the House, Mr. Chairman, at this time a matter of great importance to the Committee on Labor. I have been chairman of that committee for 5 years. We have only one clerk on that committee. I have called this to the attention of my friend the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, Mr. WARREN, and to another member of the Committee on Accounts, the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, my friend, Mr. COCHRAN. We are expected in the Committee on Labor to answer letters from 48 States in the Union on all sorts of labor problems and questionnaires, and we have only one clerk to answer those letters. That clerk is expected to answer phone calls from Members of the House and Senate and Government departments, keep in order all committee files, call committee members, answer labor queries, arrange the transcripts of hearings, prepare hearings for printing, have at her finger tips information on all the labor bills referred to the committee, the status of those bills, and, in addition, receive visitors from all over the Union who come to the committee room seeking information on labor problems. I will say that that clerk, Miss Mary Cronin, immediately after the last session of Congress, suffered a complete nervous break-down and was incapacitated for work for 3 months as a result of overwork as clerk of the Committee on Labor. When I speak of overwork on that committee, that does not mean night work, because I do not allow my clerk to work nights. I believe in decent hours for people who are working, especially on the Committee on Labor. That committee has always stood for shorter hours and higher wages [applause], and we believe that should begin at home, and we should practice what we preach.

I am appealing to the House. I know what I am up against in trying to get an assistant clerk for that committee. I know what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] is up against, and I know what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] is up against. When I ask for an additional clerk they say, "We know you have a good case, but if we give you an assistant clerk, all the committees are going to ask for an additional clerk"; but I am putting up to the House of Representatives a condition which I believe the Members of the House know exists.

In the last 5 years, due to the conditions of unemployment in the country, the Committee on Labor itself has become certainly overworked. We have three subcommittees out on hearings now on matters all of which are of tremendous importance to the American people. The members of those committee have worked long hours. In the past two sessions the committee has worked many long hours, day and night, on the 30-hour-week bill, on the Wagner-Connelly bill, on equal representation on the codes when the N. R. A. was in effect, on other labor legislation, and labor investigations. We of the committee have not objected to working long hours ourselves, but we believe it to be eminently unfair to ask one clerk to do the work of three persons, because that is what the clerk of the Committee on Labor has been doing and is doing now. I am appealing to the House and to the chairman of the Committee on Accounts to look into the matter of giving us an assistant clerk for that Committee on Labor. I believe, due to the conditions in the country to which I have referred, that we have a special condition of affairs in that committee which should be recognized and should be remedied, and I believe that no other committee will feel aggrieved if the Committee on Accounts should report a resolution providing for an assistant clerk for the Committee on Labor. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The bill was passed.

On motion by Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my remarks, I wish to ask unanimous consent to insert two brief letters from department officials.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

LXXX—235

CREATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD my own remarks delivered by radio in behalf of a bill introduced by Senator GIBSON to create a Department of Territories and Insular Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered March 11, 1936, over the radio in behalf of a bill introduced by Senator GIBSON to create a Department of Territories and Insular Affairs:

Fellow Members and citizens, Senator GIBSON is trying to obtain for beautiful Puerto Rico and other Territories greater representation and a more dignified position in Washington in the administration of the island's affairs. Puerto Rico is an organized Territory of the United States under the supreme authority of Congress.

The Jones Act, passed by Congress in 1917, granted American citizenship to the people of Puerto Rico. The island has over 1,600,000 American citizens, and, for the last 37 years, our children have been born and educated under the American flag, with American ideals of life and government taught in our schools.

Puerto Rico literally stands at the crossroads of the world, at the entrance to the Caribbean, and on direct line with east and west, north and south. San Juan, the capital and chief port, is but 1,000 miles from the Panama Canal; 1,300 miles from New York and Philadelphia; less than 1,000 from Havana; and less than 4,000 miles from European countries.

Let me say that the institutions of the United States have been responsible for the marvelous and wonderful progress made in Puerto Rico. Our total trade, import and export, reaches an average of $140,000,000 each year, so that the commerce with the mainland during the past 35 years has reached the large amount of over $3,000,000,000.

A great majority of the people believe that the influence of the people of the United States, in the destiny of Puerto Rico, has been, is, and will be, civilizing and that the extension of the Constitution of the United States to the island represents a positive guaranty to the islander's liberty, freedom, and enjoyment of individual rights.

Senator Gibson's proposal is to tend to enlarge the representation of Puerto Rico in the administration at Washington, which would be evidence of great progress. I sincerely hope that the Senator will convince Congress of the absolute necessity of setting up for all time a clear and definite policy for our island.

I affirm that the only way to seek a remedy to better economic and social conditions of the greater part of the population and workers is to have absolute guaranty of a true representative government, freedom of association, freedom of speech and press, setting the policy of the United States for Puerto Rico and to have it attended to by a proper and dignified authority in the Government in Washington who may act with impartiality, and lend his best cooperation to the welfare and progress of the Puerto Rican people.

The Puerto Rican people, every year since the occupation by the United States Army in 1898, have requested of the various Presidents and Congresses, through representatives of all economic institutions, political parties, and organized labor of the island, to set a definite policy by which the island's future may be guided. Puerto Ricans are a sensible, loving, and peaceful people.

A great majority of the Puerto Rican people wants elevation from a dependency or possession to the dignified recognition as that of a State of the Union.

In the meantime give the people of Puerto Rico what they have striven to secure to themselves for so many years—a greater degree of economic possibilities and self-government, as suggested by our legislature and the national administration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the legislative department appropriation bill may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] for his splendid effort to carry out the instructions of the Speaker with reference to requiring Members to address the Chair before speaking. The gentleman did a splendid day's work, and I think he should be commended for his efforts to carry that out. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will be directed to correct the section numbers in the legislative department appropriation bill just passed.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a bill introduced by me, and also an article by Major Norwood on the subject of aviation in the public schools.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY]?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, that matter was discussed some few days ago, and I think there was a general understanding that a bill already in print should not be reproduced in the RECORD, and, therefore, I object.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. I would like to say that I would particularly like to introduce the matter prepared by Major Norwood. Major Norwood is instructor in aviation at the Teaneck High School. That is the only school that has such a course.

Mr. SNELL. But if we start printing all articles produced by all the high-school instructors in the country, we will have the RECORD full.

Mr. KENNEY. There is no other such activity in the country. People from all over the country are writing to him about the boys in that high school, and I want to send it out to the country.

Mr. SNELL. I am going to object to the reprinting of bills in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that are printed and ready for distribution.

Mr. KENNEY. I withdraw my request, so far as the bill is concerned.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from New York probably intended to object to the article of the instructor, who is a civilian, as I understand, not connected with the Government.

Mr. SNELL. I thought I did. I understood the gentleman now wants to extend his own remarks, not the article of the instructor. Certainly I object to that. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina for calling it to my attention. I do not think that he would want it in, either.

Mr. KENNEY. I may say to the gentleman that this is the only thing of its kind in the United States—this course given in the Teaneck High School.

Mr. SNELL. I object to it. I object to the insertion in the RECORD of these private articles.

The SPEAKER. What is the request of the gentleman from New Jersey as modified?

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include matter prepared by Major Norwood, of the Teaneck High School, regarding a course of education in the public schools.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CHANDLER, for 3 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HIGGINS of Massachusetts (at the request of Mr. McCORMACK), for 1 week, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, March 13, 1936, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

706. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill for payment of claims of certain white settlers who had lost their property under the decisions of the Pueblo Lands Board, approved under the act of June 7, 1924 (43 Stat. 636), as supplemented by the act of May 31, 1933 (48 Stat. 108, 109); was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Under clause 2 of rule XXII, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3085) for the relief of John A. Nehmer, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CELLER: A bill (H. R. 11767) to provide for the entry under bond of exhibits of arts, sciences, and industries, and products of the soil, mine, and sea, and all other exhibits for exposition purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DEMPSEY: A bill (H. R. 11768) authorizing construction, operation, and maintenance of Rio Grande canalization project and authorizing appropriation for that purpose; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SWEENEY: A bill (H. R. 11769) to reclassify the salaries of watchmen, messengers, and laborers in first- and second-class post offices and the Railway Mail Service; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: A bill (H. R. 11770) to rehabilitate and stabilize labor conditions in the textile industry of the United States; to prevent unemployment, to regulate child labor, and to provide minimum wages, maximum hours, and other conditions of employment in said industry; to safeguard and promote the general welfare; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. CROSSER of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 11771) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the Centennial Celebration of Cleveland, Ohio, to be known as the Great Lakes Exposition; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. JOHNSON of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 11772) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Sistersville, W. Va.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 11773) to amend the Plant Quarantine Act of August 20, 1912; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. PEYSER: A bill (H. R. 11774) to amend the retirement laws affecting certain grades of Army officers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SCOTT: A bill (H. R. 11775) to amend section 101 (12) of the Revenue Act of 1934; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11776) to diminish unemployment through establishing the supplementary system of production and consumption for the unemployed known as reciprocal economy; to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. THOMASON: A bill (H. R. 11777) to authorize the Secretary of War to set apart as a national cemetery certain lands of the United States military reservation of Fort Bliss, Tex.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WERNER: A bill (H. R. 11778) to liquidate the liability of the United States for the massacre of Sioux Indian men, women, and children at Wounded Knee on December 29, 1890; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOYLAN: A bill (H. R. 11779) for the relief of Dominga Pardo; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DOCKWEILER: A bill (H. R. 11780) for the relief of J. H. Bowling; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. EDMISTON: A bill (H. R. 11781) granting an increase of pension to Martha E. Watts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ELLENBOGEN: A bill (H. R. 11782) to correct the record of Charles A. Gift; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: A bill (H. R. 11783) for the relief of William James Armstrong; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HOPE: A bill (H. R. 11784) for the relief of Jack C. Collins; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 11785) for the relief of Lewis Marion Hall; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 11786) granting a pension to Julian A. Myers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLIVER: A bill (H. R. 11787) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Warner; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SCOTT: A bill (H. R. 11788) for the relief of certain eight lieutenants in the line of the Navy, and to correct certain injustices done them as a result of the act of May 29, 1934 (H. R. 9068); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 11789) granting a pension to Adam Anderson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

10512. By Mr. AYERS: Petition of Myron W. Danforth and 37 patrons and citizens of star route no. 63516, Montana; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

10513. By Mr. GOODWIN: Petition of Moriah Grange, No. 1128, Moriah, N. Y., urging the passage of the bill placing a Federal tax on oleomargarine; to the Committee on Agriculture.

10514. By Mr. GUYER: Petition of citizens of Norton, Kans., petitioning the restoration of prohibition to the District of Columbia through the enactment of House bill 8739; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

10515. By Mr. LAMNECK: Petition of Mrs. C. N. Greiner, president, Crestview Welfare Club, 60 Walhalla Road, Columbus, Ohio, and others, urging early action on the motion-picture bills before Congress; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

10516. By Mr. PFEIFER: Petition of the Polish Aid Fund, Inc., Brooklyn, N. Y., concerning the Frazier-Lundeen workers' social insurance bill; to the Committee on Labor.

10517. Also, petition of the Young Men's Council of the United States, New York City, urging support of the Kramer bill and the Tydings-McCormack bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

10518. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Kentucky Bar Association; to the Committee on the Library.

10519. Also, petition of the Board of County Commissioners of Ward County, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, MARCH 13, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Infinite One, we rejoice that Thou hast called Thyself Father, Friend, Savior, and Elder Brother. By these, Blessed Lord, we are taught of what Thou art; they disclose our relationship to Thee; glory be unto Thy Holy Name. We pray that we may be exultant in our faith, in our happiness, and in this personal alliance. Dwell in us, our Heavenly Father, quickening all the sources of our hope and courage. O Divine Spirit, we need Thee more than knowledge, temple, or creed, that we may become in all things more than conquerors—through Him who hath loved us! Let Thy holy precepts be felt in every realm of our activities, keeping our affections clean and clear. Hasten the glorious day, Father, when men shall labor for the bread that cometh down from heaven; when injustice shall prevail no more and truth and brotherhood shall bless our humanity throughout the world. In the blessed name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 443. Joint resolution to amend Public Resolution No. 31 of the Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, approved June 17, 1935, so as to extend its provisions to cover the National Boy Scout Jamboree now scheduled to be held in 1937; and

H. J. Res. 514. Joint resolution authorizing the completion of certain records and operations resulting from the administration of the Kerr Tobacco Act, the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934, and the Potato Act of 1935 (repealed), and making funds available for those and other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2288. An act to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 223. Joint resolution relating to the employment of the personnel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in carrying out certain governmental activities.

REVISED STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have recommitted to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries the bill (S. 2001) to amend section 4426 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of Congress approved May 16, 1906, no. 454 on the Union Calendar and no. 371 on the Consent Calendar. This request is propounded by authority of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may sit during the sessions of the House until Monday next, and that they may have until Saturday midnight to make a report on the bill (S. 3998) to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to better serve the farmers in orderly marketing, and to provide credit and facilities for carrying surpluses from season to season.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask if it is expected to take up the Commodity Credit Corporation bill today?

Mr. STEAGALL. We do not expect to call up that bill for consideration this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

DELIBERATE MISREPRESENTATIONS IN WASHINGTON NEWSPAPERS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes to answer some misrepresentations in Washington newspapers and to defend the committee's action and report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said the other day, that when it comes to purveying general news the Washington Star is one of the best metropolitan newspapers in the United States. But concerning myself and the local tax situation in Washington, you cannot rely upon or believe anything you see in its columns. Because it has not been able to force me to stop my fight to compel it and the other newspapers in Washington to pay their own taxes, and I have made an uncompromising fight to repeal laws that make the people who live in the 48 States pay a large percent of the taxes of Washington people that ought to be paid by Washington people, and because it cannot influence and control me, the Washington Star and other Washington newspapers try every day in every way to discredit me. They distort and pervert every speech I make. They misrepresent everything I do or say. They never report me correctly. They try to belittle everything I accomplish. They abuse me continually. Because as chairman I handle an appropriation bill of 83 pages that is reported unanimously by a subcommittee and is approved by the unanimous vote of the full Committee on Appropriations, consisting of 39 Members, and the 83-page bill is passed by the House of Representatives without a single amendment by a vote of 290 for its passage and only 26 votes against it, the Washington Star and other newspapers here designated the bill as "Blantonism" simply because we reduced many scores of unconscionable large salaries that were being paid out of public relief money to persons who until they got on the official relief roll had never received one-third as much in their whole lives, and because we decreased and cut $3,000,000 off of the gratuitous contribution the Federal Government has been making annually upon the civic expenses of the Washington people, which the Washington people themselves should pay, and they should not expect the already overburdened taxpayers in the States, after paying their own taxes, to pay on the taxes of Washington people.

INFLUENCED AN OLD RETIRED OFFICIAL TO IMPEACH HIMSELF

Tax Assessor William P. Richards has worked for the Government 45 years. He has been tax assessor of the District of Columbia during the past 27 years. He retired yesterday. His successor was sworn in today. Today for the first time in 45 years the Washington Star editorially calls Assessor Richards "a faithful public servant." Yesterday, on his retirement, the Washington Star was able to influence and cajole out of Assessor Richards a statement impeaching his own testimony and impeaching the testimony of Commissioner Hazen, president of the Board of District Commissioners, and impeaching the testimony of Auditor Donovan, and which statement the Washington Star knew was incorrect when it published same. But what cared the Washington Star? Was it concerned about truth or facts? Certainly not, because the statement it got out of the retired tax assessor seemingly denied facts stated in our committee report and my speech. I am going to prove beyond any doubt that the Washington Star, the Washington Herald, and the Washington Post all deliberately misrepresented the facts, and deliberately published untruths, when at the time they knew they were publishing incorrect and untrue statements.

MISREPRESENTATIONS BY WASHINGTON STAR

Yesterday afternoon, under large headlines running clear across the top of its front page of its Washington section, the Star printed the following:

SAYS FIGURES INCORRECT

BLANTON has repeatedly referred to what he called an "arbitrary" reduction of $130,000,000 in the total of real-estate assessments. Richards today flatly denied the accuracy of that statement.

MISREPRESENTATIONS BY WASHINGTON HERALD

The Washington Herald this morning carried the following unjust attack:

BLANTON ASSAILED ON TAX CLAIM—RICHARDS CHARGES HE IS INACCURATE

Tax Assessor William P. Richards celebrated his last day in office yesterday by lashing at Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON, of Texas, who charged in the House Wednesday that District tax officials had violated the law requiring 100-percent assessment on real estate.

Richards declared BLANTON was inaccurate in his statement that property is assessed here below its fair value and that an arbitrary reduction of $130,000,000 had been made in real-estate assessments.

MISREPRESENTATIONS BY WASHINGTON POST

The Washington Post this morning imposed upon its readers with the following:

OFFICIAL DENIES BLANTON CHARGE ON ASSESSMENT—STATEMENT LAW VIOLATED IS UNTRUE, SAYS RICHARDS AS HE QUILTS POST

William P. Richards celebrated his retirement as District assessor yesterday with a bristling reply to Representative THOMAS L. BLANTON (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House District Appropriations subcommittee, who had charged on the floor of the House that the law requiring 100-percent assessment of District real estate for taxation was ignored and violated.

Representative BLANTON's statement that assessments had been reduced arbitrarily by $130,000,000 was not true, Richards said.

Were these three newspapers deliberately misrepresenting? Were they knowingly purveying as facts things they knew were untrue? Were they purposely and maliciously libeling me? Were they wrongfully trying to mislead Washington readers? Were they endeavoring to poison the minds of Washington people against the committee chairman handling the District bill? They were, beyond doubt, trying to do all of the above.

CANNOT WAIT FOR HEARINGS TO BE RELEASED

So anxious are these Washington newspapers to get the printed hearings on the District appropriation bill, they clamor for them just as soon as they are off of the press. They read every page and paragraph carefully in an attempt to discredit the committee. Not a sentence ever escapes their notice.

CONCLUSIVE REFUTING TESTIMONY OF COMMISSIONER HAZEN

Hon. Melvin C. Hazen is president of the Board of Commissioners, who run the government of the District of Columbia. When the hearings were held in March 1934 on the District appropriation bill for the fiscal year of 1935, Commissioner Hazen testified, and read a prepared statement to the committee, at which time both Tax Assessor William P. Richards and Auditor Daniel J. Donovan were present listening and approving the statement of their chief, and I quote from Commissioner Hazen's testimony the following:

Commissioner HAZEN. The Commissioners would like to call attention to the fact that in the fiscal year 1934 the tax rate of $1.70, which had been in effect during the fiscal years between 1928 and 1933, inclusive, has been reduced to $1.50. This reduction represents a saving to taxpayers in the fiscal year 1934 of $2,445,000.

Moreover, in the fiscal year 1934 the assessed valuation of real estate has been reduced by $80,000,000—a saving to property owners of $1,200,000. The District budget for the fiscal year 1935 is based upon continuing the $1.50 tax rate in that fiscal year.

It is also contemplated that a further reduction in the assessed valuation of real estate of approximately $50,000,000 will be made in 1935.

Commissioner Hazen was not being questioned by the committee. He was testifying from his prepared statement. His tax assessor was present, approving. His auditor, Major Donovan, was present, approving. You will note from the above testimony, that after asserting that the Commissioners for the fiscal year of 1934 had reduced the tax rate of $1.70, which had been in force since 1928, to $1.50 on the $100, which for the fiscal year of 1934 gave a saving to Washington taxpayers of $2,445,000, Commissioner Hazen testified clearly, distinctly, and unequivocally that in the fiscal year 1934 "the assessed valuation of real estate has been reduced by $80,000,000, a saving to property owners of $1,200,000."

You will also note that Commissioner Hazen then further testified clearly, distinctly, and unequivocally that "it is contemplated that a further reduction in the assessed valuation of real estate of approximately $50,000,000 will be made in 1935." That was Commissioner Hazen testifying. He was giving us the facts. And Assessor Richards and Auditor Donovan were there listening, approving, and endorsing his statement.

REPEATED THE TESTIMONY AGAIN IN DECEMBER 1934

When hearings on the District appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1935 were held in December 1934, Commissioner Hazen again testified before the committee and was questioned about his arbitrary reduction in assessed valuation, and he then admitted that he had reduced the assessed valuation $80,000,000 in 1934 and $50,000,000 in 1935, making a total of $130,000,000 reduction in assessed valuation of real estate during the 2 years, which was distributed generally, so that the property owners got the benefit of it. And he was questioned by me concerning this $130,000,000 reduction in assessed valuation, and from the hearings I quote the following:

Mr. BLANTON. In the general statement that you made on March 7, 1934, before this subcommittee I quote from your statement on page 5 of the hearings. You call attention to the fact that the tax rate for the present fiscal year had been reduced to $1.50, and then you use this language:

"Moreover, in the fiscal year 1934 the assessed valuation of real estate has been reduced by $80,000,000, a saving to property owners of $1,200,000." That is right?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. So that every property owner who had been rendering his property for taxes got the benefit of a decrease in the assessed value of his property?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is true. I would like to make one slight correction; probably not everyone, but it was general over the whole District.

Mr. BLANTON. It was general?

Mr. RICHARDS. Seventy-five percent.

Mr. BLANTON. But everyone was presumed to have received a decrease?

Commissioner HAZEN. It is supposed to be leveled over the entire District.

Mr. BLANTON. That is right; it was leveled over the entire District.

Mr. DONOVAN. They all got the benefit of the decrease in the tax rate.

Mr. BLANTON. And you did make another reduction, approximately $50,000,000, in assessed values, as noted by the assessor, Mr. Richards, of 10 percent in the assessed valuation?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And that was general all over the District?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. So that property owners generally got the benefit of that additional $50,000,000 reduction?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is quite right.

Mr. BLANTON. Then this year and last year you have given the property owners in the District a reduction in assessed values of real estate of $130,000,000, or 15 percent, have you not?

Commissioner HAZEN. Approximately; yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. With that $1.50 tax rate, you stated in your preliminary general statement that you carried over from the last fiscal year to the present fiscal year a surplus of $4,600,000?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And you say that you will inherit next July 1 a surplus of—

Commissioner HAZEN. $2,450,000.

Mr. BLANTON. A $2,450,000 cash surplus to help you on expenses?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is what our auditor says.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what you say?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes.

ABOVE WELL KNOWN TO WASHINGTON NEWSPAPERS

The Washington Star, and all of the other Washington newspapers, are well acquainted with the above-mentioned facts, embraced in the testimony of Commissioner Hazen, Assessor Richards, and Auditor Donovan, who all took part, when such facts were given to the committee, and there is no occasion whatever for said newspapers to misrepresent such facts to other readers. We have no way of making them acquaint their readers with the above facts, but we can call them down from this floor when they misrepresent such facts.

REDUCTION OF $130,000,000 IN ASSESSED VALUATION OF REAL ESTATE DURING 1934 AND 1935 ADMITTED AGAIN BY COMMISSIONERS ON FEBRUARY 6, 1936

When the hearings on the 1937 bill began on February 6, 1936, the following occurred, and I quote same from pages 7, 8, 9, and 10 of the hearings just recently printed, to wit:

COMMISSIONER HAZEN'S STATEMENTS ON TAX RATE AND ASSESSMENTS

Mr. BLANTON. Referring to the hearings on the 1935 bill, which were held in March 1934, I quote from your statement, Commissioner Hazen, as follows:

"Commissioner HAZEN. The Commissioners would like to call attention to the fact that in the fiscal year 1934 the tax rate of $1.70, which had been in effect during the fiscal years between 1928 and 1933, inclusive, has been reduced to $1.50. This reduction represents a saving to taxpayers in the fiscal year 1934 of $2,445,000.

"Moreover, in the fiscal year 1934 the assessed valuation of real estate has been reduced by $80,000,000—a saving to property owners of $1,200,000. The District budget for the fiscal year 1935 is based upon continuing the $1.50 tax rate in that fiscal year.

"It is also contemplated that a further reduction in the assessed valuation of real estate of approximately $50,000,000 will be made in 1935.

"The Commissioners also invite attention to the recommendation under the chapter for the water service for a 25-percent reduction in water rates for 1935, and an increase in the metered allowance, now 7,500 cubic feet, to 10,000 cubic feet. This means a saving to water users of about $600,000. In the fiscal year 1934 Congress allowed a discount of 10 percent of the amount of any bill for water charges paid within 15 days after the date of the rendition thereof. It is estimated that this will mean a saving of about $100,000 to water users."

That was from your statement in March 1934, Mr. Commissioner. During the hearings on the 1936 bill, which were held in December 1934, certain testimony was given, from which, for the benefit of the hearings, I now quote:

"Mr. BLANTON. By a reduction in the assessed valuations of real estate to the extent of $80,000,000, you meant that you distributed that over the general assessments?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. Then you further state:

"It is also contemplated that a further reduction in the assessed value of real estate of approximately $50,000,000 will be made in 1935."

"Did you make that further reduction?

"Commissioner HAZEN. There was further reduction.

"Mr. BLANTON. And you did make another reduction, approximately $50,000,000, in assessed values, as noted by the assessor, Mr. Richards, of 10 percent in the assessed valuations?

"Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. And that was general all over the District?

"Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. So that property owners, generally, got the benefit of that additional $50,000,000 reduction?

"Commissioner HAZEN. That is quite right.

"Mr. BLANTON. Then this year and last year you have given the property owners in the District a reduction in the assessed values of real estate of $130,000,000 or 15 percent, have you not?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Approximately; yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. Then you also say:

"The Commissioners also invite attention to the recommendation under the chapter for the water service for a 25-percent reduction in water rates for 1935 and an increase in the metered allowance, now 7,500 cubic feet, to 10,000 cubic feet. This means a saving to water users of about $600,000."

"That was provided?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. So that the property owners of the District got a saving of $600,000 through a decrease in water charges?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. In addition to that $600,000 decrease in water charges, they also got the benefit of the increased metered allowance of 2,500 cubic feet of water?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. Without extra charge?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. So that they got a double benefit in the matter of the water charges?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. Then you further say:

"In the fiscal year 1934 Congress allowed a discount of 10 percent of the amount of any bill for water charges paid within 15 days after the date of the rendition thereof. It is estimated that this will mean a saving of about $100,000 to water users."

"That was a saving of $100,000 additional, approximately?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. To water users here in Washington?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. It is a fact, Mr. Commissioner, that the tax rate this year, the fiscal year 1935, is only $1.50 per hundred on real estate and only $1.50 per hundred on personal property, is it not?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. There is no contemplation in the minds of the Commissioners to increase that tax for next year, 1936? You do not contemplate increasing it?

"Commissioner HAZEN. We do not contemplate increasing it.

"Mr. BLANTON. With that $1.50 tax rate, you stated in your preliminary general statement that you carried over from the last fiscal year to the present fiscal year a surplus of $4,600,000?

"Commissioner HAZEN. That is right.

"Mr. BLANTON. And you say that you will inherit next July 1 a surplus of—

"Commissioner HAZEN. $2,450,000.

"Mr. BLANTON. You have also, for this coming fiscal year, a trust fund, as you said in your general statement, of $1,430,000.

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. That is a fund to which you have access, which you get out of the Treasury, regardless of what Congress does in this bill, is it not?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. You have no income tax for the District of Columbia?

"Commissioner HAZEN. That is true.

"Mr. BLANTON. . . . The tax on intangibles in the District is now what, Mr. Donovan?

"Mr. DONOVAN. $5 per thousand.

"Mr. BLANTON. That is one-half of 1 percent, is it not?

"Mr. DONOVAN. That is right.

"Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia there is a gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia there is a license-tag tax that people pay in order to get their license plates each year. That amounts to only $1 per car.

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. That would be $1 per car for an $8,000 Rolls-Royce limousine as well as a dollar per car for a Ford or a Chevrolet?

"Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia the average water tax per family is now approximately what?

"Mr. DONOVAN. It is about $8.75.

"Mr. BLANTON. Was not that the tax before Congress reduced it?

"Mr. DONOVAN. It was that before Congress reduced it.

"Mr. BLANTON. But Congress reduced it?

"Mr. DONOVAN. You mean the 25-percent reduction?

"Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

"Mr. BLANTON. In the District of Columbia a man who built a house 25 years ago, and then paid for having his house connected with the sewer system of the District, has not in the last 25 years had to pay a single additional monthly service charge for sewers, has he?

"Commissioner HAZEN. No.

"Mr. BLANTON. And he will not have to pay any in the future, will he?

"Commissioner HAZEN. No, sir.

"Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Commissioner, you have been a public servant for a long time, and you are intimately acquainted with every detail of Washington business and history. On the whole, can you cite the people of any city of the United States who have better privileges, who are better cared for, than those in the city of Washington?

"Commissioner HAZEN. I think that it is the greatest city in the United States.

"Mr. BLANTON. And Washington people are better cared for, are least taxed, and have greater privileges than any other people in the United States?

"Commissioner HAZEN. I believe they do."

Mr. BLANTON. There is no local income tax here now?

Commissioner HAZEN. No, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. There is no local tax on inheritances?

Commissioner HAZEN. That is right, sir; there is not.

AMOUNT OF SURPLUS IN GENERAL, WATER, AND GASOLINE TAX FUNDS

Mr. BLANTON. You are acquainted with the four Mapes bills?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir; somewhat.

Mr. BLANTON. One of those bills has for its purpose to increase the gasoline tax from 2 to 4 cents, to make it comparable with the gasoline tax in other cities.

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Has that bill the approval of the Commissioners? The answer to my question could be very short, whether you are in favor of it or against it.

Commissioner HAZEN. The answer is that we have a surplus, and we did not feel we could justifiably increase taxes so long as we had a surplus.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is because you have a large surplus—$3,059,748.70—that you are against that increase of gasoline tax bill?

Commissioner HAZEN. We have to consider the surplus.

Mr. BLANTON. What surplus do you expect to have in the general fund on July 1?

Commissioner HAZEN. $1,992,748.70.

Mr. DONOVAN. That is only in the general fund.

Mr. BLANTON. That is in the general fund. Now, what about the water fund?

Commissioner HAZEN. In the water fund we will have $504,000?

Mr. BLANTON. And in your gasoline-tax fund?

Commissioner HAZEN. $563,000.

Mr. BLANTON. So that aggregates a surplus of $3,059,748.70 on July 1.

GASOLINE TAX IN VARIOUS STATES

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Commissioner, I call attention to the gasoline tax that is now effective in the cities of various States:

Alabama, 6 cents; Arizona, 5 cents; Arkansas, 6 cents; Colorado, 4 cents; Florida, 7 cents; Georgia, 6 cents; Idaho, 5 cents; Indiana, 4 cents; Kentucky, 5 cents; Louisiana, 5 cents; Maine, 4 cents; Maryland, 4 cents; Nebraska, 4 cents; Nevada, 4 cents; New Hampshire, 4 cents; New Mexico, 5 cents; North Carolina, 6 cents; Ohio, 4 cents; Oklahoma, 4 cents; Oregon, 4 cents; Pennsylvania, 3 cents; South Carolina, 6 cents; Tennessee, 7 cents; Texas, 4 cents; Utah, 4 cents; Vermont, 4 cents; Virginia, 5 cents; Washington (State), 5 cents; West Virginia, 4 cents; Wisconsin, 4 cents; and Wyoming, 4 cents.

But in the District of Columbia the tax is 2 cents per gallon.

So that right over here across the river bridge, when you get into Virginia, the State gasoline tax is 3 cents more than it is in Washington, D. C.

Commissioner HAZEN. I think it is 5 cents in Virginia and 4 cents in Maryland.

Mr. BLANTON. But Maryland has an additional sales tax. I say, it is 3 cents more in Virginia, just across the bridge, than it is in Washington.

Commissioner HAZEN. In Virginia?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; than it is in Washington.

Commissioner HAZEN. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. And if you go out here to Chevy Chase, across the line into Maryland, the tax there is double what it is in Washington, 4 cents as compared to 2 cents, plus their sales tax.

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And the cities in all of the States outside of Washington, D. C., instead of paying a license-tag tax of a dollar pay many times that; you realize that?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, in some States they pay $10 and $12 on a Ford or Chevrolet, while in Washington you pay only a dollar even on a $10,000 Rolls Royce.

The Mapes bill proposes to increase that charge, does it not?

Mr. DONOVAN. The Mapes bill calls for a weight tax.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a personal tax in all of those States, the same as any other personal-property tax.

Mr. DONOVAN. The Mapes bill proposes a weight tax in lieu of the present personal tax and the dollar tag charge.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; that is a good idea. But you do recognize that, if you needed it, you have a great potential source of revenue in an increase of your gasoline tax comparable to that in other cities, and also in the increase of your license-tag tax; do you not?

Commissioner HAZEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. But you do not care to pursue that, because you have a $3,000,000 surplus.

Commissioner HAZEN. Well, Mr. Blanton, I would say that if we can build a high-level bridge above the Chain Bridge, which would cost $1,500,000, we will need that as soon as we get authorization for that project, and many other projects which we have in mind will make it necessary for us to have this surplus, and we would need the increase and I would be strongly in favor of it. I am referring to the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge, also. But we have not authority to build either of those big, expensive bridges. Each bridge will cost a million and a half. As soon as we get authority to do it, I should certainly be in favor of an increase.

CHAIN BRIDGE AND PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE BRIDGE BOTH PROVIDED BY COMMITTEE

We called Commissioner Hazen's bluff, Mr. Speaker, for our committee allowed both the Chain Bridge and the Pennsylvania Avenue Bridge, and the House of Representatives approved our action. Hence it is now up to the Commissioners to raise the tax rates here to an amount comparable with that paid by the people elsewhere in the United States.

SHOULD RETURN BACK TO THE $1.70 ON THE $100

The rate from 1928 to 1934 was $1.70 on the $100. In 1934 the Commissioners reduced the rate from $1.70 to only $1.50 on the $100. Yet they have nevertheless been piling up big surpluses every year, due to the fact that the United States Government under the insistent demand of the Senate has been allowing the District of Columbia a big Federal contribution each year out of the people's Treasury.

NO OTHER COMPARABLE CITY HAS A RATE AS LOW AS $1.70 PER $100

The rate of $1.70 is not high. No other comparable city has a rate so low. There is no excuse whatever for the Commissioners not going back to the rate of $1.70 which was in force from 1928 to 1934. There is no State tax here. There is no county tax here. There is no special school tax here. There is no special courthouse or jail tax here. There is no special water-system tax here. There is no income tax here. There is no estate tax here. There is no inheritance tax here. There is no gift tax here. There is no sales tax here. The tax on intangibles is only one-half of 1 percent. The gasoline tax is only 2 cents. The auto-license tag tax is only $1 per year, whether it is a $12,000 Rolls Royce or a Ford. All personal libraries, whether worth $10 or $500,000, are exempt from taxation. There are many libraries here worth over $100,000. All wearing apparel here is exempt from taxation, and some rich families here have thousands of dollars worth of wearing apparel. Household furniture to the extent of $1,000 is exempt to every family free from taxation. The water rate here, with 10,000 cubic feet allowed, costs only $6.60 per year for the average family. There is no monthly charge for sewer service, for after it is once installed in a residence, and then only part of the cost is paid by the owner, there is thereafter no charge made for sewer service. Without additional charge all trees in front of and around residences are furnished free, planted free, cared for free, and are sprayed, pruned, and replaced to citizens of Washington. No charge whatever is made against property owners for repairing or replacing paved sidewalks or streets abutting their property. It is time for the Commissioners of the District to give some thought to making the people of Washington pay some of the taxes that people elsewhere in the United States have to pay, and for the Washington newspapers not to expect the overburdened taxpayers of the United States, after paying their own taxes, to then pay part of the taxes of the people of Washington.

EUGENE MEYER OFFERED $5,000,000 FOR WASHINGTON POST

On pages 3363-3365 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Thursday, March 5, 1936, I quoted from the hearings of our committee on the 1937 supply bill, the evidence of Col. Julius Peyser and others showing that after Eugene Meyer offered $5,000,000 for the Washington Post, and did not get it, thereafter David Lawrence entered into a written contract agreeing to pay $3,000,000 for the Washington Post, which was not consummated, and then Eugene Meyer conspired with others in getting the Post into a receivership, and through a dummy bought it in for $825,000, assuming its indebtedness, and then improved it, and now renders the entire properties, including $320,260 tangible personal property, and $218,456 of intangibles, for a total assessed value of only $556,576, upon which at the rate of only $1.50 per $100, and only one-half of 1 percent on intangibles, he pays a tax of only $7,663 per year.

MRS. EDWARD P. McLEAN OFFERED $2,500,000 FOR POST

The Washington Post was the heritage of the McLean family. When Edward McLean became mentally afflicted they were hornswoggled out of it. Mrs. McLean tried to save it for her boys. Here is what she says about it, and what Colonel Peyser said about suit in equity and Corcoran Thom's willingness for it to be taken over by Eugene Meyer:

FRIENDSHIP, February 7, 1936.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: I am giving you this information at your request for the use of your committee.

I offered the American Security & Trust Co. in writing and through my lawyers my real-estate lots in Washington known as the Oxford corner, which was at that time unencumbered, with no mortgage or lien against it, in exchange for the Washington Post. At one time I refused a cash offer for this property of $2,500,000.

At one time I refused a cash offer for this property of $2,500,000, and it is now assessed, I believe, at around $1,400,000. Later I again offered the same property after I had put a mortgage on it of less than $100,000.

At the public sale I had my lawyers bid to the extent of my resources. It was my desire and dream to keep the Post in the family for my three children, but fate was against me.

Sincerely yours,

EVELYN McLEAN.

Mr. PEYSER. Fate was not against her. Mr. Thom was against her. The answer to her proposition. The John R. McLean estate had sufficient money on hand, assets, to pay off the debts of the Washington Post if they wanted to. They had paid off the debts of the Cincinnati Enquirer and had paid other debts on property and made a loan on the Vermont Avenue property, and could very easily have paid the International Paper Co. and the other miscellaneous debts if they desired.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me ask you this question: Could they have paid those debts at the time the suit was filed?

Mr. PEYSER. Oh, easily. It would not have been any trouble.

Washington Post pays only $1,203 for 2,290,000 cubic feet of water for its big plant in Washington per annum. Because the Washington Post will not publish any of the facts about its own nominal taxes, I want to again call the attention of my colleagues and the country to just how little taxes Eugene Meyer and his wife pay on their own properties.

EUGENE MEYER

Now, personally, Mr. Eugene Meyer, the owner of the Washington Post, in the way of taxes pays only the water rent on his wife's fine residence properties of $53.92 per year for 97,300 cubic feet of water. He renders a fine Packard family car, upon which he pays an annual tax of only $29.92, plus $1 for license tags.

For last year he rendered three Plymouth cars, one Witt-Will car, one Dodge, one Chevrolet, and one Ford, upon which he paid total taxes on all seven of them of $45.67, plus $7 for license-number tags for all of them. This year only six automobiles are rendered.

Eugene Meyer's residence is in his wife's name, Mrs. Agnes Meyer, situated on lot 806, square 2568, the land being rendered at $79,797, and the improvements at $138,000, or a total of $214,797, and then she has 12 other lots rendered in her name connected with her residence and running to Sixteenth Street, rendered at $72,826, totaling $287,623, upon which the total tax paid on their family real estate is $4,314.35, and the value of her intangibles is $608, and the tax on her intangibles is $3.04.

Her tangible personal property is rendered at $30,000, and the tax on same is $450, or her total tax was $4,767.39 last year.

The following is Eugene Meyer's rendition of automobiles for this year.

STATEMENT BY TAX ASSESSOR, FEB. 3, 1936

Here is the personal-tax rendition of Mr. Floyd R. Harrison, comptroller of the Washington Post. He renders no return on real property; he renders no personal property; he renders no property of any kind and pays no taxes. But there is a mandamus pending against him now.

As to that I quote from the hearings:

Mr. RICHARDS. We tried to get him to make a return on his personal property.

Mr. BLANTON. You tried to get him to make a return and he would not do it?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And you have a mandamus proceeding against him?

Mr. RICHARDS. We are trying to make him do it, and he will do it before we get through, too.

Mr. BLANTON. I assume that the comptroller of the Washington Post ought to have some property, and ought to pay some taxes.

DAVID LAWRENCE

For instance, let us take Mr. David Lawrence—editor of the United States News—whose residence is at 3900 Nebraska Avenue, its assessed value being $133,390, upon which he pays an estate tax of $2,000.88 annually.

He has tangible personal property assessed at $3,000, upon which a tax of $45 is paid, and he has intangibles assessed at $216, on which a tax of $1.08 is paid. He pays an annual water rent of $24.49 for his fine $133,390 residential property.

Mr. Lawrence is shown by a recent statement in the Washington papers to have received an annual salary or income last year of $18,700. He renders a Cadillac automobile, for which he pays a personal tax of $1.80, and he also pays $1 for the annual license tag on his Cadillac automobile.

THEODORE NOYES

Then there is Mr. Theodore Noyes, who is one of the officials and part owner of the Washington Star. He is the chairman of the board of the Washington Star, and the newspapers here the other day stated that his salary or income last year was $42,120.

Personally he renders his residential property at 1730 New Hampshire Avenue NW. at an assessed value of $65,500, upon which he pays an annual tax of $982.50.

He has tangible personal property assessed at $7,500, upon which he pays a tax of $110.50.

He renders intangible property aggregating $621,520, upon which he pays a tax of $3,107.60, which is at the rate of one-half of 1 percent for intangibles.

He renders for taxes two family automobiles, an Auburn and a Lincoln, upon which he pays a personal tax on those two automobiles aggregating $57.75 per annum.

His annual water rent is only $23.05 on his fine residential property.

THE WASHINGTON STAR

Now, this Washington Star, owned by Theodore Noyes, Frank B. Noyes, and Fleming Newbold, renders 1 lot at $59, 1 lot at $371, 1 lot at $372, 1 lot at $379, and 13 lots at $792 each, and renders 18 other lots, when lot 31 in square 737 and improvements thereon alone is worth $200,000, and lot 19 in square 322 with improvements thereon is worth $1,750,000, yet it renders all of its real estate at a total assessed valuation of $2,249,586, upon which it pays an annual tax of only $33,743.80. In 1933 its real estate was assessed at $2,262,639. The Washington Star renders tangible personal property at an assessed value of $453,092, upon which it pays an annual tax of $6,796.38. It renders intangible property at an assessed value of $2,296,512, upon which at the low tax rate of one-half of 1 percent it pays an annual tax of only $11,482.56. Just think how very much more it would have to pay if it paid like other newspapers and citizens pay in other comparable cities of the United States. It means a saving of many, many thousands of dollars to it annually, by keeping the tax rate so low here in Washington. It pays only $853.14 per year for 1,622,000 cubic feet of water for its immense plant. Last year it had 84 automobiles, upon which it paid a total tax of only $3,791, notwithstanding many of them were fine, large, expensive trucks, and to get license tags and registration for them it cost the Star only $1 per car, or $80 for the 80 automobiles.

TAXES OF ONLY $2.97 PAID ON TWO PACKARD AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Fleming Newbold is the business manager of the Washington Star. His two family automobiles are both Packards, yet on the two of them he pays only $2.97 annual taxes. This business manager of the Washington Star pays only $1 per year for registration and license-number tags on each of his Packard limousines. Is not that ridiculous? There is no other city in the United States that would permit it. This business manager of the Washington Star renders for taxes intangible property at an assessed value of $40,728, upon which he has to pay an annual tax of only $203.64, because the rate here is only one-half of 1 percent—cheaper than the rate in any other city in the whole United States—and he gets away with it because this is the Nation's seat of government; and his big $5,000,000 newspaper, by condemning every Congressman who dares to oppose it, has been able to influence Congress each year to provide a large Federal contribution out of the people's Treasury to pay much of the local civic expenses here that ought to be borne by Washington people; and he and his Washington Star and other Washingtonians are thus relieved of paying a just and fair tax that the people everywhere else in the United States have to pay.

This business manager of the Washington Star has his family library exempt from taxes, no matter how much money it is worth. He has his family wearing apparel exempt from taxes, no matter how much money it is worth. He has $1,000 of household furniture exempt from taxes. He renders all of his tangible personal property at an assessed valuation of only $4,500, upon which he pays an annual tax of only $67.50. This business manager of the Washington Star renders his fine residential property at 1720 Massachusetts Avenue NW. at an assessed value of only $31,543, upon which he pays an annual tax of only $471.82. He has his water for his above properties furnished to him for the nominal charge of only $10.45 per year, less than a dollar per month. Where in the United States, outside of Washington, would this business manager of the Star be able to pay such nominal taxes on his properties? He cannot find another city in the United States that would let him get away with it. Yet his salary, or net income, last year was $31,543, as published recently by several Washington newspapers. Here in Washington he pays only 2 cents gasoline tax. He pays no income tax. He pays no estate tax. He pays no inheritance tax. He pays no gift tax. He pays no sales tax. Yet people in some other nearby cities have all of these taxes to pay.

This business manager of the Washington Star has no county tax to pay. He has no State tax to pay. He has no special school tax to pay. He has no special courthouse or jail tax to pay. He has no special water tax to pay. Yet citizens in other cities of the United States have to pay all of the above taxes in addition to their city tax. He pays only one tax on real estate, and that is $1.50 per $100, or $15 on the $1,000, with the property here in Washington generally assessed at about one-half of its real value. This business manager of the Washington Star has no sewer-service charge to pay each month. Not since sewer connection was first installed in his residence, and then at less than its cost, has he paid one cent for sewer service throughout all the years he has occupied his residence. He paid not one cent extra for the trees contiguous to his property. They were furnished without charge to him, were planted without charge to him, were protected with lumber frames around them until their growth started, have been pruned every year, have been sprayed every year, and have been replaced when any have died, all without any charge to him, notwithstanding the fact that in every other city in the United States the owner of the property, in addition to his regular taxes, has to pay for all of the above services.

This business manager of the Washington Star has his ashes gathered free; he has his garbage gathered free; he has his trash gathered free, while in some cities citizens have to pay for these services in addition to their regular taxes. This Washington business manager of the Washington Star, Mr. Fleming Newbold, does not have to pay one cent for repairing or replacing the sidewalks in front of and around his property, or for repairing or repaving the street contiguous to his property, while citizens of some other cities have to pay for such service in addition to their regular taxes. And what privileges this business manager of the Washington Star receives here in Washington at such nominal cost all of the other officials and owners of the Washington Star likewise receive in Washington. Yet they are always bellyaching because the Government does not pay more of their own civic expenses, which the people everywhere else in the United States pay for themselves.

FRANK B. NOYES

To give you the entire picture of the Evening Star, I will give you the taxes paid by Mr. Frank B. Noyes, president of the Evening Star. The Washington newspapers the other day stated that his annual salary or income last year was $42,120.

Personally, Mr. Frank B. Noyes, president of the Washington Star, renders no real estate for taxes. He renders tangible personal property of $20,000, upon which he pays an annual tax of $300. He renders intangible property at $92,900, upon which he pays a tax of $464.50.

He renders for taxes his family car, a Stutz automobile, for which he pays a personal tax of only $1 per year, and he pays a $1 charge per year for license number tags.

HEARST'S HERALD AND TIMES

C. DORSEY WARFIELD

Both the Washington Herald and the Washington Times are incorporated under the name of "American Newspapers, Inc."

Mr. C. Dorsey Warfield is the assistant publisher of the Times. He pays no real-estate taxes. He pays on tangible personal property, at an assessed value of $2,500, the sum of $37.50. On intangibles, at an assessed value of $148, he pays 74 cents, and, on a family automobile, a Dodge, he pays $9.30. That is the total tax that the Times' assistant publisher pays.

ELEANOR PATTERSON

Now, with regard to the Washington Herald, unless a change has been made recently, Mrs. Eleanor Patterson, of 15 Dupont Circle, is the editor of the Herald. She is one of those whose taxes I was asked to check up. Here is her rendition. She has a residence at 15 Dupont Circle.

It is one of the finest residences in Washington. It is assessed at the value of $261,731. Upon that a tax is paid of $3,925.96.

She renders tangible personal property of $75,000 assessed value, upon which a tax is paid of $1,125. She renders intangible property of the value of $1,090,324, upon which a tax is paid of $5,451.62.

She pays an annual water rent on that extensive property of $81.80 per year for 153,300 cubic feet of water.

She renders four family automobiles—one Cadillac, two Packards, and one Chrysler—on the combined total of which she pays a personal property tax of only $30.66 a year, plus $4 for license-number tags on them.

ARTHUR G. NEWMYER

On the editorial page of the Washington Times, published by American Newspapers, Inc., which also publishes the Herald, there are given the names of Arthur G. Newmyer, publisher; J. J. Fitzpatrick, managing editor; and William C. Shelton, business manager.

Mr. Arthur G. Newmyer, the publisher of the Washington Times, lives at the Mayflower Hotel. He renders tangible personal property of the assessed value of $4,500, upon which he pays a tax of $67.50 per year.

He renders intangible property of an assessed value of $664, upon which he pays a tax of $3.32. That is all the tax that he pays in Washington.

J. J. FITZPATRICK

Mr. J. J. Fitzpatrick, the editor of the Washington Times, who lives at 3415 Fulton Street NW., in another's property, renders tangible personal property of the value of $60, upon which he pays a tax of 90 cents.

He renders intangible property of the assessed value of $108, upon which he pays a tax on intangibles of 54 cents.

He renders a family automobile, upon which he pays a tax of $8.17, plus $1 for license tag.

He pays an annual water rent per annum of $7.80.

Thus the editor of the Washington Times, on his personal property, his intangibles, on his automobile, for his license-number tags, and for water furnished him a whole year, pays in all a total of only $18.11 taxes per annum for living in the Nation's Capital.

WILLIAM C. SHELTON

Mr. William C. Shelton, the manager of the Washington Times, on his residence at 3517 Rittenhouse Street NW., which he renders at an assessed value of $16,898, pays an annual real-estate tax of $253.48.

There is, concerning his personal tangible property and also his intangible property, a mandamus proceeding pending.

He renders two family automobiles, one a Dodge and one a Buick, upon which he pays an aggregate annual tax of only $19.72, plus a dollar each for the license tags on the two cars.

He pays an annual water rent of $15.76 on water for his residence property.

WASHINGTON HERALD-WASHINGTON TIMES

The Washington Herald and the Washington Times, combined, assessed as the American Newspapers, Inc., on lots 39 and 803, in square 250, city of Washington, render real estate at an assessed value of $709,108, upon which is paid an annual real-estate tax of $10,636.62.

It renders tangible personal property of an assessed value of $224,984, upon which it pays an annual tax on tangible personal property at $3,374.76.

It renders intangible property at an assessed value of $306,676, upon which it pays a tax on intangibles of $1,533.38.

It pays water rent on 4,039,500 cubic feet of water, per annum, of $1,992.33.

The difference between its assessment on real estate in 1933 and the present year is as follows:

In 1933 its assessed value on real estate was $770,004. Now it has been reduced to $709,108. Thus, since 1933 it has been granted a decrease of $61,896 on the assessed value of its real estate.

WASHINGTON NEWS

The Washington News, at Thirteenth Street NW., between K and L, square 284, lot 823, renders its real estate at an assessed value of $209,100 and pays an annual real-estate tax of $3,136.50.

It renders tangible personal property of the assessed value of $83,392, upon which it pays a tax upon tangible personal property of $1,250.88.

It renders intangible property of an assessed value of $71,896, upon which it pays an annual tax on intangibles of $359.48.

For 598,000 cubic feet of water furnished it annually it pays $276.35 per year.

UNITED STATES NEWS

The United States News, which I mentioned is edited by Mr. David Lawrence, whose personal taxes I gave you awhile ago, renders its real estate at 2201 M Street NW., on lot 816, square 50, at an assessed value of $115,274, upon which it pays an annual real-estate tax of $1,729.12.

It renders tangible personal property of an assessed value of $43,912, upon which it pays an annual tax of $658.58.

It renders intangible property of an assessed value of $39,328, upon which it pays an annual tax on intangibles of $196.64.

For 280,000 cubic feet of water per annum, it pays $148.31.

LABOR

The weekly publication known as Labor, upon its office building and plant at First Street and Constitution Avenue NW., on lots 16 and 45, square 635, renders its real estate at an assessed value of $189,019, upon which it pays an annual real-estate tax of $2,835.28.

It renders tangible personal property at an assessed value of $20,000, upon which it pays an annual tax of $300.

It renders no intangible property.

For 88,600 cubic feet of water furnished it per annum, it pays $55.33.

NATIONAL PRESS BUILDING

The National Press Building Corporation, on its office building at Fourteenth and F Streets NW., lot 826, square 254, renders its real estate at an assessed valuation of $5,830,084, upon which it pays an annual real-estate tax of $87,451.26.

It renders tangible personal property of the assessed value of $184, for which it pays an annual tax of $2.76.

Its intangible property is rendered at an assessed value of $431,056, upon which it pays an annual tax of $2,155.28.

For 4,798,000 cubic feet of water furnished its fine office building, one of the finest in the city, it pays an annual charge of $2,520.59.

ASSESSED BELOW REAL VALUE, EVEN PRIOR TO 1934

If you will look on pages 63 and 64 of our printed hearings, you will see that a citizen bought a piece of property for $4,500 and made the Government pay $11,500 for it; another citizen bought property for $12,000 and made the Government pay $25,000 for it; another bought a lot for $3,800 and then made the Government pay $8,250 for it; another citizen bought two lots for $16,500 and then made the Government pay $37,500 for them; another citizen bought a lot for $11,000 and then made the Government pay $28,500 for it; another citizen bought a lot for $3,500 and then made the Government pay $12,500 for it.

TAX ASSESSOR RICHARDS ADMITTED LOW ASSESSMENTS

I quote from the printed hearings on pages 64 and 65 the following:

PRICE ASKED FOR JEFFERSON JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL SITE

Mr. BLANTON. Now, concerning the Jefferson Junior High School, at the time the first jury was empaneled for fixing the value of that site, that jury fixed a value of $105,000. That was several times the value at which it was assessed at that time, was it not?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir. That was the part, the auditor just reminds me, that was in one ownership.

Mr. BLANTON. That was in one ownership.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government refused to pay that $105,000. They thought it was outrageous.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the second jury that was empaneled to condemn that property for the Government awarded $294,000.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And they fixed the amount the Government should pay for it at $105,000. Then it was condemned in a second proceeding and Washington citizens then fixed its value at $294,000, but we didn't take it.

I wish you would state to the committee the facts in regard to the property that was purchased in the block upon which the New House Office Building was built, and as to the manner in which the Government was held up on the value of that property. You have made a statement on this particular land in that particular condemnation and as to the different ownerships.

Mr. RICHARDS. A part of the land was purchased outright. I appeared before the committee consisting, I think, of the Speaker of the House, the minority leader, and someone else, and made a statement as to what that property was worth, but I do not think it went to condemnation. I think it was finally purchased.

Mr. BLANTON. All of the property that was purchased outright was purchased at a price far in excess of what it was assessed for taxes at that time?

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of it at several times its assessed value.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

AMOUNTS FAR IN EXCESS OF ASSESSED VALUES PAID

I now want to call your attention to what the Government had to pay for the lots upon which the new Supreme Court Building was constructed, and I quote from page 78 of the printed hearings:

SALE PRICE AND SUBSEQUENT AWARDS BY JURY FOR SUPREME COURT SITE
Mr. RICHARDS. These are some figures in regard to the site of the Supreme Court.

Mr. BLANTON. This data refers to the properties acquired, through condemnation, for the new Supreme Court Building.

Mr. RICHARDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. I read from the tax assessor's data. The following lots are in square 727: Lot no. 18 had sold for $4,500, and the jury awarded for it $11,500; lot 19 had sold for $5,500, and the jury awarded $8,500; lot no. 39 sold for $11,000, and the jury awarded $16,000; lot no. 40 sold for $12,000, and the jury awarded for it

$25,000; lot no. 41 sold for $10,500, and the jury awarded for it $16,000; lot no. 804 sold for $8,000, and the jury awarded for it $14,500; lot no. 32 sold for $3,800, and the jury awarded for it $8,250.

The following lots are in square 728:

Lot no. 801 sold for $4,800, and the jury awarded for it $7,500; lot no. 802 sold for $6,000, and the jury awarded for it $12,000; lot no. 807 sold for $15,000, and the jury awarded for it $26,000; lots nos. 809 and 810 were sold for $16,500, and the jury awarded for them $37,500; lot no. 814 was sold for $11,000, and the jury awarded for it $28,500; lot no. 822 was sold for $5,650, and the jury awarded for it $10,000; lot no. 823 was sold for $8,500, and the jury awarded for it $17,000; lot no. 826 was sold for $14,500, and the jury awarded for it $19,500; lot no. 827 was sold for $15,000, and the jury awarded for it $19,500; lot no. 31 was sold for $5,100, and the jury awarded for it $13,000; lot no. 832 was sold for $3,500, and the jury awarded for it $12,500.

This statement shows that in the case of property which had sold for $163,850, a jury of Washington citizens, who passed on the matter, required the Government to pay $302,750 in order to secure the property for the Supreme Court Building.

SUGGESTION FROM THE OTHER SIDE OF THE CAPITOL

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that from the one somewhere else who is always insisting on the United States making a large Federal contribution to the civic expenses of Washington, the newspapers carried a suggestion in the early part of 1934 that one way the Commissioners could lower the amount Washington people would have to pay would be to lower the assessed valuation of the property. The Commissioners took the cue immediately. Notwithstanding that it was already assessed at about one-half of its real value, the Commissioners thereafter in 2 years arbitrarily lowered the assessed value of real property $130,000,000.

OUR PRESIDENT GATHERED STATISTICS ON CITY TAXES

Last year President Franklin D. Roosevelt had his agents gather statistics regarding tax rates and renditions in all other comparable cities. From his report I quote the following:

TAX RATE IN DISTRICT COMPARED WITH CITIES OF SIMILAR SIZE

This report of the President's committee which he appointed to investigate the tax rate in the District of Columbia as compared with that in other comparable cities, which is entitled "Comparative Tax Burdens in the District of Columbia and Other Cities", and which was filed in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury on April 8, 1935, states that their analysis is based upon data available January 12, 1935, and from which I quote:

"The following cities of between 300,000 to 825,000 population show Washington to pay the lowest tax rate on $1,000, to wit:

	Tax rate on $1,000
Jersey City, N. J.	$40.69
Boston, Mass.	37.10
Minneapolis, Minn.	30.10
Newark, N. J.	29.20
Seattle, Wash.	28.13
New Orleans, La.	27.58
Baltimore, Md.	26.70
Portland, Oreg.	26.50
Milwaukee, Wis.	26.26
Buffalo, N. Y.	25.56
Kansas City, Mo.	25.23
Louisville, Ky.	24.43
San Francisco, Calif.	20.09
Cincinnati, Ohio.	18.22
Washington, D. C.	15.00

"Table 1, appended, clearly demonstrates that the District of Columbia general property-tax rate of $15 per $1,000 is the lowest obtaining in any city of 300,000 or more population, and that a number of cities have adjusted tax rates of more than twice that obtaining in the District."

In our hearings, Mr. Speaker, it was disclosed that the city officials are wholly inactive and unconcerned about the back real-estate taxes that remain unpaid for each year back to 1877. They were not enough concerned to insist on a law being passed to allow the District of Columbia to take good title under proper sale for delinquent taxes. I had to go to the District Legislative Committee and urge the chairman to report such a bill, and we got her to have the bill reported and passed it here in the House a few days ago. I quote the following from the printed hearings:

UNCOLLECTED REAL-ESTATE TAXES, 1877-1935

Now, Mr. Towers, you are familiar, are you, with the statement that has been furnished by Mr. Richards here, and which came through you, I understand.

Mr. TOWERS. Yes; I got that up for him.

Mr. BLANTON. It shows an uncollected balance of real-estate taxes from 1877 to 1935 of $1,599,568.47.

Mr. TOWERS. Yes, sir.

UNCOLLECTED TAXES FROM 1877 TO 1936

The following is an official statement of a list of uncollected balances of real-estate taxes by years from 1877 to January 1, 1936, furnished by Tax Assessor Richards under the official order of Commissioner Hazen:

Less overcollection for 1910, 1925, and 1928..... 22,385.56

Total..... 1,599,568.47

Mr. BLANTON. Colonel Sultan, this list of unpaid taxes on real estate, dating back as far as 1877, shows uncollected, for 1877, real-estate taxes amounting to $8,706.55, and all the way up, every year, there is an uncollected tax balance.

Are there any steps being taken to collect those taxes?

Colonel SULTAN. Oh, yes, sir. Just why there should be an uncollected balance going back as far as that, frankly, I cannot say.

Mr. BLANTON. In other words, there remains now, previous to the present tax year, from 1877 to 1935, uncollected real-estate taxes of $1,599,568.47.

Yet with these conditions prevailing, where the people of Washington, D. C., are the best treated, have the greatest advantages, and are the least taxed, the Washington newspapers are asserting that certain statesmen elsewhere than in this House are assuring these newspapers that they will restore this $3,000,000 the House has cut off of the Federal contribution, and will restore the unconscionable high salaries that some officials here in Washington have been receiving.

Let them do it! But they are not going to do it without their people back home finding it out. And in my judgment their people back home are going to hold them responsible for such action. Their people back home are getting tired of having to pay their own high taxes in the States and then having to help the overpampered people of Washington pay their local civic expenses here. The time has come when this House of Representatives must stop being the goat. It must stop having to carry the load. It must place the responsibility where it rightfully belongs. It must let the taxpayers of the United States know exactly who it is that is annually placing this burden upon them. And I am going to take upon my shoulders the duty of letting the people of the United States know about it. The people of Washington, D. C., receive the most for their money and pay less taxes than the people in any other city in the whole wide world.

The Washington Star ought to be ashamed of itself for causing Mr. William P. Richards, just as soon as he retires from his position, to make a statement that impeaches his own testimony, that impeaches the testimony of his chief, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, and impeaches the testimony of his auditor, Maj. Daniel Donovan, all three of whom, thrice, in annual hearings, admitted that in 1934 and 1935 the Commissioners reduced the assessed valuation of real estate $130,000,000, or $80,000,000 in 1934, and $50,000,000 in 1935, distributed to most of the people living in the District of Columbia, and causing them a huge saving in taxes. I warn the new tax assessor right now that if he wants to succeed, and last long, he must not allow these Washington newspapers to wrap their tentacles around him and make him do their bidding.

Mr. Speaker, these Washington newspapers are not going to get away with this misrepresentation. I am going to call their hand every time they misrepresent the facts to the people. I repeat, they are not going to get away with it! If you will watch the Post, you will see in it every morning some incited letters it has caused to be written by deliberately poisoning the minds of the people against me, through its many malicious and libelous misrepresentations. I had hoped that it would not force me to tell the Washington people about how its owner accumulated his millions, but if he continues his unjust persecution I will before long give you a complete history of his manipulations.

I want the people of Washington to get these printed hearings and look at the assessed value of the property rendered for taxation by some of the leading citizens of Washington, who draw salaries of from $15,000 to $75,000 per annum and the small taxes they pay, and then they will help me in my fight to stop it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to add some excerpts from the hearings I have referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CRUEL WAR—JOHN SILVER PASSES ON

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a memorial of about 150 words, issued officially by the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it was Sherman, I believe, who said that "War is hell." John Silver found that to be true on October 21, 1918, when the Meuse-Argonne drive was on in the great World War.

The American forces were advancing. The Germans were putting up their big drive. Airplanes were dropping shells. Heavy artillery was throwing a barrage. Machine guns were mowing down the opposing forces. Antiaircraft guns were bringing down airplanes. The air was filled with shot and shell. It was 2:45 p. m., October 21, when the commanding officer of our machine-gun artillery issued orders to liberate John Silver. He was liberated in the front lines of our advancing machine-gun squad. He had tied to his leg a very important message. As a homing pigeon, it was his duty to fly back to the loft at headquarters with this message.

Off he went. We imagine that we see him, as it were, dodging the shot and the shells. Now, a bullet or a piece of exploded shrapnel shoots away a portion of his leg, but the message tube being tied above the knee still stayed with John Silver, and with his leg dangling merely by the skin, on he goes toward the homing loft at headquarters and delivers his message.

The officers at headquarters noticed the bleeding leg of the pigeon and the lieutenant having charge of the homing pigeons gave special care to this faithful bird, with the result that he was nursed to good health and after the war was taken to Scofield Barracks in Hawaii. He grew to be a pet with the soldier boys. He was cared for as if he were the king of all bird life. When the Army had a parade or maneuvers at Scofield Barracks or any place in the Hawaiian Islands, the lieutenant in charge of the homing pigeons would see to it that John Silver was among the spectators reviewing the parade. He had a specially prepared basket or cage which John Silver occupied at such times.

This last summer, during the review of the Army at Scofield Barracks—by the way, the finest army, or, rather, the finest unit of any army in the world—one truck had about 100 homing pigeons in it, and as it passed the review stand the canvas was raised from the bed of the truck and these homing pigeons fluttered here and there, and, after organizing, headed for their homing headquarters. John Silver, looking on, acted as though he were human by clapping his wings when this flock of pigeons were let loose. John Silver's remains are with the Army relics in Dayton, Ohio.

The following is the exact photostatic copy sent me by the Eleventh Signal Company, of Scofield Barracks, Territory of Hawaii, January 1, 1936:

COMPANY ORDER NO. 1

ELEVENTH SIGNAL COMPANY,

Schofield Barracks, Territory of Hawaii, January 1, 1936.

1. In the death, on December 6, 1935, of the homing pigeon John Silver (named after the one-legged character of Robert Louis Stevenson's Treasure Island), the Eleventh Signal Company lost an esteemed member of its organization. This bird was hatched in France at the breeding lofts of the United States Army Signal Corps during the World War and was transferred to the loft of the Eleventh Signal Company upon its establishment in 1921. He was 17 years 11 months old at the time of his death.

2. The outstanding feat of John Silver is officially recorded as follows:

"Liberated at Grand Pre at 2:35 p. m., October 21, 1918, in the Meuse-Argonne drive, with an important message, during intense machine-gun and artillery action, the bird delivered its message to the loft at Rampont, a distance of 40 kilometers, in 25 minutes. Upon examination it was found that one leg had been amputated and that the breast had been pierced by a machine-gun bullet. The message tube, intact, was hanging by the ligaments of the torn leg."

3. The courage and devotion to duty displayed by John Silver, and, above all, his will to accomplish his mission and reach his objective are attributes worthy of emulation by every soldier of this company.

4. Hereafter on each organization day of the Eleventh Signal Company this order will be read and the name John Silver will be added to the roll call. When his name is called the senior non-commissioned officer present will respond, "Died of wounds received in battle in the service of his country."

JOHN A. BALLARD,

Major, Signal Corps, Commanding.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the gentleman is going to tell us where we are going to get the money that he has been inquiring about.

Mr. RICH. No; I want to congratulate the gentleman.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just a minute; I am reserving the right to object.

Mr. RICH. I want to answer the gentleman. I want to congratulate the majority leader on the bill we passed yesterday showing a reduction in Government expenditures, and then I want to call your attention to some other bills that are coming on the floor here, and I want you to do likewise in respect of them. It is your duty.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. The first thing, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the majority leader and the Members of the House for bringing in one appropriation bill that is less than it was last year. [Applause.]

I am pleased that the Democrats applaud this statement, because this is the first deduction on any appropriation bill this session. However, I want to call your attention to what the Senate is doing by way of increasing not only the appropriation bills you have passed that were larger than they have ever been in the history of the Nation, but ask you to keep your eye on what they are doing over there in asking for millions and millions of dollars above what you have appropriated. It is shameful. It is a real tragedy to America's financial security. It must be stopped. Let the House do its duty on these conference reports and vote down any further increases in appropriations.

I also want to call attention to the fact that the Army and Navy bills, in 1935, were $533,597,243; in 1936, $744,839,588; while in 1937 you have suggested spending $937,791,966, the largest appropriation for war in the history of this Nation, and 75 percent more than was appropriated 3 years ago. Notwithstanding, you all say you are for peace, yet you prepare for war.

Now, you are going to have other appropriations or riders that are hung onto these bills in the Senate. Keep your eye on this, because I want you to know about it, because you will be compelled to answer the question, Where are you going to get the money? [Laughter and applause.]

I want to call your attention further to the fact that Harry Hopkins and the President and Mr. Ickes will be in here requesting $2,000,000,000 or more for public works. Now, I warn you Democrats, so beware! If you are interested in the expenditure of Government funds, read what Senator Holt said yesterday in the Senate with reference to ruthless expenditure of Government funds in West Virginia on public works, and take into consideration the fact that it is your duty to appropriate and specify any projects that money is to be spent for and not to place any more money in the President's hands to be squandered by politicians and Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a serious question?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the majority leader, if the question is serious.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This is not badinage. In connection with the criticism of P. W. A. expenditures, and so forth, has the gentleman had occasion to read the report made by the 100 mayors of the leading cities of the country?

Mr. RICH. I will just read from a report made by Robert Johnson, the Democratic administrator of public works for Pennsylvania, who recently sent his report to Governor Earle. This is what he said in reference to the emergency measures or public-works program of the President:

Emergency measures are no longer economically or socially defensible.

He meant that the way these funds are being administered is wrong and that you are not getting the results that should be obtained. More men on relief, the Treasury deficit growing. Read Senator Holt yesterday in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where he shows you how the funds are being administered for political relief in West Virginia, and not for the relief of the men who need it. This is the thing I want to call to your attention at this particular time. The Democratic Senator criticizes Hopkins and the politicians in the way they waste public moneys. It is a shame. It is a crime. Men, stop it! Stop it before it is too late.

Remember it is our duty to appropriate these funds and that you are going to be called upon here to pass a tax measure, and remember that you Democrats voted to spend this money, placing a mortgage on your future children; and when it comes to voting to tax your people to pay for it, see how many shirkers you are going to have on the Democratic side of the House. This is something you want to watch when it comes to voting on your tax measure here, because you will find that a lot of those who will vote to spend the money are not going to vote with you, and you have a lot of responsibility here, especially the leader of the Rules Committee, with respect to this particular issue.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman has spoken several times about the necessity of a tax bill to balance the Budget. Will the gentleman vote for a tax bill?

Mr. RICH. If you bring in an honest, conscientious tax bill that is going to tax the people in proportion to their income, or in the way they ought to be taxed, by direct taxation, not indirect, I shall vote for it. I voted for your iniquitous tax bill of last year, and I shall vote for a good one now; but I am not going to vote for any tax bill you bring in here if it is not sound, or if it is like the last one you Democrats submitted.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman mean by that a tax bill against corporations?

Mr. RICH. Yes; the corporations are the ones that are paying the taxes of this country, but it is done indirectly. Bring out a tax bill that will let the people know they are taxed for your follies, and I am for it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman means he wants to tax individuals instead of corporations?

Mr. RICH. I want to tax corporations, and when you tax the corporations you tax the individuals, and the gentleman knows that. All you do is try to fool the people. You cannot do it always, remember that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

UTOPIA UNLIMITED

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, the rural resettlement program of the administration appeals to me as one of the most practical and humane reforms instituted under the present administration. A nation without homes is on the way to downfall. The plans now being formulated and carried out under supervision of Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell, Under Secretary of Agriculture and head of the resettlement organization, must commend themselves to all citizens anxious to see home and farm life in America salvaged, restored, and expanded.

It is easy enough to dismiss this splendid undertaking with a gesture or a phrase, but the man whose home has been lost or is likely to be lost sees things in a widely different light. Almost any procedure tending to protect him in the occupancy of his house, barn, and acres will be regarded gratefully, even if the procedure itself is not precisely what he might prefer.

Utopia Unlimited is the title of a series of articles recently published by the Washington Post and intimating that the Resettlement Administration is a bold, reckless, and foolish experiment. I found the articles interesting because they contained numerous facts about the enterprise, but the inference to be drawn was an unfair one. The reasoning was similar to that used in so many other instances in which the Federal authorities have utilized the governmental machinery for ridding our country of poverty so far as possible.

The opening paragraph of the article, which is written by Felix Bruner, makes this statement, which is intended to throw a scare into Mr. and Mrs. American Citizen:

Occupying all parts of 19 Washington buildings—ranging from the palatial former home of a millionaire to temporary Government structures—are the administrative directors and staff of one of the most far-flung experiments in paternalistic government ever attempted in the United States.

The organization, which is really a government within the Government, was not created by an act of Congress but by an Executive order of the President. Its activities do not require congressional sanction or approval. It directly affects, virtually rules, the lives of hundreds of thousands of people, who are told how much they spend for food, for clothing, for rent; what crops they shall plant, how they shall conduct the most minutes of their lives.

Administering the huge experiment are 13,045 men and women, all on the Federal pay roll but none of them under civil service. At their head is the man who once wrote, "I shall roll up my sleeves and make over America." The organization is the Resettlement Administration. Its head is Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell.

It ranges from buying a mule for a farmer to building houses for industrial workers; from establishing game preserves to encouraging formation of cooperations to can beans.

This is only a small part of the series of articles, Utopia Unlimited. It is enough, however, to demonstrate the actual and potential accomplishments of the Resettlement Administration.

Professor Tugwell has been criticized, "razzed", and ridiculed over the ambitious promise he made years ago, when he had just come to ponder the economic trials and tribulations of this great Nation. For my part, I can see no ground for attack because this brilliant young man, in the early days of his study of social science, declared he would roll up his sleeves and make over America.

The America of the times of Herbert Hoover and of Warren G. Harding needed an abundance of "making over." The corruption, oppression, and brutality of those times is still a stench in our nostrils.

America has not been "made over" in its entirety, and I am confident that Dr. Tugwell does not desire to have it entirely transformed. He does want to see the producers, both on the farm and in the factory, assured a comfortable living by enlightened and humanitarian laws that have been, are being, and will be passed in the not distant future.

I consider this a laudable purpose. Dr. Tugwell's ideal is full of inspiration to all of us who desire to end poverty and guarantee comfort and general welfare to every industrious healthy man and woman under the Stars and Stripes. Disagreements are numerous over ways and means, but there are few who question the worth and human value of Dr. Tugwell's earnest efforts.

POINT OF NO QUORUM

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, it was understood that the resolution from the Committee on Accounts providing an appropriation to carry out the work of the special committee appointed to investigate the Townsend pension plan would be called up next week. The resolution is coming up this morning, and I think, in justice to the Members of the House who are interested, they should know it is coming up, and I therefore make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 34]

Adair	Corning	Higgins, Mass.	Ryan
Ayers	Crowe	Hill, Samuel B.	Sadowski
Barden	Culkin	Hoepfel	Sanders, La.

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and fifty-one Members have answered to their names—a quorum is present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

BENEFITS OF THE NEW DEAL

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio speech made by my distinguished colleague, Mr. O'CONNELL.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'CONNELL].

BENEFITS OF THE NEW DEAL

You will remember that President Roosevelt in his great Jackson Day speech urged everyone within his hearing to constitute himself a committee of one to carry abroad the real story of the New Deal. He expressed the hope that each one would so equip himself with the correct information, that he could, with accurate knowledge, explain to others previously misled by false propaganda the facts about this administration's program. This is but a statement of ordinary common sense. At first thought it may appear to be unnecessary; yet it is of extreme importance, and for a very special reason, with which I think most of you are familiar.

There is being waged against the President a determined battle to unseat him from the minds of the voters as a great man and a great President. The forces which have combined in this relentless task to falsify his record, to abuse his reputation for sincerity, to belittle and deny his accomplishments are made up of several groups; of Republican reactionaries, of disgruntled Democrats, of selfish men motivated in their speech and actions only by their own, often dishonest, desires. It is not my intention, however, to indulge in a period of denunciation. I have no desire to waste my time and yours with a recitation of the mistakes of those from whom our President has wrested the control of the Federal Government and returned it to the people. There is a far more worthy and far more profitable use to make of this opportunity to speak to you. That is, to carry out President Roosevelt's request that we do our utmost to present a true statement of what has been done for the United States of America since March 4, 1933. It is a mighty record, and one upon which no man need fear to stand.

In any discussion of the accomplishment of the Roosevelt administration it is necessary first to understand clearly just what was the basic need that faced the President upon his elevation to office. Briefly, he found 16,000,000 men and women out of work, at the point of starvation, and, worse still, in so low a mental condition that they were fertile fields for the seeds of almost any violent doctrine.

If we have ever faced the peril of removal of the Capitol of the Nation from Washington to Moscow, it was back in 1932 and early 1933. The banks in every State except South Carolina had been closed by gubernatorial action. More than 6,000 banks, with deposits of over three billions, had failed during the Hoover administration. A steady decline in purchasing power was the inevitable result. Countless urban residents were no longer able to pay decent prices, even for the bare necessities of life. Consequently, the cotton grower, the tobacco farmer, the cattle rancher, the corn-hog raiser, and the wheat farmer each was obliged to accept ruinously low prices for his product. The vicious circle of deflation was thereby completed; factory employment diminished almost to the vanishing point and workers had no money to buy either their own products or those of the farms; the farmers' purchasing power almost completely disappeared and they could buy nothing from the factories.

The most immediate problem confronting the new administration was the frightful condition of the banking system. Roosevelt's forthright action in declaring the banking holiday and providing for orderly reopening of such banks as were still solvent, and the expeditious liquidation of the institutions that could not continue operations undoubtedly salvaged the credit of America.

Compare for yourself these figures: In the 13-year period between January 1, 1921, and December 31, 1933, there were 188 bank suspensions in the six New England States, involving deposits of about $511,533,000. This includes 111 banks with deposits of $278,400,000 which could not be licensed to reopen after the 1933 bank holiday. Some of the latter have been reopened. This is an average of 15 bank failures annually. Now, between January 1, 1934, and December 31, 1935—a 2-year period, and during the first 2 years of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation—no banks closed in New England.

Similar figures for the United States show a startling improvement that cannot but bring home forcibly what President Roosevelt has done for the safety of the Nation's savings. During that same 13-year period more than 11,000 banks closed their doors, tying up deposits of over four billions. This is an annual average of more than 850 failures. In the 2-year period ending December 31, 1935, 91 licensed banks with deposits of approximately $47,000,000 suspended. Thirty-five of those banks were insured. Even though you may all have been fortunate enough to have escaped the dread experience of being caught in a bank failure, I am sure you can appreciate what it means to those depositors to get back 100 cents on every dollar up to five thousand immediately. Instead of the wiping out of life savings or the loss of much-needed cash, instead of destitution, there is solvency to a degree never before dreamed of.

Security and the knowledge that everything cannot be swept away—if your money is in an insured bank—has replaced the constant fear of loss that prevailed everywhere during those terrible years before March 4, 1933. And at what cost? To maintain the insurance fund, participating banks pay in a sum equaling one-twelfth of 1 percent of total deposits. This amounts to less than $35,000,000 annually. All banks, National and State, which are members of the Federal Reserve System and some 8,000 others are protected by deposit insurance. You may have heard the complaint that this assessment is an onerous burden on the banks. I strongly suspect that the complainants have neglected to state that with the inception of deposit insurance the long and universally deplored practice of paying interest on demand deposits was stopped. For banks, National and State, that are members of the Federal Reserve System alone that little item over the 5 years preceding 1934 amounted to an average of $243,000,000 annually, and no figures have been compiled on the amount paid by banks outside the System. So right here there is a saving to those banks of well over $200,000,000 a year.

One of the earliest measures for recovery sponsored by this administration was the farm act creating the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. As a direct result of the rental and benefit payments and the adjustment of production to needs, farm income has improved more than 60 percent since 1932. Once again farmers have money in their pockets, and none know this better than the manufacturers, for a market long denied them has been restored.

A million families—more than 158,600 of them in the six New England States—have been enabled to refinance their home mortgages through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. This was done at lower interest rates, which released considerable sums for other uses. A revamping of farm-credit machinery has saved several hundred thousand farms from the hammer of the auctioneer.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation really blossomed into the full flower of its usefulness under the Roosevelt administration. Previously its only function was to lend money to banks still open but in some cases rotten to the core. No aid had been given depositors whose funds were tied up in suspended banks. President Roosevelt changed this and the R. F. C. has disbursed over $5,000,000,000 in loans to insolvent banks, trust companies, mortgage companies, and to hard-pressed insurance companies, railroads, industry, commerce, etc.

The numerous agencies set up under the New Deal to cope with the emergency have spent a lot of money, true. The Budget has not been balanced, also true. We have borrowed billions to finance a gigantic program of aid to the farmer, to the businessman, to the unemployed—in fact, for all classes of people.

If during a period of rapidly dwindling revenues unemployment, business depression, and deflation the Government could increase the debt by over $5,000,000,000, as occurred during the last 26 months of the previous administration, without wrecking the Nation's credit, then we have nothing to fear now when business is on the upgrade, when tax collections are increasing by leaps and bounds, when men and women are going back to work, spending money again not only for the things they need but for those things that make life a lot more worth living. We find that factory weekly pay rolls have risen one hundred and twenty-two million in the past 36 months. Annual national income has risen more than twenty-two billions. The public debt increased at the rate of one hundred and ninety-five millions monthly under Hoover, and while things were getting worse and worse, yet disaster did not overtake the Treasury. In the 36 months under Roosevelt the debt rose two hundred and twenty-one millions monthly, while things were getting better and better—better than at any time in the last 6 years. In short, we are offered this proposition: Is the Roosevelt administration worth more to the public welfare than the sort of government to which the Old Guard insists we must return?

This dispensation of Federal funds, raised by borrowing American money, has been called artificial respiration. Well, what would you do with a man rescued from drowning—fold your hands and let nature take its course? It has been viewed by some as extravagant, wasteful, and practically dishonest. Have you heard of any hundred-thousand-dollar bribes or black satchels filled with securities in this administration? Is it dishonest or shameful to put bread in the mouths of the starving, clothing on the naked, shelter over the homeless? Is not the United States worth saving? Of course it is!

Before we entered the World War our public debt was $3,000,000,000. After the war the debt was $25,000,000,000. Twenty-three billion dollars were borrowed for death and destruction. Fourteen billions have been borrowed to fight depression and to promote recovery and reconstruction. More than $8,000,000,000 of this was disbursed in good loans that will be paid back with interest. If we get back only half of it, however, it will be more than Europe has paid us on war debts.

Finally, social security is to be provided for our people. The dread of a penniless old age need no longer clutch at the hearts of our workers. Hunger and destitution from involuntary unemployment will be avoided through a sensible program of unemployment-insurance reserves. When you buy a stock or a bond you have the assurance that the danger of being victimized by dishonest brokers and manipulators has been reduced by the Securities and Exchange Commission. Exorbitant rates for power and gas are being scaled down, and profits rightfully belonging to stockholders will no longer be drained away through the devious sewers of holding-company systems. Our natural resources—the oil, the coal, the timber, the grazing lands, water power, rich soil, and all the other blessings—are at last being given the attention that they sorely needed for a century and more. The specter of barren wastes instead of fertile plains is fading out.

Yes; even a brief study of the accomplishments of the New Deal will show conclusively that we have in the White House a President who has a clear idea of the needs of our people. He is a man with the courage and vision to carry out a program that is designed to equalize the burdens between the rich and the poor alike. For what has happened in the United States in the past 36 months we can thank one man—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

DEPARTMENT OF TERRITORIES AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by publishing a radio talk that I made over the N. B. C.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the Record I include the radio address delivered by me over the National Broadcasting System on March 11, 1936, as part of a program arranged for the discussion of S. 4250, a bill to create an executive department of the Government to be known as the Department of Territories and Insular Affairs, as follows:

I am very glad of this opportunity to participate in the program arranged for the discussion of Senator ERNEST W. GIBSON's bill providing for a Department of Territories. The people of Hawaii appreciate very highly Senator Gibson's deep interest in the problems of the Territories and island possessions, concerning which he has made a special study.

Hawaii, as a Territory, comes under the jurisdiction of the Congress and the Federal administration. The National Government administers the affairs of its Territories through the Department of the Interior. Since Hawaii was organized as a Territory, therefore, its business has been routed through that Department. Less than 2 years ago there was established in the Department of the Interior a Division of Territories, charged with the specific duty of handling the affairs of the Territories and island possessions. Through this Division, handicapped as it has been by a restricted staff, our administrative problems have been handled with a greater promptness and more sympathetic understanding than ever before.

Senator Gibson's proposal to create a department to look after the increasing responsibilities revolving around these communities is most gratifying. The advantages that would accrue to the Territories are obvious.

Hawaii, it will be remembered, came into the United States of its own volition in 1898, and was organized as a Territory in 1900. It is not a colony nor a possession, but an integral part of the Nation, just as was Arizona before it became a State. Its annexation, we hope and believe, has turned out to be one of the happiest of Territorial acquisitions. It cost the United States practically nothing. During the 36 years since it was fitted into the mosaic of the Nation, it has contributed in taxes to the Federal Government $5 for every one that has been spent on its administration and development. Its home government has run along on so smooth a keel that Washington has found it necessary to give it very little attention. Hawaii has had nearly 100 years experience in self-government before it became a Territory. Its delights of climate and scenery, in either summer or winter, have become appreciated so well that increasing streams of visitors make it a place of rest and recreation. Sitting as it does at the crossroads of the Pacific, ideas from all the world are received, and through the adoption of such as can be used, Hawaii has become a most progressive and forward-looking community. It challenges the world in the application of science to agriculture, and in many other aspects of its local life it is further advanced than many other communities.

The Federal Government has found, miraculously, that Hawaii commands the Pacific from a defense standpoint, and because of this is of inestimable value to the Nation. So it comes to pass that the Nation's strongest naval base and largest Army post are established in Hawaii as America's western outpost of defense. Finally it develops that that new agency of transportation, the airplane, is entirely dependent on Hawaii for its conquest of the Pacific. Whoever flies the greatest of oceans in almost any direction must cross this way.

With the passing of the decades the population of Hawaii has increased until now it is near the 400,000 mark. Few of its predecessors as Territories have had more than half that number of people when they were admitted to statehood. So Hawaii is asking that her fitness for entrance into the sisterhood of States be considered. She is confident that before many years pass the Congress will have declared her worthy and that she will have added the forty-ninth star to the flag.

Until that happy consummation of Hawaii's aspirations, it is very necessary that the great administrative machinery of the United States Government be better informed as to Hawaii's problems and needs, that the application of national measures be more promptly extended to the islands, and that various phases of Federal activities be more closely coordinated. Senator Gibson's bill has for its purpose such a result; and either this legislation or an increase in the facilities of the existing Division of Territories under the Department of the Interior should be favorably considered by Congress in order that our community may be more closely welded to the great Nation of which it is a loyal part.

LAWRENCE C. BROWN

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 417

Resolved, That there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House an amount equal to 6 months' compensation paid Lawrence C. Brown, late an employee of the House, which amount shall be paid in equal shares to Monnie Mae Brown and Dessie Mae Brown, widow and daughter, respectively, of Lawrence C. Brown, deceased, and an additional amount to Monnie Mae Brown not to exceed $250 to defray funeral expenses of the said Lawrence C. Brown.

The resolution was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF OLD-AGE-PENSION SCHEMES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 447

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by H. Res. 443, incurred by the select committee of eight Members of the House instructed to inquire into the acts and conduct of any person, partnership, group, trust, association, or corporation claiming or purporting to promote, organize, or further old-age-pension schemes, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $50,000, including expenditures for the employment of legal services, investigators, accountants, experts, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, together with incidental and traveling expenses of such committee or any member or subcommittee thereof, and of any agent, assistant, or employee of such committee or subcommittee, as well as witnesses subpoenaed to appear before the committee, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers authorized by such committee or by any subcommittee thereof conducting such investigation, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Sec. 2. That the official committee reporters, if available, may be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the words "if available" and insert "if not otherwise officially engaged."

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is out of order, inasmuch as it contains matter of legislative material which is forbidden under the rules of the House. I refer specifically to section 834 of Jefferson's Manual. And, further, that it changes existing law, which is prohibited by the same section of Jefferson's Manual. I state specifically that it might change the status of the Security Act, for example, inasmuch as it might endanger the whole legislative system of providing old-age pensions in our country. The scope of the resolution (H. Res. 443) is so broad as to include and therefore discredit the Securities Act. I make the further point of order that it violates the integrity of the membership of the House.

On that point, Mr. Speaker, the first resolution was introduced on January 29. No action was taken on that resolution. A further resolution was introduced on February 14. That resolution passed the House on February 19. The Committee on Accounts considered a resolution for making this appropriation under the original resolution and acted favorably thereon. Then a further resolution was introduced on March 10, and I maintain that that resolution of March 10 violates the rules of the House in that it was fraudulently introduced. The second resolution, which was brought in and passed by unanimous consent, was brought in without notice to the House, without a hearing, that I know of, and without a specific record vote by the House or a division of the House. It was brought here when the Members of the House were not present, at 12 o'clock, at which time it is seldom the custom for every Member of the House to be present, and points of no quorum are for that reason constantly being made at that particular hour. I myself walked in a few seconds too late to make any objection or to know what was really the content of the resolution, and was led to believe that it was a unanimous-consent request to make a minor typographical correction in the original resolution, objection to which would have been ridiculous. That resolution (H. Res. 443) involves every Member of this House. I have to read the resolution in order that the House may understand it:

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of eight Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed to inquire into old-age-pension plans with respect to which legislation has been submitted to the House of Representatives, and particularly that embodied in H. R. 7154.

H. R. 7154 is a bill introduced by Mr. McGROARTY, of California, to provide for the general welfare of the United States by supplying to the people a more liberal distribution and increase of purchasing power, retiring certain citizens from active gainful employment, improving and stabilizing gainful employment for other citizens, stimulating agricultural and industrial production and general business, and alleviating the hazards and insecurity of old age; to provide a method whereby citizens shall contribute to the purchase of and receive a retirement annuity; and for the raising of the necessary revenue to operate a continuing plan therefor; and to provide for the proper administration of this act; and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. The term "transaction" for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include the sale, barter, and/or exchange of either or both real or personal property, including any right, interest, easement, or privilege of commercial value therein or related thereto, whether actually made at the time or only then agreed to be made and whether under executed or executory contract or otherwise; also including all charges for interest, rent commissions, fees, and any other pecuniary benefit of any kind directly or indirectly derived from or for any loan, deposit, rental, lease, pledge, or any other use or forbearance of money or property; and also including the rendering or performance of any service for monetary or other commercially valuable consideration, whether by a person or otherwise, including all personal service, also transportation by any means, and telephone, telegraph, radio, amusement, recreation, education, art, advertising, any public utility, any water rights, and/or any and all other service of any and every kind whatsoever, but excepting and excluding therefrom any single isolated transfer of property of fair value less than $100 which does not arise or occur in the usual course of an established commercial business and excluding any loan, deposit, withdrawal from deposit, hypothecation, or pledge of property or money.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONAGHAN. No; I refuse to yield.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests this to the gentleman from Montana: It is impossible for the Chair to understand the points of order being made by the gentleman under the procedure thus far. Will the gentleman state first his points of order, and then the Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman argue the points of order?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I have stated three of them, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the gentleman to first state his points of order if he has more than one, and then the Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman discuss his points of order.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I stated, first, that it contains legislation; second, that it changes existing law; third, that it violates the integrity of the Members of the House; fourth, that it violates section 549 and section 553 of the rules as set forth in Jefferson's Manual, in that it contains insulting language; five, that it violates section 852 on page 399 of the manual, respecting the fraudulent introduction of a bill. I read section 852:

The fraudulent introduction of a bill involves a question of privilege, and a bill so introduced was ordered stricken from the files (IV, 3388).

The SPEAKER. And those are the points of order?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes; and I am now dealing with the last two points of order, that the resolution contains insulting language and was fraudulently introduced.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman is now referring to the resolution pending before the House?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes; the resolution now pending before the House.

The SPEAKER. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Montana that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] did not introduce the resolution now before the House?

Mr. MONAGHAN. Yes; he did introduce this resolution. I maintain that it contains insulting language and therefore violates the privileges of the House. He introduced this resolution, which authorizes the money for the resolution, which he that day by unanimous consent, and with only a half dozen Members of the House present, with none of the Townsend leaders here on the floor, had passed by the House; and with respect to that resolution I am reading what it provides so that the Chair will know what insulting language it contains.

The SPEAKER. The Chair fails to understand how the gentleman at this point can raise the question of what a former resolution passed by the House contains. The House passed that resolution, the RECORD so shows, it was adopted, and a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table. The Chair asks the gentleman to point out the insulting language in the pending resolution.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I have to read this in order to do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I read from the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, referred to me in House Resolution 443:

A purchase obligation is not a loan under this act.

Barter and/or exchange is defined as a plurality of transactions to the extent of the fair value of the property and/or service transferred or rendered other than money.

The term "income" for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include the gross amount of any and all money or its equivalent received from or for any service performed or from or for any proceeds or profit from any transaction, inheritance, or gift whatsoever.

The term "net income" for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include all money and/or commercially valuable benefit or its equivalent actually received by the annuitant after deducting only such charges and expenses as are directly incident to producing such net income.

The term "gainful pursuit" for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include any occupation, profession, business, calling, or vocation, or any combination thereof, performed for monetary or other commercially valuable consideration, remuneration, or profit.

The term "annuity" and/or "annuities" for the purposes of this act shall be defined so as to include the various sums and/or amount of money distributed and paid pro rata—

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman is not addressing himself to the point of order, but is reading the text of the so-called McGroarty bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana will confine himself, of course, to the point of order.

Mr. MONAGHAN (continuing reading):

and otherwise to the various persons who shall become and be the beneficiaries under this act.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I insist that I be given the privilege of this House to discuss the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order. That does not permit the gentleman to discuss extraneous matter.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The opponents are only delaying matters.

The SPEAKER. Debate on a point of order is for the information of the Chair, and the Chair therefore controls the time on a point of order. The Chair wishes to respectfully inform the gentleman from Montana that he must confine himself to the point of order. That does not permit the gentleman to discuss extraneous matter, or matters which are extraneous to the point of order or the merits of the resolution.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, may I make the point of order that the gentleman is now reading the entire text of the McGroarty bill, which he does not claim contains any insulting language. As I understand his position, it is that the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] is what constitutes insulting language. The gentleman is now reading a 25-page bill that, it seems to me, is entirely extraneous to the point of order that has been raised.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is well taken. What is contained in the McGroarty bill has nothing to do with the point of order which the gentleman from Montana has raised against the pending resolution.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Does not the resolution which we are considering this morning specifically appropriate money to investigate those persons who are organized to further old-age pensions? I will read the specific resolution that does contain the insulting language.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state to the gentleman that the question of the merits of the McGroarty bill or the merits of the investigation resolution are for the House to determine, and may or may not come up under debate upon the pending resolution. The Chair thinks the gentleman ought not discuss the merits of the resolution which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has reported under a point of order. The Chair asks the gentleman to confine himself strictly to the point of order which he has raised.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I am endeavoring to do so, Mr. Speaker, but to thoroughly discuss my point of order I have to read this.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that the points of order have anything to do with the McGroarty bill or the resolution which has heretofore passed the House, because that is behind us; and the Chair fails to understand where that has anything to do with the point of order raised by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The particular resolution that we are appropriating money for is to carry out the purposes of House Resolution 443, which resolution reads in this fashion:

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of eight Members of the House, and that such committee be instructed—

The SPEAKER. Now, the Chair would like to ask the gentleman to point out just how that involves the point of order which the gentleman has raised on the resolution pending before the House.

Mr. MONAGHAN. My point of order is that the privileges of the House have been infringed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules that point of order now. [Applause.] The Chair has heard enough upon that point of order.

Mr. MONAGHAN. That it contained insulting language with respect to Members of this House. There are many Members of this House who have introduced old-age-pension bills.

The SPEAKER. To what resolution is the gentleman now referring?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I am referring to House Resolution 447. House Resolution 447 is based upon House Resolution 443.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has asked the gentleman to point out the specific insulting language to which he refers.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The insulting language to which I refer is this:

And particularly that embodied in H. R. 7154 in the United States Congress, with special reference to the acts and conducts of any person, partnership, group, trust, association, or corporation claiming or purporting to promote, organize, or further old-age-pension legislation or schemes, and that such committee be further instructed to inquire into the history and records of the various proponents, operators, promoters, or schemers now engaged in promoting such legislation.

That makes Mr. McGROARTY a schemer. It makes myself a schemer. It makes every member of the 63 bloc on the Townsend matter a schemer and plotter and intriguer. I say it involves the integrity of the House.

The SPEAKER. The purpose of this resolution and this appropriation is to make available funds for the purpose of finding out and eliciting the facts with reference to this proposed legislation, or any other legislation of a similar kind, referred to in the Bell resolution, which clearly does not reflect upon any Member of the House. The Chair fails to see anything insulting in the language which the gentleman has just read.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I will read for the information of the Speaker the definition which Webster gives of the word "schemer":

One who performs schemes; a projector; a plotter; an intriguer.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. There is just one matter pending before this House, and that is the question of whether the House will make an appropriation to carry on an investigation which it has heretofore ordered.

The Chair has nothing to do with the resolution authorizing the investigation to which the gentleman refers. The House has already taken action on it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The Chair must take cognizance of House Resolution 443 as well as House Resolution 447.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot take cognizance of that resolution.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the right to be respectfully heard.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to give the gentleman a respectful hearing, but does not want the gentleman to wander all around the lot. [Applause.]

Mr. MONAGHAN. I do not want that either, Mr. Speaker. I will state—

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Washington that the Chair is now entertaining a point of order made by the gentleman from Montana, and cannot recognize the gentleman from Washington to submit another point of order.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I rise to a question of personal privilege then.

The SPEAKER. The Chair declines to recognize the gentleman for that purpose while the gentleman from Montana has the floor.

The gentleman from Montana will proceed.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin cannot take the gentleman from Montana off the floor by a parliamentary inquiry. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit the gentleman from Montana to proceed in order, perhaps this matter can be disposed of in a very few minutes.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, the rule under which I am proceeding specifically states:

Members having petitions or memorials or bills of a private nature to present may deliver them to the Clerk.

I have five specific points of order, and I have not been fully heard on any of them, Mr. Speaker, I may say. [Laughter.]

Am I not right in assuming, Mr. Speaker, that this Resolution 447 could not be brought before the House without House Resolution 443 first having been enacted into law?

The SPEAKER. It could be done, but the other resolution to which the gentleman refers has already been adopted by the House. The Chair is trying to impress the gentleman from Montana with that fact. What the authorizing resolution has to do with the points of order made against the pending resolution appropriating money to carry out the purposes of the authorizing resolution heretofore ordered by the House regularly, as the Journal and the Record show, the Chair up to this time has been unable to understand.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I will say to the Chair that I have not been able to hear a word the Chair is saying because of the mumbling going on around me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated, and repeats, that the authorizing resolution to which the gentleman refers has been regularly adopted by the House, as the Journal and the Record show. What that has to do with the points of order made against a resolution appropriating money to carry on the investigation which the House has heretofore ordered, the Chair up to this time has been unable to understand.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 447 makes specific reference to House Resolution 443. It states:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 443, incurred by the select committee of eight Members of the House instructed to inquire into the acts and conduct of any person, partnership, group, trust, association, or corporation claiming or purporting to promote, organize, or further old-age-pension schemes, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to—

This language, Mr. Speaker, I think specifically brings House Resolution 443 before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair differs with the gentleman. The reference to the resolution to which the gentleman refers was used merely to identify the resolution to carry out the purposes for which the appropriation is being made.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, could the House pass intelligently this resolution without a knowledge of House Resolution 443? I maintain it could not, because it would have to know the purpose, it would have to know the background, it would have to know the reason for the investigation, and whom and what it was to involve.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman concluded?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I would like the Speaker to answer the question whether or not the House can act intelligently without this knowledge.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with whether or not the House can act intelligently. That is for the Members of the House to determine, but since the gentleman asks the Chair the specific question, the Chair certainly thinks it can.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I will put it this way, Mr. Speaker: Without a knowledge of House Resolution 443 I maintain that no Member of this House can adequately pass on House Resolution 447. It would scarcely know for what purpose it was appropriating money.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to be patient with the gentleman, the Chair has tried to be courteous to the gentleman. That is a matter to be considered by the House in the way of argument on the merits when it comes to consider the resolution. So far as the Chair can see, it has nothing to do with the point of order raised by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MONAGHAN. The Chair has overruled, then, one of my points of order, or all of them?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to overrule all the points of order that the gentleman has so far made. [Applause.]

Mr. MONAGHAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I present a point of order involving the privileges of the House.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair make his ruling.

The Chair wants to be entirely courteous to the gentleman. The Chair hopes the gentleman understands that. The rules of the House provide that certain named committees shall have leave to report at any time on matters therein designated, and concludes with these words:

And the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

The Chair understands this resolution proposes to make an appropriation out of the contingent fund of the House, and therefore is specifically authorized by the rule to which the Chair has just referred.

The Chair does not desire to be facetious with the gentleman, and I am sure he so understands. However, the Chair does not understand how a previous resolution, adopted regularly by the House, as shown by the Journal and the RECORD, has anything to do with this particular resolution. The time for the gentleman's point of order on that resolution has passed. The Chair overrules the points of order made by the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I maintain at the time no proper notice was given, and that therefore I was not here as promptly as I would have been if given such notice, which notification is customary in case a Member is keenly interested in a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not responsible for the absence of the gentleman.

The Chair at this time desires to reiterate what he stated yesterday: That insofar as he can control the matter, the Chair is not going to permit the use of personalities in the House during the remainder of the present session. [Applause.] Members must refrain from the use of personalities while engaged in debate upon the floor of the House or while the House is in session. Rules were established many years ago for the purpose of maintaining orderly procedure, and they have proved to be satisfactory throughout all these years. The use of personalities is contrary to the rules of the House and bound to provoke disorder, which is something we do not want to occur in the House.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I should like to present an amendment to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] has the floor.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, not now.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] yield so that I may propound a unanimous-consent request to extend my remarks on the Pettengill long- and short-haul bill?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for that purpose?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

THE PETTENGILL BILL WILL AID THE RAILROAD WORKERS OF THE COUNTRY, GIVE JUST AND FAIR TREATMENT TO THE RAILROADS, PROMOTE RECOVERY, AND PROTECT THE PUBLIC INTERESTS

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to the Pettengill long- and short-haul bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 3263, known as the Pettengill bill, seeks to repeal or eliminate so much of paragraph 1 of section 4 of the Interstate Commerce Act of 1887, as amended June 18, 1910, and February 28, 1920 (U. S. Code, title 49, sec. 4), as relates to what is known as the long- and short-haul provision of said section 4. This bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. This committee is made up of Members of the House of wide experience and a great deal of training in matters pertaining to this subject. The committee held extensive hearings, and after carefully considering the bill and amending it, by unanimous vote reported it to the House as it is now before us.

This measure has the active approval of all the railroad brotherhoods and railroad crafts, representing all of the railroad workers of America. It also has the approval of the railroads, both great and small. The chambers of commerce of my section, many coal operators, many of the leading coal miners, and other citizens engaged in various professions and activities have approved this measure and strongly urge me to support it.

I made up my mind sometime ago that this legislation is necessary and that it would not only be helpful to the railroad workers and the railroads but its enactment would be in the public interest; and therefore I have been active in doing what I could to bring this matter before the House, and will continue to give this measure my earnest and active support until it is passed.

WILL HELP RAILROADS AND WORKERS

It is a matter of common knowledge that the railroads of our country have had their depression, and in many instances more acute and for a longer period than other industries and instrumentalities of commerce in our country. Competition from water, motor, and air transportation has become more active and has grown rapidly during the last decade or two. These means of transportation have made great inroads into the freight and passenger business of the railroads.

In our complex industrial, commercial, and social life the four forms of transportation appear to be necessary. It cannot be denied, however, that for many years State and Federal Governments have spent billions of dollars in subsidizing water, motor, and air transportation. Billions have been expended by the Government in providing suitable harbors, docks, canals, and channels of rivers to aid water transportation. Other billions of the taxpayers' money have been expended by the Federal Government, States, and counties to construct a great system of highways which have directly promoted and benefited motor transportation. The Federal Government has expended other large sums of the taxpayers' money in promoting and developing air-transportation facilities.

The railroads have seen their business cut down as the years have come and gone on account of these other transportation facilities.

When the long- and short-haul measure was first enacted in 1887 and later amended we were only developing the regulatory processes of the railroads, and there was not then a well-defined and effective means of regulation as we have today, and there was very little competition from these other facilities of transportation at that time. The long-and-short-haul measure was necessary for the protection of the shippers and the people generally of the Nation.

That condition no longer exists. The long-and-short-haul now has become a powerful instrument in the hands of water, motor, and air transportation to greatly weaken and in many instances to destroy railroad properties and railroad investments and to take away the jobs of thousands of railroad workers.

The workers of no unit of industry or commerce have suffered so grievously on account of unemployment in the last few years as the railroad workers of this country. It is only fair to say that there are only one-half as many railroad workers today as there were in 1920, and that the railroad workers have been reduced from 1,600,000 in 1929 to 1,000,000 today—a loss of 600,000 since 1929. In other words, about two railroad workers out of every five have lost their jobs since 1929. For the most part, these railroad workers have been trained from their boyhood in this particular character of work, and most of them are unsuited, after spending so many years of their lives in this special training of railroad transportation, to enter any other work or any other line of industry. It is urged that this measure will be of great benefit to the railroad workers of the Nation, as well as to the railroads themselves.

It is up to us to prevent the bankruptcy of our railroads and the wiping out of the investments made by the citizens of this country in this great industry. Twenty-six billions of dollars or more have been invested in our railroads. They have millions of persons employed. The railroads furnish a livelihood for many millions of persons. Without this legislation, unemployment of the railroad workers will increase instead of diminish. The value of honest investments in railroad property will continue to fall.

EQUALITY OF OPPORTUNITY

Until recent years there was a general feeling of prejudice against the railroads. The railroad owners and managers were responsible to a very great extent for this unfavorable attitude of the American public. Watered stocks, oppression of shippers and workers, rebates, and other unfair practices reacted unfavorably on the public mind. These conditions have almost entirely disappeared, and the public begins to realize that the railroads are a great quasi-public industry, and this great industry, with its millions of investors and workers, cannot suffer without this suffering being reflected in agriculture, industry, commerce, and labor generally of the Nation. The policy of doing something to the railroads has given away to a fair and just policy of giving to the railroads and the railroad workers the same fair and equitable treatment as is given to other industries and workers of the Nation. We need the railroads and must have them.

As heretofore pointed out, the Government has subsidized other facilities of transportation out of the United States Treasury, and they have not been and are not now hampered by the so-called long- and short-haul provision.

This measure, in repealing the long- and short-haul clause, places the railroads on an equal footing with water, motor, and air transportation and unhampers the Interstate Commerce Commission in making rates; but this measure definately places on the railroads the burden of proof to justify a lower rate for the longer distances, as compared to the shorter distances, as being reasonable, fair, unprejudicial, nonpreferential, and nondiscriminatory as between persons, companies, firms, corporations, or localities, or any particular description of traffic whatsoever, as is provided in sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Interstate Commerce Act. Therefore, it is pointed out that under the present law a shipper may ship goods by water from New York, down through the Atlantic Ocean, through the Panama Canal and Pacific Ocean, to San Francisco and by rail to the interior of the United States at a lesser rate than would be paid by the shipper by rail from New York to this same point in the United States. This is made possible because of the so-called long- and short-haul provision of the Interstate Commerce Act. This is discrimination in favor of water transportation. There should be no discrimination as between our several agencies or facilities of transportation. The Interstate Commerce Commission should have the power to make such rates as will be fair and just in the public interest and will avoid discrimination against producers or localities or as between the different agencies or facilities of transportation. In other words, as we understand this measure, it gives to the railroads a square deal and makes it possible to eliminate this discrimination. It will provide fair treatment for those who have invested their savings in railroads, and will cut down unemployment and give greater opportunities to the railroad workers.

TAXPAYERS

According to the press reports, the budget of the State of Kentucky calls for the expenditure of about $23,000,000 for the present fiscal year. Let us not forget that the railroads of Kentucky will this year pay more than $5,000,000 in taxes, and the railroad investors and railroad workers themselves will pay other millions in taxes.

Class I railroads of the Nation in 1929 paid $396,682,634 in taxes, but owing to the depression and the depreciation in value and earnings their taxes in 1933 were only $249,623,198. The railroad taxes in 1933 represented 8 cents of every dollar of revenue, and was 1.8 cents per dollar greater than in 1929.

To show some of the serious effects on the railroads because of competition and the depression, I call your attention to the total expenditures by class I railroads for durable and consumable goods in 1923 was $2,797,852,000, and in 1934 these expenditures had dropped to $812,936,000.

I realize that ship lines engaged in coastal trade are opposed to this measure. They are entitled to fair and just treatment, but there is no good reason why they should be accorded preference and be shown partiality.

UNEMPLOYMENT ON THE INCREASE

William Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, a few days ago issued a statement in which he pointed out there were 12,625,000 unemployed workers in this country at this time, and that unemployment had increased 1,229,000 in December 1935 over December 1934.

The number of unemployed workers in this country in June 1933 was fixed at 10,000,000. It is quite evident that we have not yet solved the unemployment problem in this country.

Mr. Hopkins, Administrator of Relief, declared recently before a committee of the United States Senate that we were still at the peak of relief needs—that there were more than 20,000,000 people in this country who still needed relief. This is more than double the number who were on relief in 1933.

It is hoped that this measure will lessen unemployment and the number who need relief and at the same time give just and fair treatment to the railroad workers and the railroads and promote the general welfare of our country.

I feel sure that this measure will meet the almost unanimous approval of this House.

INVESTIGATION OF OLD-AGE-PENSION SCHEMES

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN]?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield at this time. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is brought in pursuant to a mandate of the House twice expressed. It has nothing to do with either the merits or demerits of the Townsend plan or any other kind of a plan. Personally, I think very little is ever accomplished by the investigations we order, but it is too late to raise that question now, and it becomes the duty of the Committee on Accounts to make the will of the House operative.

It is passing strange to me how Members who claim to be opposed to investigations should sit glued in their seats time after time as these resolutions are presented, letting them pass almost by unanimous consent, and then when a resolution is brought in to provide funds for carrying on the investigation they then voice strenuous objections.

The resolution for this investigation was presented and discussed at length by its author, the gentleman from Missouri, and by others. While there was no record vote, I recall, and all of the Members will recall, that only four votes were cast against it. Sometime later it was decided to vacate the resolution, and the gentleman from Missouri came in and received the unanimous consent of the House for the consideration of a new one, which was passed without a vote being cast against it.

Where was the gentleman from Montana at that time? He states that he was away. Well, it is his duty, if he is opposed to these things, to be on the floor and fight them when they come up here for consideration.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN]?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield now.

Mr. Speaker, an effort is being made to lock the stable after the horse is gone. If there was opposition to this investigation, it should have been presented during the hour that was allowed for the discussion of the bill.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield? When was the hour allowed for that discussion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order unless he first addresses the Chair.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman, but I will answer his question before he asks it.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Let me ask the question first.

Mr. WARREN. The resolution was brought in by the Rules Committee and an hour's time was devoted to its discussion.

Mr. MONAGHAN. On House Resolution 443?

Mr. WARREN. I am talking about the first resolution, and if the gentleman had been here when the second resolution was introduced, an objection by himself could have stopped it and this would not be up for consideration today.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Is the gentleman in position to say he is always on the floor promptly at 12 o'clock?

Mr. WARREN. No, indeed.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Or that every other Member of this House is here at that time?

Mr. WARREN. But I am always here, I may say to the gentleman, when anything of importance in which I am interested comes up for consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. MONAGHAN. I may say to the gentleman that I was not notified it was coming up, nor was the House. They brought it up without any notice being given to the membership.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, it is going to be argued here today that the amount presented is not justified.

Without meaning to pass bouquets or compliments, I think we all agree that the personnel of this investigating committee is one of the ablest, one of the finest, and one of the best that has ever been appointed in this House. [Applause.] This applies to all eight of the Members. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL], the author of the original resolution, does not resort to back-alley tactics. He is a man of the highest character and integrity and, above all, a most estimable gentleman.

He came in here and in a very fine and forceful and vigorous speech told the House what he intended to do if the resolution passed; and they told the Accounts Committee, with all of the earnestness at their command, that they believed they needed this sum of $50,000, and that they would conserve every single penny of it to the best of their ability.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. Will the gentleman also tell the House the queries that were made of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] at the time the hearing came up on this resolution as to the break-down he had of the basis on which he was going to spend this $50,000?

Mr. WARREN. Well, Mr. Speaker, I never tell what transpires within a committee, but since the gentleman has asked the question, I was the one who asked the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] to give us a break-down of what he intended to do with the money. He and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] gave it to us the very best they could, and as a result of those statements the committee voted out the resolution for $50,000.

Now, I am going to be asked later on if I will not permit an amendment to be offered to this resolution. The gentlemen who ask it know that the previous question is always called on resolutions presented by the Committee on Accounts as well as by the Committee on Rules, and certainly I shall move the previous question at the end of the debate. I hope very much the House will vote to order the previous question, but, of course, if it is voted down an amendment will be in order.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the sum of $50,000 is grossly excessive, and I intend to offer an amendment, if the House will join in voting down the previous question, reducing the amount to $10,000, which should be more than ample to defray all the legitimate costs and expenses of the investigation. As a matter of fact, all the records, papers, books of account, and files of the Townsend organization are here in Washington. The national officers of the organization are here, the national organizers are here in the Capital, and there is no reason why the investigation, in the main, cannot be conducted here in the city of Washington. The eight members of the committee are all lawyers, and there is no justification for employing expensive legal counsel.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Is it not true that the day this Resolution No. 443 was passed we met the previous night and we were assured by the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER] that the resolution would not be considered until the following day, and that the gentleman and I came into the Chamber about 10 minutes after 12, too late to make any objection to House Resolution 443?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. The gentleman is correct, although I do not attach to the passage of that resolution the importance that the gentleman does, for it undoubtedly would have been passed by this House in any event to supplant the original resolution.

Mr. Speaker, we are now confronted with the question of how much money we are going to devote to this investigation. We are now curtailing Government expenditures and have already cut the appropriations below Budget estimates in many meritorious items in the departmental appropriation bills which we have acted upon in this session, and in order to be consistent we ought to practice economy on a proposition of as doubtful value as this investigation. It has recently been announced in the press that the relief appropriation to feed the unemployed is to be cut in half. The present allowance is the meager sum of $8.55 per week for a family of five persons.

I think one of the wisest things Will Rogers ever said, which was frequently quoted, was "As a Nation we have never lost a war and never won a conference." I should like to paraphrase that and say that "As a Congress we have never lost an appropriation and never won an investigation." We ought to reduce this appropriation, for nearly every Member of the House will, in the cloakrooms, admit that this investigation will not be won and will be a fiasco.

It used to be the order in Congress to appoint investigating committees to "whitewash" certain individuals, groups, and organizations in the country, and vast sums of the taxpayers' money have been spent in the past for many so-called investigations of that character. We are now to have a new type of investigation and have "smearing" committees to "smear" certain groups and organizations, particularly the Townsend movement, in an election year, because these citizens have conceived a plan for old-age pensions and the redistribution of purchasing power among the masses and, by exercising their constitutional rights of petition, of freedom of speech, of freedom of the press, and of lawful assemblage, have convinced approximately 6,000,000 of their fellow citizens that their plan possesses merit and should be heard and debated and voted upon by their representatives in Congress. They have organized themselves into clubs in nearly every community in the Nation and are holding meetings which they open by singing America, followed by repeating the pledge of allegiance to the American flag, which is prominently displayed in all their meetings; and they usually close the meetings, which are devoted to a discussion of social, economic, and political problems by offering prayer, just as the flag of our country adorns this Chamber and as we open the sessions of the House with prayer by the Chaplain; and yet because of this fact they have been denounced and ridiculed by Members of this House for the patriotic and religious fervor manifested in their meetings. These thousands of Townsend meetings all over the country are very similar to the town meetings which were held by our forefathers in the early days of the Republic, and in which were formulated the principles and policies which constitute to this day the foundation stones of the Republic. Edmund Burke said, "You cannot indict a people." Mr. Speaker, I say you cannot indict the 6,000,000 citizens who are enlisted in the Townsend movement by "smearing" the leaders, even if you prove that they receive compensation for their services, or that someone connected with the movement has been guilty at sometime in the past of violating some city ordinance.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I am sorry I cannot yield. I have only 4 minutes.

The citizens of this country have the right peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances, pursuant to article I of the 10 original amendments to the Constitution, sometimes called our Bill of Rights. Article IV of the same amendments to the Constitution guarantees—

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

Certainly, if this investigation is to be conducted in conformity with the Constitution, which we assume will be the fact, it is going to be rather limited; and this committee cannot engage private detectives to go into the homes and offices of these citizens and ransack their homes and offices and private, personal papers, and also interrogate them in violation of their constitutional rights by inquiring into their past lives, which would be unlawful and irrelevant and would have nothing to do with the real merits of the investigation.

Mr. Speaker, this is still America and not Russia. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, as the ranking member of the Committee on Accounts, I attended all the hearings on this resolution. Two members of the select committee appeared before the committee and three members who are opposed to the Townsend plan appeared before the committee. These gentlemen opposed this resolution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of our committee, Mr. WARREN, says, we are but the agents of the House. Only four Members out of 434 voted against this resolution for investigation, and then when the substitute was considered, not one Member voiced objection. We, the committee, representing the House, must accept that as a mandate that you want this investigation to proceed in an orderly way. If we fail to report a resolution to provide money for the investigation, we would be subject to criticism by the House. Mr. Speaker, you have appointed eight honorable men of outstanding ability to conduct this investigation. Some of the Members, I understand, are in sympathy with the plan that is to be investigated, one openly advocating its adoption.

We are told by those opposing the appropriation of money for the investigating committee that everything was clean; there was nothing to investigate; expert accountants made monthly reports. Then what is to be feared if everything is now and has been conducted in a proper manner.

It seems to me if those who are in favor of the Townsend plan know that it is sound and know that nothing will be found, they, themselves, should be backing this resolution to the limit, because, in the end, if this select committee finds nothing whatever wrong, then I should feel that the Townsend plan had received a great deal of advertising that it otherwise would not have received. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, those advocating the plan should welcome the investigation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS].

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Department of Justice and the Post Office Department have investigated the Townsend movement, and both of these departments have given that movement a clean bill of health.

I also understand that the fund from which $50,000 is to come from has been overdrawn by $105,000. I also understand that this is the taxpayers' money.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STUBBS. I decline to yield. It is my conviction that because of the fact that the national headquarters are here, the papers are here, the books are here, that $10,000 would be sufficient for the carrying out of this investigation. If the investigating committee is going to investigate all of the Townsend clubs and all of the Townsend people in this country, Gabriel will blow his horn before the investigation is concluded, and it will cost millions. [Laughter and applause.]

I am fearful that in the excitement of the investigation it may turn out to be somewhat of a persecution, not because of the committee but because of the sentiment of the people who demand this investigation.

I should like to call upon my colleagues to vote down the previous question, so that the Smith amendment of $10,000 will be permitted to prevail. I think that sum is sufficient. Even the sum of $10,000 would be a waste of time and the people's money.

The Townsend people—God bless them—are not calling for this investigation; but now that it has been forced upon them, you will find them cooperative.

Again, I should like to call attention to the statement of Gamaliel, the greatest lawyer, statesman, and philosopher of nineteen hundred years ago, who said to the people under like conditions that if this movement that has recently arisen in our midst is not of God it will come to naught; but if it is of God, it cannot be destroyed.

I say to you, my colleagues, if this movement is right, it cannot be destroyed. I call upon you to take the advice of at least one great man of those nineteen hundred years ago, whose words would apply today. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, the question of investigating committees is receiving a great deal of criticism in this country. We are investigating everything, and a constant series of investigations are being officially ordered by both the House and the Senate. It seems to me it would be the better part of wisdom for the House to hold down the amount of money to be expended. So far as I know, the Townsend people are perfectly willing to have the investigation made, but they think the amount of money, $50,000, is altogether too much. I think so, too. Therefore I shall vote against the resolution to provide $50,000.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. COLDEN].

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Speaker, the request for such an exorbitant sum of $50,000 for the investigation of the various pension and promotion schemes smacks of persecution rather than of an investigation. From current reports it is evident that this so-called investigation is directed largely at the Townsend pension plan. Now, the Townsend organization, as I understand it, is not hidden in a mystery maze like some of our giant corporations, but is a simple organization directed by Dr. Townsend and two associates. I am further informed that the principal records are kept here in Washington at the Townsend headquarters. I am also informed that the principals in the Townsend organization are ready and willing to appear before the investigating committee in Washington to furnish any and all information at their command. Certainly nothing like $50,000 is required for an investigation right here at the doors of the Capitol. It seems to me it would be a far better procedure to appropriate $5,000 or $10,000 at the utmost, and later, if the committee finds it is necessary, further appropriations could be made in accordance with the judgment of Congress.

No one entertains any doubt whatever as to the purpose, the integrity, and the good faith of the millions of members of Townsend clubs throughout the country. These people are asking that Congress consider a measure in which they are concerned. I believe they have that right. I believe that everyone will concede that these people are within their rights in joining Townsend clubs and in helping to maintain the organization, and I, for one, believe that an overwhelming majority of these members are acting in absolutely good faith. What could shake the confidence of these aged people more than to find a Congress that denies them a hearing on one hand and then votes a $50,000 investigation on the other? This appears to me to be an unfair proposition, consequently I shall not support a $50,000 appropriation.

I believe it would be much fairer and the right thing to do to bring the Townsend plan, or the McGroarty bill, on the floor of the House and give adequate time for a thorough investigation of its provisions. That would be a far more equitable procedure and would go much farther to solve this problem than an inquisition of Messrs. Townsend, Clements, and Smith. If these gentlemen are guilty of any infractions of the law, those who are familiar with the facts could relieve Congress of an expensive gesture by referring the matter to the Attorney General, either of the Federal Government or of the various States.

It is true that the Ways and Means Committee, in its judgment, has not reported out this bill. It is also true that those of us who have tried to bring the bill to the floor by signing a discharge petition have been unable to secure the required signatures. But I believe the Ways and Means Committee could report out the bill, without recommendation, without surrendering either the dignity of the committee or the honest convictions of its members. The Rules Committee, on a previous occasion, was exceedingly generous to the Townsend advocates in bringing the submission of the McGroarty bill as an amendment to the social security bill. I believe it was generally recognized that the Townsend plan was not germane to the social security bill and would have wrecked it if adopted. But with the limitations upon debate the Townsend plan did not have a Chinaman's chance. The Rules Committee could certainly arrange to give proper time for a thorough discussion of a pension plan that is sweeping the Nation.

It is my conviction that the aged people of this Nation and the proponents of the Townsend plan have an absolute right to ask for the consideration of their cause. Evasion of this issue, ridicule of its provisions, persecuting its leaders by investigation is no answer to this problem. As one Member of this House, I believe it to be our duty to forego the expenditure of an extravagant sum and to ask the Ways and Means Committee to report out the McGroarty bill, without recommendation if the committee cannot agree, and give it a fair hearing and its day in the legislative forum. If the Townsend plan is impossible and impractical, a full hearing on this floor will bring these defects to light. If this Townsend program proves to be logical and sound, then we, as Members of Congress, and the people we represent have nothing to fear. Let us bring the Townsend plan on the floor, pour on the light, the public will be familiarized with its benefits and its defects, its aged proponents will have had a fair deal, they will know why the bill is defeated or is passed, and such procedure will sustain their faith in our country and in democratic principles.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORITZ].

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, I was one of the four who voted against the resolution originally, and I am proud of that vote. I am also against this $50,000 appropriation for an investigation. Last October I was in Chicago and attended the Townsend convention. In that convention a special time was devoted to complaints. Not one person had one complaint against this organization. I am against this investigation because the postal authorities have made a thorough investigation of this movement and the postal authorities have given them a clean bill of health. This investigation is not warranted or called for. You cannot fool the people all of the time. They know that this investigation is made against the movement because it might interfere with some election. If the Townsends were all Democrats, you would never have gotten this investigation. I challenge the Rules Committee to grant a rule to investigate some methods of the W. P. A. and see just how fast we will get a resolution out for that. Of course, we will not get an investigation against that; everybody knows that. This investigation is uncalled for; it is only for political purposes; and the Townsends, as well as the people of the United States, know this is unwarranted.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAIN].

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Speaker, I propose to exonerate the name of a well-known American character from the stigma which has lately attached to it. The great Daniel Boone no longer will turn in his grave at the use of the word "boondoggle." The Bell committee comes seeking a boon of $50,000. The chairman of the committee comes from Missouri, a State that specializes in dogs—hound dogs—that howl. Perhaps from this day forward we can relieve the lexicographers of further study on the derivation of the grand old word "boondoggle." The gentleman from the hound-dog State seeks a boon of $50,000. Mr. Speaker, the proposed appropriation is one of the finest examples of "boondoggling" that has come to the attention of the American Congress.

Behold, a country doctor proposes a bold remedy for the distress of needy, law-abiding elderly people. The Federal Government does other things in a big way. Our country doctor proposes that the Federal Government square itself with these elderly people in a big way. Perhaps the bigness of the proposal has proven to be a handicap to the friends of old-age pensions. But Uncle Sam does other things in a big way. Why not ask him to do a big thing for the people who devoted a lifetime of useful service to the things that have made Uncle Sam big?

Congressmen begin to hear about the proposal. Some of them think it fantastic and say so; but they continue to hear about it. This being a representative form of government, some of the writers say they will work to elect someone who will represent their views. Then a special election is held in Michigan, and it appears that followers of the country doctor really have the ability to get representation on the question of a just and generous Federal pension for deserving, elderly, law-abiding citizens. The followers of the country doctor write more letters to their Congressman, and this seems to irk the Congressman still more. The Congressman is not satisfied to take his typewriter on his knee and write a letter on Government stationery with free postage saying that this is a matter on which there is a difference of opinion, as in the case of birth-control, the long- and short-haul, block-booking, blind-selling, and chain-store legislation.

Eight Members of Congress—in reality six Members, because we do have two friends on the committee—drawing $833.33 salary per month are all hot and bothered because the country doctor in a mood of supersalesmanship talks about $200 a month for the pensioners. Someone with a flair for publicity puts forward a bold idea and captures the headlines and the editorial pages. Result, the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Michigan, two of the members of this special committee, get excited about the $200 per month which is named as a maximum in the McGroarty bill. They fail to give other Congressmen credit for sufficient intelligence to know that the McGroarty bill does not guarantee a minimum, and they fail to make a case against the 2-percent transactions tax, which is the bone and sinew of the old-age revolving-pension plan. But they come before this body and ask for $50,000 to carry on their investigation. Fifty thousand dollars is equivalent to the imposition of a 2-percent transactions tax on $2,500,000 turn-over of the business of this country. They want $50,000 to hire an attorney to help the gentleman from the Fourth District of Michigan cross-examine the mild-mannered Dr. Townsend. They want $50,000 to convince the old people of their districts that you can not get $200 for 10 cents. The committee knows that schools, churches, and lodges do not have to pay for the fuel and lights they use, so they want $50,000 to show the old people how foolish they are to drop money into the collection plate at Townsend meetings.

Fifty thousand dollars would provide employment for 50 men on a W. P. A. project for a whole year. But the Bell committee wants $50,000 to prove that Dr. Townsend is a crook. Fifty thousand dollars would keep 100 young men in a C. C. C. camp for a whole year. But the Bell boondogglers want $50,000 to prove that speakers at Townsend meetings have no traveling or living expenses.

Fifty thousand dollars would buy 10,000 acres of cut-over land in Michigan on which trees could be planted to serve our children and our children's children. But the gentleman from the Fourth District of Michigan says, "Help Hoffman" by giving the Bell Committee $50,000 to hire stenographers in Washington and to pay the fees of an attorney from Kansas City.

Fifty thousand dollars would provide a year's training at West Point for a dozen additional cadets. But these boondogglers want $50,000 to prove that the members of Townsend Clubs need guardians. Fifty thousand dollars would defray the expenses of 500 veterans of the Civil War living in Michigan who would like to visit the Capital which they defended before they die. But these investigators ask for $50,000 to provide six or eight Congressmen with a joy ride to Los Angeles to find out how Robert E. Clements operated when he was in the real-estate business. Fifty thousand dollars would provide 25 additional homes for families entitled to the benefits of resettlement. But this resolution proposes to appropriate $50,000 to the Bell inquisitorial special committee who prefer to meet the opposition behind the cloak of congressional immunity instead of going out on the stump and facing the issue on its merits.

In the United States of America a bell is the symbol of liberty. The Bell at Independence Hall that rang out on that July morning in 1776, proclaimed the completion of a Declaration of Independence, and in that immortal document we find these words:

That all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed.

I make so bold as to say that while the Federal Government has not encroached upon the life and liberty of our elderly law-abiding citizens directly, nevertheless the Federal Government indirectly, by its sins of omission as well as commission, has deprived these elderly law-abiding citizens of much of that which makes life and liberty worth having.

And now the gentlemen from Missouri and the Fourth District of Michigan come before this body and ask for an appropriation of $50,000 to use in interfering with, disrupting, and attacking harmless, peaceable meetings of good American citizens who see fit, as one outlet in their pursuit of happiness, to attend Townsend meetings, pay dues, and buy literature put out by Dr. Townsend.

We know that the Bell of 1776 is cracked and can no longer ring out the message of independence and liberty. Perhaps in this present day we have another bell that has lost the faculty of proclaiming liberty in the pursuit of happiness for our humble elderly citizens scattered throughout the land. And so these members of this special committee, or a majority of them, come before this Congress and ask their colleagues to appropriate $50,000 of the people's money to help these other Congressmen who have not the wit, the patience, or the wisdom to meet the issue on its merits in their respective congressional districts.

(Whistle) Come Boon! Come Boon!

(Whistle) Come along little doggie: come along.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL].

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been receiving some of the best entertainment I have had for a long time. The gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS] has said—and I took down his words—"The Townsend people are not calling for an investigation." That may be true, but I say this: A lot of people who used to be Townsend people, but who are now disillusioned, are calling from all quarters of the United States for an investigation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

Mr. COX. Does not the gentleman recall that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH] appeared before the Rules Committee urging the adoption of the rule making provision for the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BELL. I recall that distinctly. We have had a lot of jumping back and forth, blowing hot and cold, since the original resolution was introduced. I recall quite well the first meeting of the Rules Committee, when the gentleman from Washington appeared before the committee during the course of the first hearing that morning, I think it was a Thursday or Friday. He said, "Gentlemen of the committee, I want to appear before this committee in opposition to this matter." Another hearing was set for the following Monday morning so he could be heard. In the interim between Friday and Monday a certain meeting was held, I am told, at which a gentleman named Clements was present and gave his advice, and upon the following Monday morning the same gentleman from Washington, who said he was going to oppose it, again came before the Rules Committee and said, "We have no opposition to the adoption of this resolution." They said, "Yes; we welcome an investigation", and a day or so afterward the Townsend Weekly came out with a great red headline across the top claiming that they themselves had demanded and forced the investigation, and that all the Townsend people wanted the investigation.

Then another gentleman complained this morning because he and his friends were not here at 12 o'clock the other day to vote against the last resolution that came out, although they had previously announced they were unanimously for the investigation.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Then we have the ridiculous spectacle of our friend coming in here and saying, "We want an investigation, but we do not want you to have any money with which to conduct it." They say, "All the books are right here in Washington and our auditors have already made an audit." They say in substance that all we have to do is hand it to you on a silver platter and you can look it over at your homes. Now, that is not what we want to do, because it will not assure a true investigation. It would only present the Townsend picture. The people of the United States are entitled to the real facts lying back of this movement, which is the most gigantic, the most far-flung political movement that has swept across the stage of American politics in recent times. Such an organization perhaps has never before been thrown together. They have offices in the city of Washington. They have offices in New York City. They have offices in California. They have offices in Chicago. Those are the great area offices.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BELL. I decline to yield.

Aside from those four great area offices and their national office in Washington, there is a director in every State who, I understand keeps books, and, aside from the directors in every State, there are directors, or whatever they are called—they have some special title for them—in every congressional district where they have taken a foothold. Now, if we are going to have an investigation, let us make it a real one. I appeal to you Members, if you are sincere in believing that the American people ought to know the real facts about this, not to cripple us. Give us enough money to get down to the bottom of it. Do not put us in the position of having to be content with receiving the figures which they hand us at the Washington office.

The announcement was made by one paper a few days ago that they—the Townsend leaders and officers—have been ready for us for many weeks. They have brought to Washington the greatest battery of high-priced counsel, I am told, that has visited this city for some time.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I decline to yield.

The papers the other day carried the names of lawyer after lawyer who are said to have come here to Washington to assist them in this matter.

Complaint is made because we have employed one young man to assist this committee as its counsel. I appeal to you that $50,000 is the very smallest sum with which we can possibly hope to even make a fair investigation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, no Member who supported the McGroarty bill in the last session of Congress could afford to take a position of opposition to the investigation. Everybody who knows anything knows that. That is the answer to that.

As far as I am concerned, my reaction to the investigation was unfavorable from the start. I want to say now that I cannot see any need of voting the sum of $50,000 or $10,000 to investigate old-age-pension promoters or old-age-pension plans.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; I am sorry I cannot yield.

Unquestionably it is the plan and not the promoters against which this investigation is directed. The original resolution—No. 418—instructed the committee "to inquire into the acts and conduct of any person, and so forth, promoting old-age-pension schemes." As has been stated, those persons, their organization, and their books are all here in Washington, and they are available. They offer to turn them over. No money need be expended, in a preliminary way at least, for this purpose. However, the last resolution—No. 443—instructed the committee "to inquire into old-age-pension plans, particularly that embodied in H. R. 7154, the McGroarty bill, now pending in the United States Congress."

Now, that plan needs no investigation by this committee. It was investigated in the last session by the Ways and Means Committee, and there is a large volume of evidence in the hearings. It has been investigated by economists all over the country, and the results of their investigations have been radioed to the world. Investigations are coming to Members' offices every day. You can do all the investigating you want to by reading the literature coming to your offices that has been written against this plan.

I have been investigating this plan myself for a year and a half. I have found some things for it and some things against it. If the plan needs investigation, certainly a committee of this character is not qualified for that purpose. It should be done by the Ways and Means Committee in regular hearings or by bringing it out on the floor of the House, as many of us have petitioned.

I want to say to you that no more popular thing could be done by this Congress to restore Congress in the minds of millions of people and convince them that we are not trying to persecute this movement than to vote down this resolution to appropriate $50,000 for this useless investigation.

Mr. Speaker, let me show you something peculiar about this appropriation resolution. I have already pointed out that the first resolution adopted called only for an investigation of promoters of old-age-pension plans, and that the second resolution adopted called in addition for the investigation of old-age-pension plans. Now, this resolution we are considering—that is, House Resolution 447—reads as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 447, incurred by the select committee instructed to inquire into the acts and conduct of any person—

And so forth—

purporting to promote, organize, or further old-age-pension schemes, not to exceed $50,000—

And so forth. What I want to point out is that nothing is said in this appropriation resolution about investigating old-age-pension plans. It raises the question whether the committee would have any right under the above language to make such an investigation. But whether it has the right or not, there is certainly not the need. I do not anticipate that this investigation will shed any light on the Townsend plan. In fact, I am furnished free more information on it than I have time to read and digest.

Mr. Speaker, why single out the Townsend plan for investigation, as is specifically done in Resolution No. 447?

Is Congress any more interested in the internal financial affairs of this movement than of dozens of other movements? There is no charge that any of the funds of the movement are being used for corrupt purposes or for lobbying. There is in fact no lobby here in Washington for the McGroarty bill. The lobbying is all back home, and you cannot stop that.

This will be the smallest financing plan ever investigated by Congress, only 10 cents a month. About 15 years ago an agrarian organization swept the Grain Belt. It was owned by three men. It elected State tickets. The membership fee was $16. A dozen years ago a secret society, revived in the South, swept the West, and carried everything political before it. It was owned by one man, and the membership fee was $10. There is an organization now in the South, with a far more grandiose scheme than the Townsend plan, to make every man a king. It was in the sole ownership of one man, copyrighted by him. There is a social-justice political movement in the North under the sole control of one man, supported by contributions, and proposing, like the Townsend plan, to elect a Congress. There is an organization in the East controlled by the most brilliant corporation lawyers in America and allegedly financed by the great business interests, which proposes to overthrow this administration and restore corporate rule in national affairs. Has any action ever been taken by Congress to investigate any of these schemes? Why not investigate the merits of communism? Of socialism? Of E. P. I. C.? To ask all these questions is to show the injustice and futility of the undertaking.

Mr. Speaker, an adequate system of pensions which will assure the aged people of this country a life of independence in decency and comfort would be the crowning glory of our civilization. They are all entitled to nothing less, the great majority of them would ask nothing more.

Is such a system of pensions reasonably within the means of the American people? Can we support such a system without unduly taxing our economic resources, our national income? We have never done this, we have never even approximated it, we have never even tried. No nation has. It would, I admit, be something entirely new under the sun.

I shall undertake to answer this question, or, better said, to advance some suggestions which may be helpful to others as it has helped me to the view that it is reasonably within our means to provide the aged people of the country, who find themselves without sufficient means of support and are dependent upon charity, either public or private, an income which will enable them to live independently and comfortably. Such a system of pensions would not only be the greatest blessing which society could confer on its aged people, but it would remove the greatest anxiety gnawing at the hearts of all people, the fear of a destitute old age.

Once in a great while an idea occurs to me which broadens my range of vision. I welcome the occurrence of these new ideas as an assurance that I have not yet mentally fossilized, that I am still capable of new thought and new vision.

Not long since I read the very able speech delivered by Governor Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, at the convention of the American Bankers Association at New Orleans last November. In the course of his speech Governor Eccles drew attention to the fact that in dwelling upon the increased national debt incurred under this administration, only one side of the picture was being presented, that nothing was being said about the increase in wealth during the same period of time, and he gave statistics which I shall not go into now, showing the enormous increases in stock and bond values, in bank deposits, in agricultural income, in wages, in industrial and business profits, several times outweighing the increase in the public debt.

The statement which gave me a new idea was Governor Eccles' quoting of Macaulay, the eminent British historian, at a time when the historian was combating the very criticism then being leveled against the British Government that is now leveled against the present administration. Macaulay pointed out that the British national debt at that time was £800,000,000. He then went back to a time when it was only £80,000,000. He then showed an immeasurable increase in the wealth of England over the former period and the great betterment in the lot of the English people; how the whole standard of life had raised contemporarily with this increase of debt.

Now—

Said Governor Eccles—

today the British debt is not merely £800,000,000, as in Macaulay's time, but £8,000,000,000; but again there has been a commensurate increase of British wealth and corresponding betterment of the lot of the people.

Yet the debt of England had increased tenfold by tenfold, meaning a hundredfold, from the earliest to the latest period.

As I read, the pension plan which is now a subject of national controversy and of approaching investigation by the House of Representatives, jumped into my mind. Even though it furnishes a goal not now attainable, or ever attainable, the question arose, May it not furnish unexplored possibilities? Is the past a sufficient answer to it?

I had another thought. It was with regard to wages. I was reflecting upon a news item growing out of a building strike and the claim that the wages of certain craftsmen were too high. I coupled this news item with a similar claim regarding high-wage conditions growing out of and immediately after the World War, and to which I had been inclined to give some credit. Now, I saw in a flash that the idea of high wages, or too high wages, was based upon a background reaching to the dawn of history—a background of low wages and no wages. Since then I have been inclined to question the view that wages can be too high.

The same negative background holds good as to other great advances made by mankind. History is about 5,000 years old. It is only 150 years since the preamble of the Declaration of Independence was treason, punishable by death. When Jefferson said "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created free and equal" no such truth was self-evident, no such truth had been evident throughout all recorded history. With that declaration a new idea of human rights was born into the world. The treason of the Declaration of Independence was that it was backgrounded upon 50 centuries of the divine right of kings.

It is a fair question whether we are not limited by the same background in our view of old-age pensions. What is that background? Measured in terms of history, it is 50 centuries of no pensions, no provision whatever for the aged. Only the poorhouse. Measured by the centuries, it is only yesterday that any such idea of old-age security found expression, and then only in the most limited and meager way.

"Before the immense possibilities of man", said Emerson, "all mere experience, all past biography, shrink away."

Now, I am not going to argue from this premise that we can cut loose from all standards, from all rules of guidance. There are some features of a social-security program which I have thought out in my own mind to fairly clear conclusions, some standards or rules of guidance, and I want to state them here. I think you ought to have them for what they may be worth:

First. An economic system cannot be built upon and supported by a system of social security. The system of social security must be built upon and supported by the economic system. If we are to have an adequate old-age-pension system in this country, we must have as its foundation an adequate system of incomes from other sources to support it. And I will add that the more adequate the system of incomes the less need there will be to draw upon old-age pensions. At this time I could not qualify for an old-age pension even under the very liberal McGroarty bill, and I trust I will never be able to qualify.

Second. Pensions, whether for old age, unemployment, military services, or for any other social need, are not a primary addition to the wealth or income of the country. They are a sharing of the wealth or income by the more fortunate with the less fortunate. To the extent that we can take from those who get more than they spend and hoard it, and distribute it among those who need it and must spend it, we will get an increased purchasing power and improved general conditions, and I am strongly in favor of this; but the pension must come from a sharing of income, and this sharing of income, if we are to provide for all of our aged in decency and comfort, must reach into all incomes, big and little. It will take so much there is no other way. And if and when the income fails the pension will also fail.

Third. A pension system should have some basis in, some relationship to, the existing order of things. Let us look about for a moment and see what the existing order of things is, what we have done and are doing in any fields in the matter of old-age pensions. Let us look about for some standards of guidance, if any such standards exist.

We shall find little guidance in the way of general old-age pensions provided by government. A number of the States in recent years have passed old-age pension laws. None of them runs over $30 per month. My own State is perhaps a fair illustration of the operation of these State pension laws. The law calls for $1 a day, but in some counties the pension has been as low as $6 to $8 per month, and not paid in some months. It is utterly inadequate and uncertain. It is a source of constant and bitter disappointment and dissatisfaction. It is unworthy of our civilization and much below the standard of our ability to pay. State old-age pensions shed little light on the possibilities in the field of social security.

In the Federal domain we find no light. The last session of Congress took the first step in general old-age-pension legislation by the Government of the United States. It was a very limited step. It was disappointing to those who want to see suitable provision made for the aged people of the country. It only adds little to little—the mite of the Government to the mite of the States. But it was a beginning; and perhaps it was too much to expect, when all of the States had done so little for their aged people, that the Federal Government at the start-off would do a great deal.

Obviously, if we want an adequate old-age pension, we cannot look to the record of past public performance, either by the Federal Government or the States. We may, however, look elsewhere and find some accomplishment considerably above either of these performances. In the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee on the social-security bill it was developed that there are 150,000 or more industrial workers in the country in receipt of company- and trade-union pensions which average about $65 a month. Government employees may retire on pensions of up to $100 a month. Veterans' pensions range up to $100 a month. The Railroad Pension Act of the last Congress carries a maximum of $120 per month and an average of about $80 per month. Certain groups of municipal employees retire on pensions ranging from $50 to $100 per month. There may be some other systems, but these are the main ones which have been called to my attention.

I have in mind a man who is younger than I. He is retired on a pension of $100 a month. He is an active, vigorous man, now engaged in other affairs. I rather envy his lot. If we were able to do as much for every other man, the social millennium would be just around the corner. Perhaps the main reason we have not at least approximated that condition for all aged people is because we have not thought we could do it and have not tried to do it. Old age was left to dependence on relatives, to public charity, or the poorhouse. Some few organized groups in government and in stable fields of employment have seen to it that retirement through age means a continued existence in security, decency, and comfort. Is the achievement of this much-to-be-desired condition beyond the reach of all the needy aged of the country? I affirm with the utmost conviction that the answer is not to be found in the past.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, much of the discussion about the Townsend plan goes too far afield for practical purposes. I think we need not concern ourselves with the question whether it furnishes a new economic system, or will pay off the national debt, or will replace all other forms of taxation, or will cure all our economic ills, and so forth. I do not think such claims are helpful to the reception of the plan. The Townsend plan is now embodied in the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, which it is proposed to investigate. The McGroarty bill levies a transaction tax and distributes the proceeds of the tax pro rata among the pensioners, less the amount of the pensioner's income from other sources. The transaction tax is the heart of the plan. It is irreplaceable. While great incomes should bear their due proportion of the cost, no other system of taxation could be devised which could even approximate the amount required for the payment of pensions under the Townsend plan. The transaction tax, therefore, is the Townsend plan.

The transaction tax is the germ of an idea opening up new resources and possibilities in the field of taxation. I am not an economist, I am not a tax expert. But as this proposed legislation has revolved in my mind the impression has formed and grown that we can go beyond the tax means of the past and support an old-age pension beyond the present very low standards without unduly burdening the resources and processes of our economic life.

This is the thing upon which my mind concentrates and which I should like to see done. I should like to see the transaction tax competently analyzed and a study made of its application in the various fields of the national economy. Perhaps in some fields the tax could be increased, in some decreased, in some cut out. Perhaps it should be graduated. The amount of revenue in each of the major lines of commerce, industry, and agriculture could be approximately estimated and an appraisal made of the attendant burden of the tax. In some cases the tax may be more burdensome than profitable. Some highly concentrated forms of industry and commerce may escape taxes which would fall on independent systems. Questions such as these are what I should like to see worked out. I have confidence there would still remain the revenue to support a system of pensions which would take the shadow of want and destitution from the heart of old age.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, we just listened to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] make an indictment against those who oppose the use of $50,000 for the investigation of the Old Age Revolving Pension Fund, Inc. The need for this investigation, according to the gentleman from Missouri, is based largely on the fact that this organization has offices in various parts of the country, and that each of these offices must be investigated. Since when has it become criminal or subject to investigation for any organization to have offices in all parts of the country?

It has been stated today that the books, papers, and accounts of the Townsend plan are in Washington. They are open for investigation by the investigators or accountants of the committee. Why in the world they need $50,000 for such an investigation is beyond my comprehension. I have no objection to an investigation, nor does the Townsend organization object to the investigation. But I do certainly object, at a time like this, to spending $50,000 on an investigation that can be readily conducted here in Washington for five or ten thousand dollars.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK. Is this not the fact, that no investigation of this type is justified by this House unless it is conducive to the enactment of legislation? Our friend from Missouri has failed utterly to advise this House what legislation he has in mind even if his investigation proves successful.

Mr. FORD of California. That is true. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. We had an almost similar situation before the Committee on Labor, but in that case there was actual fraud. We had under consideration the old-age-pension bill. We produced evidence before the committee without any special investigation on the part of the House and broke up that racket.

In the present situation both the Department of Justice and the Post Office Department have given a clean bill of health.

I do not think any investigation is needed. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORD of California. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If this $50,000 is appropriated, I would ask the gentleman from California whether most of it will not be spent in California?

Mr. FORD of California. I question that; it will be spent all over the country.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It is a nice season to go to California, it is springtime.

Mr. FORD of California. It is always springtime in California.

Mr. Speaker, I refuse to yield further.

If the Congress would spend the same amount of time and energy and money on open discussion and intelligent study on the floor of this House on the McGroarty bill that it is devoting to investigating and attempting to ridicule that bill, I am certain that the attitude of the thinking Members of this body would quickly change their minds as to the merits of the Townsend plan as represented by the McGroarty bill.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say in conclusion that it is my judgment that $10,000 is ample to make this investigation. I hope the Members of the House will vote "no" on ordering the previous question, thus enabling us to amend the resolution to call for $10,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, a great deal has been said today which is entirely beside the question. The House adopted a resolution to have this investigation committee appointed and the committee has been appointed. We assume, therefore, that the House wishes the investigation to be made.

The only problem today is how much money should be allowed the committee to perform its duties adequately and to fulfill the mission which the House has given to it. We asked for $50,000 after due consideration of the time element involved and the magnitude of the problem. It may be that our work can be completed with the use of only a small part of that money, but we know that we are faced with a far-flung organization which has offices in all parts of the country, and it may be necessary for us to send people to various parts of the country before we can collect completely the information we wish to gather.

A great deal has been said about search and seizure, and about persecution. If there develops any element of unwarranted search or seizure or persecution in this investigation, I am sure those who may suffer from it will find in me their warmest and most ardent defender. I have accepted membership on this committee with the idea that we shall do the job the House has given us and do it just as well as we can with as little publicity as possible and with as little infringement of any private right as may be possible under the circumstances.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I cannot yield.

Mr. Speaker, Congress will only be in session, in all probability, for an additional 2 months. We believe that time is of the essence. Rather than to string this matter out over a long period of time we believe it should be completed in a few weeks, if possible. As far as I am concerned, if it is necessary to put 20, 30, or even 50 men on this work, I believe we should do so, and do it quickly, rather than carry on with fewer men over a longer period of time. We believe it will more fully follow the desires of the House to have this investigation completed in 2 months by the use of more people rather than in 6 months by the use of fewer people, and this is why we are asking for this amount of money.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. McGROARTY].

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, not everything that comes before this House impresses me, as perhaps it should. I was brought up and trained as a newspaper man, and newspapermen become a little cynical; so I am not greatly impressed by the attempt to make this a serious matter.

I recall a reported incident in the House of Parliament in England many years ago when an Irish member, Sir Boyle Roche, rose in his seat on an occasion like this and uttered these immortal words:

I smell a rat; I see it in the air; I shall nip it in the bud.

[Laughter.]

Fifty thousand dollars of the harassed taxpayers' money is being asked to smell a rat, to see it in the air, and to nip it in the bud.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. Does it not occur to the gentleman as being peculiar that we are now proposing to spend $50,000 for an investigation of organizations interested in old-age pensions, yet since the month of January we have had pending before the Rules Committee a resolution to investigate the Power Trust and Radio Trust of the United States, but cannot get any action on it?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGROARTY. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Is not the basis of our opposition to this resolution the wasting of $50,000 of public money?

Mr. McGROARTY. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, people who deal in terms of a $200 a month payment to individuals, totaling $20,000,000,000 of money to be raised every year from taxpayers, should not be frightened at the expenditure of this insignificant sum of $50,000, which is one-fourth of 1 percent of the amount that they desire to tax us annually.

But that is not the reason for my rising this afternoon. I want to bring some reassurance to the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS], who declared that the Townsend leaders have not asked for this investigation, and to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORITZ] and others, who more or less expressed the same sentiments. The investigation authorized by House Resolution 443 was not only asked for but specifically demanded by Townsend leaders.

On Sunday, March 1, 1936, Edward J. Margett, State area manager of the Townsend plan for California, was scheduled to deliver a radio address in reply to the very able analysis of the plan recently presented by our colleague, Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA, of California. This plan was abandoned and changed to an explanation, at the request of Townsendites, of the attitude of their leaders toward the present investigation.

In this radio address Mr. Margett said:

We welcome the present investigation of the Townsend plan because it places Congress on the spot; but is it an investigation of the Townsend plan or an investigation of our organization with the idea of throwing up a huge political smoke screen?

Mr. Margett's speech was addressed to the United States House of Representatives, and he further asked whether the present investigation would include the Townsend plan itself.

If it does not—

Said Mr. Margett—

then it will be quite plain that the investigation of the Townsend movement was made in the hope of diverting the minds of the people from the Townsend plan.

House Resolution 443 was adopted by the House to meet this specific request that there might be no question of the powers of the committee to investigate and report on the plan as well as the financial methods of its promoters. The challenge of Mr. Margett has been answered by this resolution. I submit, in all fairness to the investigating committee which brought in the amended resolution, that the Members of the House should recognize that in adopting it they acted upon a definite request of the Townsendites.

[Here the gavel fell.]

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, what benefit are the people of this country to derive from the passage of this resolution to appropriate $50,000 to investigate the Townsend plan and the people sponsoring this legislation? The proposal made in this resolution is absurd and would be a waste of public money. To anyone that has made a study of the old-age pension plan proposed by Dr. Townsend and embodied in the McGroarty bill, now pending in the House of Representatives, it is clearly seen that two great principles are involved in this plan—the first provides security for the men and women of this country that have reached the age of retirement; the second provides for business recovery by accelerating the circulation of money.

If we are to investigate the people advocating the Townsend plan, and the passage of the McGroarty bill, why not investigate fraternal organizations, labor unions, and other associations advocating and sponsoring other forms of legislation—retirement pay, annual vacation on pay, sick leave on pay, which is sponsored by organized Federal employees, the 6-hour day sponsored by organized labor, and other legislation proposed by organized groups in endless numbers. The Townsend plan is a constructive movement, supported by millions of earnest men and women of all ages. If fraud is being perpetrated by certain individuals under the guise of supporting this movement, the Department of Justice and the postal authorities are far better equipped to investigate and stop such frauds and bring the guilty to justice than this House committee, whose members can better serve the interests of the people they represent by attending to the legislative duties and departmental affairs pressing for their attention.

Mr. Speaker, what is the real purpose of the sponsors of this resolution? What will be accomplished by spending $50,000 for this investigation? It is contended that the object of this resolution is to defeat the Townsend plan by persecuting and discrediting the sponsors of the movement.

Mr. Speaker, if this is a sound and constructive plan, it should be considered on its merits. If it is unstable and fantastic, as its opponents claim, what have they to fear in bringing this proposed legislation before the Members of the House for a fair and impartial consideration?

Mr. Speaker, we live in a progressive age, changing conditions lead to new thought and new plans. In advancing the welfare of our people, what is more important than providing for the security of the men and women who have reached the age of retirement, and whose labors and efforts have secured and presented to the succeeding generations all that this country of ours lavishes on its fortunate people. A plan that will bring to young men and young women an opportunity for employment and service now being denied them. A plan that will increase the circulation of money, stimulate business, and restore prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, let us be fair with the millions of earnest men and women who advocate the Townsend plan. Let us bring the bill before both branches of Congress for a free and full discussion of its merits, giving the Members an opportunity to perfect the legislation with amendments that we may insure that the best interests of all the people are served.

INVESTIGATION OF OLD-AGE-PENSION PLANS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I made the first speech against the Townsend plan ever made in this House 14 months ago, and I am still against it, as beyond doubt it is unsound and impossible and no person could ever receive $1 under it.

I am not for this resolution, however, because after we spend $50,000 we will not know one more fact than we know today. The $50,000 will be wasted, with no good accomplished. It has been shameful the way officials of the Townsend plan have taken money from the aged poor of this country. We already know from Dr. Townsend's own admission that up to October 1 he received $600,000 in cash contributions, exclusive of the enormous receipts from his Townsend Weekly. This ought to be enough for Congress to take some decisive, constructive action in reference to this matter, without wasting $50,000. What more facts does the Congress want? What does it intend to do after getting more facts? Let it do now what it intends to do, for it has all the facts needed.

Mr. Speaker, I have seen millions of dollars wasted in 20 years on investigations. No good whatever has come from any of them, and no good will come from this one, hence I must therefore vote against this resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MONAGHAN].

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to thank the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] for his courtesy in giving me this time. Any remarks I made with respect to procedure involved were not directed to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], who has been most courteous in notifying anyone interested in H. Res. 443 and H. Res. 447, both of which were referred to his committee.

Mr. Speaker, my opposition to this particular resolution, in addition to the points of order I have heretofore recited, is that it is a waste of $50,000 of the people's money at a time when you read such dispatches as the following, appearing in yesterday's papers:

PITTSBURGH.—Fay Templeton, once queen of musical comedy, has left Pittsburgh to spend her last days in the Actors' Fund Home at Englewood, N. J., it was learned yesterday.

The fortune which she owned during many years on the American stage has vanished and friends say the former star refused to accept the hospitality of their homes here because it would be charity.

The 70-year-old actress, however, felt differently about the home for aged actors because she had helped to support it generously for many years.

"There's no use in putting off the evil day any longer," Miss Templeton reportedly said to friends just before departing for Englewood. She was the widow of William J. Petterson. She lived quietly in an apartment here, but in recent years made vain efforts to find a place for herself in the movies, stage, or radio.

The death of her husband, prominent Pittsburgh attorney, precipitated the former "gay nineties" queen into financial difficulties. His estate was hard hit by the depression, and stocks in which the once-glamorous Fay had invested her stage earnings lost their value.

This is Friday the 13th, which does not mean anything to me, as I am not superstitious, otherwise I would not have even ventured into the discussion. I wonder, however, if it means something to the particular Members of the House who are going to vote indirectly against the aged people of this country by trying to persecute men who are endeavoring to promote pension proposals in this country?

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONAGHAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that on yesterday the Senate voted an appropriation of only $30,000 to investigate the campaign expenses and contributions in the Presidential election this year for senatorial elections in 32 States of the Union? We are proposing to appropriate twice that amount here to investigate an old-age campaign in this country.

Mr. MONAGHAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and I wish to say that I am fully cognizant of the tremendous disparity between the two appropriations. I hope the House will vote down the previous question and open the bill to amendment, as I would like to offer the following amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "further", insert "and/or oppose, misrepresent, and persecute."

Mr. Speaker, if the committee acts according to the real intent of congressional investigations, the suggestion of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] will be carried out. It will recommend legislation for the aged people of this country. I doubt, though, that they are going to do this; in fact, I am confident they are not going to do this. Their main purpose is not only to discredit, as I have stated before, those persons outside of Congress who are interested in old-age pensions but the Townsend bloc of 63 Members here, the Townsend steering committee, and the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY], and anyone else upon whom they might indirectly or by inference cast reflection. I know they cannot find anything, but it is regrettable that the House itself would be a party to any question of reflection upon its own Members. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee appointed by the distinguished Speaker to investigate old-age-pension schemes and plans, special reference being had to the acts and conduct of promoters and organizers, their history and record, as well as the financial set-up of such groups, permit me to say in the beginning that I, for one, as a member of that committee, am duty bound to strictly follow the mandates of the wording of what I conceive to be a most serious and important resolution. I enter upon this responsibility with an open mind. I propose to deal only with the facts as I find them and let the chips fall where they may. It may be of some information to the House to know that I have given considerable thought and study to the purposes of the resolution in question as it aids and affects legislation. And I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that if this committee is to perform the character of public service that the American people desire, whether they belong to the Townsend clubs or whether they are opposed to the Townsend philosophy, the money that is requested in this appropriation, in my judgment, is not too much. It is obvious that a careful and thorough investigation must be made into the subject matter of this resolution if value is to be received for any expenditure made at all. In the event there is any money unexpended when the investigation is closed you and I know the same reverts to the United States Treasury. Upon this point let me state emphatically that I do not propose to spend one dime more than I believe is absolutely necessary in carrying forward this important work. In answer to some of the gentlemen who think that the members of this committee have accepted the appointment for the purpose of barnstorming, junket, or publicity purposes, let me again speak rather definitely and plainly in connection with that unwarranted suggestion. I have the greatest respect for the high purposes and sincerity of every member of the committee, having reached that conclusion at the meetings that we have had, exchanging thoughts and ideas upon this current problem.

I did not ask for this appointment; I did not seek the position; but when I was requested by the Speaker to serve upon this committee I gladly consented, believing that I might render a little public service to the people of my country. [Applause.]

Reference has been made in the debates upon the floor of the House to fraud, intimidation, and many other immaterial and irrelevant matters which go far afield from the true purposes of the resolution at hand. Let me admonish those in this Chamber who are opposing this investigation, and I say this in the most charitable manner, that insofar as one member of the committee is concerned these counter-offensives shall have nothing to do with the issue at hand and receive no consideration. We do not propose to be taken off our feet by issues which are far afield from what we understand is plainly set forth in the resolution we are discussing. As I said in the beginning, I propose to stick to the facts that are material to this investigation, and which we are permitted to ascertain by law under this resolution, and to the facts alone. [Applause.]

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I am for this investigation. I also understand that the Townsend organization, at whom the investigation is directed, is for the investigation, and I understand the author of the McGroarty bill, the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] is whole-heartedly in favor of this investigation. However, we are unalterably opposed to the amount of money which is being taken from the poor taxpayers and is being squandered here today in this fashion. The amount of $50,000, Mr. Speaker and Members, is wholly unnecessary.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. No; not now.

Do you Members over on this side of the House who have been continuously harping upon the matter of economy, the gentleman from Pennsylvania who has continuously asked where we are going to get the money, and you conservatives on this side of the House who have asked that we refrain from wild spending of money realize what you are doing? Let us get down to business, stop this pussyfooting, and we will not have any investigations of this kind. Bring out the McGroarty bill and put it on the floor of the House, vote it up or down, vote "yes" or "no", and then there will be no need for investigations. The Rules Committee has many bills pigeonholed that should come out of the committee. Why not bring them out on the floor of the House?

We will know then whether or not the poor and the old people are going to get the consideration to which they are entitled. I refer to the remarks of my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK], when he again tried to becloud the issue and say that this bill calls for $200 a month. I will respectfully ask the gentleman if he will read the bill. If he did, he will find it does not do any such thing.

Mr. Speaker, we have had before the Committee on Accounts, on which I have served since I have been a Member of the House, repeatedly, investigation committees coming in and asking for $50,000. This seems to be the amount always asked for at the outset, with the expectation they will get, likely, $5,000, $6,000, or $7,000.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. Sorry; not at this time.

Recently we had an investigating committee coming before the Committee on Accounts with respect to the investigation of the chain stores. Seven thousand five hundred dollars is all the money that was appropriated for that committee, and they have done a wonderful job and have legislation now pending before the House.

What is going to become of this money? I understand they have brought a lawyer here from Kansas City, although every one of the eight members of the committee is a man of the highest character and they are among the finest lawyers we have in the House, well qualified to act, and yet they need the advice of additional counsel. Just a lot of nonsense. Some criticism has been made here of the counsel who has been retained by the Townsend organization. Why, naturally, they are entitled to their counsel. Do you expect them to stand back and not be advised by anyone? They are being criticized also as to the amount of money they are paying. Look at the amount of money being paid here. And that is not all they expect to get; it will not be long when the committee will want $50,000 more.

As I understand it, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL] said he was not going to engage in any back-alley tactics. If the information I have already received is correct, they are already using back-alley tactics. They are using methods which generally are used by cheap shyster detective agencies that are sneaking around, intimidating and threatening the employees and others connected with the Townsend movement.

This is a reflection upon the Members of Congress and should not be tolerated, and I for one want to register my serious objection to this type and character of investigation; and in my estimation $150 per month is the top that should be paid for any investigator, stenographer, or auditor for this nature of work.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the Department of Justice and the Post Office Department have just concluded a very "fine-tooth-comb examination"; and if there was anything wrong in the slightest degree they certainly would have "clamped the lid" on the Townsend organization long ago—and this in itself indicates to me that they are making progress in a clean and upright and honest manner.

Where are the so-called watchmen of the Treasury who have continuously objected to appropriation, in all manner to cut down appropriations of this kind? I am surprised that they are not all "up in arms" against this squandering of the taxpayer's money. They seem to be sitting silently and frozen in their seats and permit this squandering of the people's money in a manner which will bring no good to anyone.

Yesterday the Committee on Appropriations appropriated the sum of $100,000 to the Committee on Accounts for purposes of investigation. That $100,000 is already expended. The committee has a deficit at the present time without the present $100,000 being included. So you can readily see that there is going to be an additional appropriation necessary in order to carry out this investigation. According to the figures which have just been enumerated by the gentleman [Mr. HOLLISTER], the committee expects to put on 30 or 40 auditors and investigators. At $300 per month you can readily see where we are headed for, and if you are going to start this investigation with that kind of expenditure, heaven only knows where we will end. Stop this kind of nonsensical spending of money for foolishness of this kind. Stop it now!

I cannot understand why it is necessary to employ auditors when there are many men already on the Government pay roll, who are receiving $150 per month and who could be borrowed from the various departments such as the P. W. A., the Federal Housing Administration, and other departments, which I am informed have many men in their employ who are not busy at this time.

The same thing applies to attorneys. The Department of Justice has many able attorneys who are receiving less than $300 per month, and who are perfectly capable and qualified to render such service as this committee may require.

This same also applies to stenographers. There are a great many stenographers in the Resettlement, P. W. A., H. O. L. C., F. H. A., and other of the alphabetical departments which are too numerous to mention, and who are capable of performing such legal and clerical services as this committee will require. Why not use these?

And now for the detectives. The Department of Justice have an unlimited number of men who perhaps do not receive the amount of money asked for by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BELL]. The class of men for detectives I understand that are employed are apparently the cheap, shyster, persecuting, Hawkshaw, amateur detective type, who have made it the practice of hanging around the steps of the Capitol for the past several years praying for an opportunity of this kind to present itself. Information has come to me that the men employed by the investigating committee have thus far taken a particular delight in harassing, browbeating, persecuting, and crucifying the clerks and wives of the members of the Townsend organization.

All the books are here in Washington—none in California. The officers are here, and those that are not will gladly come, I am informed. I want to say to my good friend from Wisconsin, Mr. O'MALLEY, that the right time to go to California is any time of the year. [Applause.]

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If this resolution passes, the chamber of commerce at Los Angeles will be informed—

Mr. KRAMER. I do not know of any reason why the chamber of commerce at Los Angeles should be informed. You are asking for $50,000 for an asinine investigation, which could be used to much better advantage.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KRAMER. I yield.

Mr. WARREN. The gentleman from California has been on two investigating committees—one on un-Americanism, which received $30,000, and the other on patents, which received $15,000, and did he not insist on the full sum being allowed those committees?

Mr. KRAMER. I never asked for the full sum for any committee, but I believe in giving a reasonable amount; I never voted for $50,000 for any committee investigation, and this one in particular is an outrage.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STARNES].

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, the collective judgment of this House has been expressed heretofore with reference to the original resolution introduced for this investigation. When that resolution was introduced the hour had arrived when those who were opposed to the investigation should have spoken. That hour has passed, and it is unbecoming, in my judgment, and comes with ill grace for opposition to spring forth at this hour.

If there is nothing wrong, if these so-called political schemes are for the purpose only of furthering the cause of old-age pensions, no one need have fear as to the result of the investigation. When this House has spoken and ordered the investigation, then the Committee on Accounts, using its best judgment, has fixed on the amount necessary to carry on the investigation.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I decline to yield at any time during my remarks.

It was your judgment that an investigation should be conducted. I ask you whether or not you want a searching investigation, a thorough investigation, or do you want an innocuous one? Money will be wasted, regardless of whether it be a small amount or a large amount that is expended, unless the investigation is thorough and searching, unless it is productive of some real result.

Mr. DUNN of Mississippi and Mr. MURDOCK rose.

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield to anyone. The question is whether or not the House of Representatives shall make such an investigation as it deems necessary, or shall we make such an investigation as to the Townsend organization or to any other organization seems proper? Who is to be the judge as to how far the investigation shall range—the House of Representatives or the promoters of any of these so-called old-age-pension plans and schemes? Shall we conduct a thorough investigation or shall we investigate only the history, the records, acts, and conduct of those groups, associations, corporations, and parties who voluntarily appear here in the Capital of the United States?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I decline to yield to anyone. The purpose of this resolution, according to its terms, is to aid the Congress in its legislative functions and duties relative to the proposed legislation hereinbefore mentioned, and that is the McGroarty plan, and to bring to light such information as may be necessary to enable this House to pass intelligently upon the question when and if it comes before the House for consideration. If the methods used by those who promote this plan are sound, if there is nothing to conceal, there is no need for any opposition to a thorough and searching investigation. The Committee on Accounts has absolute faith and confidence in the personnel of this bipartisan investigating committee. It is my information that every member of the investigating committee voted for the Social Security Act during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress. It is my information that every member of that committee favors a sound and workable old-age-pension plan. I am sure that I voice the sentiments of the majority of the Members of this House on both sides of the aisle when I state that we have implicit confidence in that committee.

Mr. Speaker, during the Seventy-fourth Congress this House has been called upon to write more social legislation, more legislation for the promotion of human welfare and social security, than it has in any like period in the history of this country; and I think that the Members of the House have met the challenge and responsibility of the hour which the accumulation of the years has heretofore placed upon us, and in reaching a decision upon such legislation as we have considered we have sought at all times to place the interest of the American people first, we have sought at all times to arrive at the truth. The Members of the House of Representatives are entitled to receive the truth. We want to turn the pitiless searchlight of truth upon all the proponents of any bizarre political plan, on all proponents of these so-called schemes which call for an expenditure of untold billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money; and I echo the thought that was expressed a short time ago by the gentleman from California [Mr. BUCK] when I say that it ill becomes some of these gentlemen to raise their voices in protest to an expenditure of $50,000 to study plans to enable the proper sort of legislation to be passed when they themselves propose such a bizarre economic plan as would expend over $20,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money a year.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES. I decline to yield. Let us get to the bottom of this thing; let us arrive at the truth, and after we have obtained definite information, information that will enable us to act wisely and well, I am sure that time will prove that the money called for in this resolution has been well and wisely spent.

The members of the Committee on Accounts ask for, and we believe that we are entitled to, the support of this House in the amount called for in this resolution. We have responded to your mandate in a manner which we think is wise and just and reasonable, and we come now asking vindication at your hands, and hope that you will sustain the committee when this matter is presented to the House for a vote in a very few minutes.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the previous question on the resolution and amendment to final passage.

Mr. McGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 242, nays 114, answered "present" 1, not voting 73, as follows:

 Mr. Kennedy of Maryland with Mr. Clark of Idaho.

Mr. SANDERS of Texas changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. HARLAN changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GASSAWAY] is detained by reason of illness. Were he present he would have voted "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. I want to ask the Speaker if it is not a fact that the parliamentary situation is that the House having voted the previous question, an amendment cannot now be offered reducing the amount of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct. No amendment would be in order at this stage.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 8, strike out the words "if available", and at the end of the line insert "if not otherwise engaged."

Mr. MONAGHAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is a committee amendment in order now?

The SPEAKER. This is the committee amendment.

Mr. MONAGHAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. Is that in order now?

The SPEAKER. The previous question was had upon the resolution and amendment.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. WARREN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

THE SOVEREIGN POWER OF A UNITED PEOPLE—THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an address which I delivered before the national convention of Townsend Clubs at Chicago.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I insert an address delivered by me before the national convention of the Townsend Clubs of America at Chicago, Ill., on October 26, 1935, the same being the verbatim transcript with interpolations of the official reporters of that historic convention as printed in the National Townsend Weekly, November 18, 1935.

The address is as follows:

Chairman ARBUCKLE. This morning's session is to be closed by a very wonderful address and we are on time. The next speaker will run a little over 12 o'clock, he tells me, so I want you to give him your undivided attention.

It is our pleasure to have with us today a man who has valiantly fought for the Townsend plan in the Congress of the United States and outside of the Congress of the United States, and he is to speak today on that great subject, The Sovereign Power of a United People, and it is my pleasure at this time to introduce to you the Honorable MARTIN F. SMITH, a Member of the Congress of the United States from the Third Congressional District of Washington.

Hon. MARTIN F. SMITH. Senator Arbuckle and you, my friends, delegates to this great national convention of the Townsend Clubs of America, I desire to thank Senator Arbuckle for his very kind and generous words of introduction. I want to say to you, sir, that I have observed as I have been seated on this platform during the days of the convention that you have been the most courteous, the most fair, and one of the most efficient presiding officers that I have ever listened to. [Applause.] My friends, I deeply appreciate being the one Member of the Congress of the United States who has been paid the high honor of being placed upon the program of this great convention. [Applause.]

During my service in Congress it has been my honor and privilege to address five great national conventions in various parts of our land, and this is the second great convention that I am addressing this year. I want to say to you that, in my opinion, in intelligence, in appearance and character, and in influence this convention will compare favorably with any which has ever met in America. [Applause.] I am very proud today to appear before you as a member of Townsend Club, No. 1, Hoquiam, Wash., the ribbon of which adorns the lapel of my coat—Hoquiam, Wash., the most westerly city in the United States of America. I am also proud of the two delegates that we have here representing our club. One is Judge William E. Campbell, judge of the Superior Court of Grays Harbor County and president of the Association of Superior Judges of the State of Washington, a graduate of Stanford University and of Harvard Law School, and one of the most distinguished, leading citizens in southwest Washington and the State of Washington, one of the leaders in the Townsend movement in the Pacific Northwest. Judge Campbell is here and I would like to have him rise and take a bow. [Applause.] Our other delegate is Dr. Everett M. Hill, pastor of the First Methodist Church, a doctor of divinity, organizer of our Townsend Club No. 1 in Hoquiam, a Kiwanian, and one of the finest men I have ever met in my life. I want the Reverend Dr. Hill to stand up so you can see him. [Applause.]

In our community, my friends, the Townsend movement is represented by the law and the gospel. My friends, I have been studying and investigating the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan, a plan for national recovery, over a year and a half. It extends far beyond a mere system of pensions; it is a permanent recovery measure, a real reemployment measure, a sound financing and banking measure, and constitutes a practical application of the wise and salutary principles of Christianity to the solution of the social and economic and political problems of America. You have just listened to my friend Mr. Harry L. Bras, editor of the Centralia Chronicle, Centralia, Wash., in my congressional district. I want to tell you about a strange coincidence.

In the spring of 1934, late in the month of March, over a year and a half ago, Mr. Bras published in his daily paper the first newspaper editorial favoring the Townsend plan printed in America. I was in Washington, over 3,000 miles away, attending the second session of the Seventy-third Congress; and on April 4, 1934, just about the same time, without ever having corresponded with each other in regard to the matter at all, I placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the first explanation and statement of the Townsend plan which was made in the Congress of the United States, and the first official notice which it received at the National Capital. That is rather a remarkable coincidence, considering that Mr. Bras and I live close together in the same part of the country, but when Harry's attention was called to the matter recently, he said, "Well, great minds run in the same channel."

Of course, this is said in jest, for we realize that we are not great nor even near great, but at least we possessed the vision and foresight to study and comprehend the merits of the Townsend plan for national recovery, which at that time—18 months ago—was ridiculed, scoffed, and sneered at by nearly everybody, but has since, under the able, energetic, and inspired leadership of its author, Dr. Townsend, and its cofounder, Mr. Clements, become the strongest, most dynamic social, economic, and political reform movement in the history of modern America. [Cheers.] I collaborated with my colleague, Congressman McGROARTY, and others of a small group of a half dozen Members of the House of Representatives in drafting the original bill embodying the Townsend plan, and also in revising and modifying it and preparing the bill in its final form, which received 56 votes as an amendment to the Social Security Act in the last session of Congress. The bill will be reintroduced in the next session of Congress, which convenes the first Monday of January next, and, in my opinion, should carry several further amendments.

In view of the fact that a 2-percent transactions tax on the gross business turnover, amounting to $1,300,000,000,000 in 1929, which we are rapidly approaching, will yield considerably more revenue—viz, $26,000,000,000—than is required to pay $2,400 per annum to approximately 8,000,000 law-abiding American citizens of the age of 60 years and over, a total of $19,200,000,000, I favor inserting in the text of our next bill a proviso to the effect that the surplus be applied toward the payment and liquidation of the national debt of the United States Government [cheers], which is the feasible and desirable thing to do, and will gain for us the added support of numerous public men and intelligent citizens throughout the country. Another amendment should require the Federal Reserve banks to disburse the annuities in the local communities of the United States and provide for the appointment of a national board of 10 members, the Federal Reserve bank to have direct supervision of the funds, which will be too large to be left in the hands of a single individual, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, as provided in the present bill, for it will be the largest fund, the most colossal fund, ever disbursed in this country, and no one man should be trusted with a fund of such magnitude; and a budget system should be provided for the annuities, insuring that the monthly annuity will be wisely expended for needed purposes as a stimulant to general business, agriculture, and industry in the United States.

The limitation of time will not permit me to argue specifically the merits of the plan, and were I to do so it would necessarily be a repetition of the facts already ably presented by the distinguished speakers who have preceded me. I shall, therefore, content myself with a brief statement of the legislative situation in the Halls of Congress as I see it from the inside. The title indicated for my address and given in the printed program is The Sovereign Will of a United People. We have a representation form of government in the United States, and it is the duty of chosen representatives of the people to represent and carry out the wishes and execute the will of the people who have elected them to office.

When they fail to do this they should either voluntarily resign their office and surrender back to the people the high commission they have received from them or they should be defeated and replaced by men who will faithfully and loyally represent their constituents. [Cheers.] Consequently, our campaign should continue to be one of education and dissemination of information: First, to the sovereign people of the United States; and, second, to their chosen representatives in the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States, consisting of the facts, figures, statistics, and evidence establishing the soundness and wisdom of the Townsend plan for permanent national recovery and the many reasons why it is practical, feasible, and workable.

I think I know the members of the House and Senate. They are, with very few, if any, exceptions, intelligent, industrious, conscientious, and public-spirited men and women, a good cross section of the United States of America. They are former judges of our courts, former members of our State legislatures, former mayors of our cities, former Governors of our States, who have been sent to Congress because their people have known them for years and have confidence in their ability, integrity, and devotion to duty. Our task is to convince them that the Townsend plan is all that we know it to be, and also to convince their constituents of the same fact, and they will enact it into law.

I am reminded, in this connection, of the story of a young man and a young woman engaged to be married. They were deeply in love, apparently well suited to each other. Their parents approved the match and wedding bells were expected to ring, when one day the young lady came home to her mother very hurriedly and much excited and said, "Mother, I can't marry Bill." Her mother said, "My goodness, what is the matter; what has he done?" The daughter said, "Mother, I can't marry Bill because I have just discovered that he doesn't believe that there is a hell." The mother looked into her daughter's face for a moment and she said, "Daughter, you marry him anyhow, and we will soon convince him that he is wrong." [Laughter.]

After all, the Members of Congress have become educated and informed as to the merits of the Townsend plan and what it will accomplish for the men and women, young and old, and the children in the homes of our Republic and their constituents armed and fortified with these facts and truths, have made their wishes known to them, if they still remain unconvinced, I think, that will be the time when they will be convinced by the members of the Townsend Clubs of America that there is a political hell so far as they are concerned.

My friends, we are fortunate that we live in the finest, the greatest, and the richest country in all the world. It has been blessed as no other country under the stars. The salvation of the human race depends on the progress of civilization in this country and we must carry the torch of civilization higher here in America than in any other land because all of the peoples and races of the world are looking to America for wise leadership. The salvation of the human race, therefore, depends on the things that we do right here in our own country. We have the greatest natural resources, richest deposits of precious minerals, almost unlimited coal and petroleum, millions of acres of corn, wheat, cotton, and tobacco. We have foodstuffs in abundance, timber, the finest in the world, the greatest mills and factories in the world. There is no reason why everyone in this country of ours should not enjoy all of the good things in life, even the luxuries.

Money is the lifeblood of the Nation and it must circulate freely and maintain the life of the Nation, just as the circulation of the blood in the human body is essential to the life of human beings and human life depends on the circulation of the blood. When it doesn't circulate the body suffers paralysis. Our beloved America is suffering a paralysis of its agriculture and industry today.

The Townsend recovery plan is going to pay $200 a month to every American citizen who has no criminal record, is not insane, and has reached the age of 60 or over. This money must be spent in the calendar month it is received within the United States and its Territories. The number of people to whom this can be paid is approximately 8,000,000, the amount to be released by a 2-percent transaction tax. This is a very simple proposition. In every transaction, sale, or exchange of an article in commerce, business, agriculture, industry, and finance, this 2 cents of each dollar is collected for our fund and placed in the Treasury at Washington. All persons qualifying for this pension shall retire from gainful employment, and all men and women whose net income is not in excess of $2,400 a year are eligible. It will safeguard the American homes, reduce crime to a minimum, provide security for the aged, furnish an opportunity for the young to secure employment, provide 8,000,000 new jobs and at least 2,000,000 jobs released by the aged. It will reduce the burden of taxation, empty the poorhouses, provide an outlet for factories and farms, maintain a balance between production and consumption, and forever banish financial depression from our fair land. [Cheers.]

It has been proven that a transaction tax of 2 percent on every sale would pay the old people $200 a month and do away with the numerous taxes we are burdening the people of America with today—$2 on every $100, $20 on every $1,000, $2,000 on every $100,000, etc.

In 1 year the entire amount paid to 8,000,000 citizens 60 years and past would be $19,200,000,000, the amount given by the Brookings Institution as the necessary increase in consumption required to balance production and consumption in the United States, and I wish our friends of the press would publish that fact. The Brookings Institution in Washington, D. C., is the most reliable statistical organization in America. It is nonpartisan and nonpolitical, and it is financed by the big business and financial interests of America, so it certainly could not be prejudiced in favor of the Townsend plan.

Recently they have published two books—America's Capacity to Produce, and America's Capacity to Consume—and in those monumental works big, thick volumes of hundreds of pages with figures and statistical matter prepared by leading experts of America conclusively establishing the fact that the difference between production and consumption is due to the lack of purchasing power in America as between sixteen and nineteen billions a year, and the Townsend plan provides the very deficiency which it is lacking to balance consumption with production. [Applause.]

The other day in the State of Washington a good man said to me, "How in the world can an old person spend $200 a month?" he said, "to compel them to spend that amount of money would destroy them physically, mentally, and morally. If they had to live so fast a life as that and blow in $200 a month, why," he said, "you would kill off the old people and wouldn't have anyone left to pay the money to." [Laughter.] Of course, he was joking, he was not serious about that.

I replied that paying that amount of money would provide a chance to pay honest debts, live a normal life, to travel and see nature's wonders so lavishly provided in our country.

You know it is a strange thing how people will worry about something like that. Let me tell you something—in 1929, according to official Government statistics, there was a handful of men in this country—504 millionaires. You could seat them in one little corner of this vast auditorium (but if you would, you would have to fumigate the hall so far as I am concerned); whose net income in 1929 was equal to the net income of the 2,330,000 wheat and cotton farmers in this country who raised all the wheat from which was made all the bread that was consumed by the American people and who raised all the cotton out of which was woven all the cotton cloth utilized in this country, not to say anything about exports that went out of our country to foreign nations. Think of it, 504 men having an income in 1 year of $1,085,000,000; they are the kind of people in this country who worry about what eight million would do with $2,400 a year.

After the plan has been in operation for a few years we will lower the age limitation to 55 years, then to 50 years, and I tell you, my friends, we will eventually have to lower it to 45 years. There is hardly a mill or a factory today where, if a man goes to seek employment, he does not have to fill out a questionnaire to tell his entire life history about his grandmother and grandfather—how long they lived, and his parents—what age they died and if he is past 45 and if his mother's grandmother ever had a stomach ache, he cannot get a job in most of the factories in America. [Applause.]

That is why we have so many unemployed. By the new circulating income provided by the Townsend plan we will create jobs for at least 12,000,000—probably several million more citizens—thus taking care of all the unemployed in America. This is the only proposal I have ever heard that will do that—that is why I am for the Townsend plan—that is why you are for it. You know under the old regime, not many years ago, they believed in old-age pensions to a certain extent. You remember how back in 1929 and 1930 the president of one of the leading banks in New York City sold his stock in his bank to his wife at a loss, then she sold it back to him later, just a friendly, family transaction, so they wouldn't have to pay an income tax to the United States Government. When we uncovered that down in Washington, Mr. Banker resigned as president of the bank. The directors voted him an old-age pension of $100,000 a year for the rest of his life, but we knocked that pension higher than "Gilroy's kite." That was considered the proper old-age pension for bankers and financiers.

But now we are going to have a reasonable retiring annuity in America for people 60 years old and over who have worked, pioneered, and contributed to a great extent to the business growth and development and the building of this great United States of America. When a person has been a law-abiding citizen all his life, breadwinner over 40 years, raised a family, worked and labored and produced wealth, he is entitled to enjoy leisure and live as a normal being in his old age and enjoy the fruits of science, discovery, and invention. We are no longer satisfied to have a few thousand men with incomes of millions of dollars and tens of millions of honest, God-fearing American citizens without a dollar to spend. [Cheers.] That is why the Townsend plan will become the law of the United States of America, and there is no power on earth or in hell which can prevent it from becoming a law. [Applause.]

My friends, I am about to conclude. I sponsored in the last session of Congress the bill restoring in full the pensions to the veterans of the Spanish War, the same stipulated in the act of June 1930 which was vetoed by President Hoover and passed overwhelmingly over his veto by the House and Senate. After my bill had passed the Senate and House this summer and gone to the White House every big newspaper in America, including the Associated Press, United Press, and Universal News Service (the last one is the Hearst agency), predicted that the President would veto it.

During this period I had quite a time keeping some of my overzealous colleagues in both House and Senate from viciously attacking the President, for I have learned long ago that very few battles are won by personal abuse and that most men are, well, shall we say, a wee bit stubborn. Sometimes I have a faint suspicion that even the ladies are inclined the same way. I was trying to have the President induced to sign the bill by moral persuasion. President Roosevelt fooled the newspapermen of America and, instead of vetoing the bill, he signed it, and it confers benefits aggregating $50,000,000 a year on approximately 200,000 Spanish-American War veterans, to many of whom it means bread and butter and a decent home. My friends of the Townsend movement, I believe we should maintain a firm, resolute, and determined attitude and keep this question on a high moral plane. Eschew partisan and party politics in the consideration of this plan. [Cheers.] Our bill has to pass Congress, the House and Senate first, and when it has and goes to the White House I hope it will be laid down on the desk of a President who has a heart of compassion for the common people of this country, and one who wishes with all his heart and mind to see the blessings of the Townsend plan brought to every home and fireside of America. I believe with all my heart and soul that the hour will strike in America when the plan for national recovery which sprang from the inspired brain and noble heart of Francis E. Townsend at Long Beach, Calif., will become the law of America by the signature of America's most humanitarian President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause, audience rising.]

NEW YORK WANTS AN ABLE AND FEARLESS UNITED STATES ATTORNEY

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY of New York. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen, I attended the hearings of the Senate Judiciary Committee, held in the Capitol on March 9 and 10, in connection with the nomination of Lamar Hardy for the office of United States attorney for the southern district of New York. I am always interested in having appointed to public office men of outstanding ability; but I have a particular interest in the office of the United States attorney for the southern district, because I live in that district. In addition to my personal interest in this appointment, I have an official interest because of my membership on the special committee appointed by the Speaker to investigate real-estate bondholders' reorganizations.

Our congressional committee, in order to accomplish the purpose for which it was created, must have the cooperation and wholehearted support of the United States attorney. In investigating these real-estate reorganizations, I necessarily have become familiar with the sale of real-estate bonds and participating certificates. Unfortunately, in many cases the committee is helpless to aid the poor bondholders, because the underlying security behind the bonds and certificates is absolutely worthless.

Mr. Hardy, the President's nominee for the office of United States Attorney, has been closely identified with a mortgage company that sold a great many mortgages and certificates which must be classified as worthless. As an officer and director of this company, the State Title & Mortgage Co., he has naturally been friendly with the other companies engaged in this type of business throughout the greater city of New York.

The president of the company, with which Mr. Hardy was associated, the State Title & Mortgage Co., was indicted and convicted of fraudulent practices. At the present time there are awaiting trial a number of other officers of the same company. As a former colleague, and now as district attorney, Mr. Hardy must necessarily find himself in an embarrassing position.

I had hoped that the President would select for the office of United States district attorney of New York a young, courageous, fighting district attorney, who would enforce the law fearlessly. The district attorney of New York will have a lot of work ahead of him in connection with these mortgage companies, and as many of these are personal friends of Mr. Hardy, he certainly cannot be expected to be an aggressive prosecutor. Mr. Hardy has been in office for nearly 3 months and has never tried a single case. We require an active man; one who will set the pace for his assistants.

More than a quarter of a million families have lost their life savings in these defaulted mortgages. Due to Mr. Hardy's intimate association with the companies that sold these worthless mortgages, I do not believe that he will have the moral support of the people of New York.

The Bar Association of New York is opposed to the confirmation of Mr. Hardy, as well as practically every newspaper published in the city of New York.

The New York Evening Post of March 12 expresses the situation perfectly as follows:

It doesn't take a sensitive nose to detect the atmosphere of a biased court. The Senate Judiciary Subcommittee "judging" the fitness of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern New York district gave itself away early in its hearing. Every courtesy was extended to Hardy and to Max D. Steuer, his counsel. But, say the dispatches, "Alfred A. Cook was interrupted in his answers to questions when he tried to elucidate the objections to Mr. Hardy's confirmation as recorded by the Association of the Bar of New York City. Mr. Cook was forced virtually to defend the standing of the bar association." * * * Was the subcommittee judging Hardy or judging the bar association? Is its mind made up in advance to confirm a nominee opposed by the bar, the press, and the public of his own city? Why did the two Senators most concerned, WAGNER and COPELAND, of New York, stay away from the hearing? Were they afraid to offend New York City by helping Hardy, and afraid to offend party leaders by opposing him?

Does the Senate realize it is placing in charge of Federal securities law prosecution in the financial heart of the country the man who sat tight as chairman of the executive committee of the defunct State Title & Mortgage Co., while it evolved financial maneuvers that brought losses to thousands? That Hardy is one of the defendants in a $5,000,000 suit brought by the State banking department to recover some of these losses?

Does the Senate realize that 10 of Hardy's former associates are under indictment? Does it understand that Hardy will probably be called as witness for the defense in Federal trials of these associates—that the Federal attorney will then be testifying against the Federal Government?

Hardy's defense, that he did not know what was going on, is no answer to the bar association. We do not want as public prosecutor (even though his character may be white as snow) a man who did not know what was going on under his nose. A United States attorney is supposed to know what happens around him.

IS THIS CONGRESS GOING TO PASS LEGISLATION THAT WILL GIVE PROPER AND ADEQUATE FARM RELIEF?

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on farm relief.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Speaker, I have for the past 15 months listened with a very attentive ear and in my limited way tried to analyze the many and varied remarks made by my fellow colleagues, in which they have given their opinion as to the proper method of solving the problems that are confronting this great country of ours today, doing so with a view of analyzing the same to the extent and with a hope that there would be at least a sufficient combination of our thoughts that something real constructive would be done by this Congress to bring our Nation back to as near normal conditions as it would be possible under existing circumstances.

On February 19 the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], in addressing this body in behalf of pending farm-relief legislation that was finally enacted in lieu of the A. A. A., asked of this body before it should take any action on the proposed farm legislation that it should answer affirmatively three questions:

First. Does a farm problem exist?

Second. Can legislation aid in its solution?

Third. Has Congress the power to take the action that has been proposed?

Members of Congress, I think these are all very pertinent questions insofar as the proposed legislation that was before us at the time is concerned, and also on the pending legislation, the purpose of which is to give proper and adequate relief to the farmers of our Nation. These questions have been uppermost in my mind since becoming a Member of this honorable body, and I want to give you my humble opinion on the first two questions.

First. Discussing, Does a farm problem exist?

There is not a Member of this body, whether they be from rural, city, or industrial districts, but will agree with me and say there is a farm problem existing. The trouble with the membership of this body, especially those representing city and industrial districts, is that they do not appreciate the enormity of this problem as do we who represent the farming districts. In my own case I happen to represent farming, city, and industrial.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say, in my humble opinion—and this opinion is backed by 25 years of practical and not theoretical experience, having had some knowledge and practical experience not only with the farmer's problem, the businessman's problem, the industrial man's problem, but in practically every phase of each of those and any other that might exist; during these years of service that I have given to my section of this country of ours, this has impregnated in my mind a smattering idea of the problems that confront most every phase of business that exists in our country, and this is by far the most momentous one that has ever faced it.

We say, "Does there a farm problem exist?" I say, "Yes." I further say the solution of this problem will not only relieve the embarrassment of this body in both branches, but will bring back to this country of ours practically normal conditions, and will relieve us who are in power of the criticism, abuse, and vilification that is being heaped upon us by the disgruntled of both parties. Not only this, but it will relieve the people of this country of the burden under which they are now laboring, and will bring back peace, happiness, and prosperity to every nook and corner of it.

I am talking to you Members of Congress from practical experience, not theoretical, which we have been adhering to so much, and I want to say unto you that there does exist a farm problem, and that problem is the very root and seed which is causing the conditions of today. The solution, and if solved in a proper way, and Congress, and Congress alone, can do so, then we need have no fear of conditions insofar as our country is concerned in the near future, and not only the near future but for years to come.

Does a farm problem exist? Yes. Solve it in the proper way, then every industrial industry, every banking institution, our railroads, and in fact every other business organization in this country will profit, and not only profit through this medium but there will not be within the next 24 months an unemployment problem existing or facing us; nor will this Congress be faced with the problem of continually appropriating enormous sums of money as we have in the past few years for relief.

What does it mean, Members of Congress, if we do not solve this problem? This Congress in 1933 appropriated $3,300,000,000, together with other amounts for general appropriations, which totaled almost $4,000,000,000, so as to give employment to the unemployed and to give relief to those who were in need. In 1935 Congress appropriated $4,800,000,000, together with an increased appropriation for the governmental departments, so as to aid the unemployed and give relief, which will total more than $5,000,000,000. We are going to be called upon again to appropriate billions more, which means in 1937 and not only in 1937 but session after session Congress will be called upon to appropriate billions of dollars each year for this purpose. Why this continuous appropriation of moneys to give employment to the unemployed and relief to the needy when there is a solution of the problem that is confronting us without placing this enormous tax on the people of this Nation. I mean when I say taxing the people of this Nation that we know that 80 percent of the amount of taxes collected to pay these bills will fall on the poor class, because it is going to be reflected on the very necessities of life, and this 80 percent are going to bear the burden of it.

Why do I say this? Because every time we make an appropriation there are bonds issued, and those of means are placing their savings in tax-exemption securities whereby they do not have to bear the burden of taxes in proportion to their wealth. Of course, they are in sympathy with the program outlined by Congress now—that is, the issuing of bonds guaranteed by the full faith and credit of our country—because they are awaiting an opportunity to make an investment in these tax-exempt securities.

Forty million people out of forty-three million are gainfully employed at a meager and nominal salary, and it is upon these people that the tax burden of this country rests. There were only 263 people in the United States in 1935 who had an income of from $100,000 to over $1,000,000, and 90 percent of those had their wealth invested in stocks and bonds that were tax-exempt.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that from my observation since becoming a Member of this body that the membership, as a whole, are appreciating the fact that a farm problem does exist, and, further, are appreciating the fact that the solution of this problem alone will be the main factor in bringing our country back to normal conditions, because a majority has signified the same by saying so in recommending that this problem should be taken care of in a certain way.

Mr. Speaker, I believe if it were left to the individual thought of the membership, without any influence or pressure being brought to bear, Congress at this time would solve the problem which would bring our country back to normal conditions in a short period of time, because in my contact with the membership day in and day out, talking with them and giving my humble views on the same, there is a favorable reaction to the method.

Does a farm problem exist? I think 75 percent of the membership recognizes the same. I think 75 percent of the membership, from my contact with them, realize that what we have done for agriculture by the passage of the many laws, together with appropriations in behalf of it, has only been a soothing sirup and a few hypodermics given the patient who is sick unto death. Each realizes that the major operation must be performed sooner or later, but for some reason there is apparently an influence that is being directed to them whereby they do not exercise that prerogative they should as Representatives of the people from their respective districts, and without fear and undaunted in their purpose do that which they, in their own humble opinion, know should be done to save this country from turmoil, strife, and trouble that will in a short time come, unless this farm problem is solved; and we know, Mr. Speaker, it can only be done by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask of the membership, Are you going to exercise that power that you have and give relief unto that class of people who are not only the very backbone of our Nation but the very marrow that is entwined within it?

There are 32,000,000 of this class, which represents 1 out of every 4 of our population, and upon the prosperity and existence depends the other 80,000,000 people of our Nation, because we all know when the farmer prospers—and I do not mean, when I say "prosper", that he must have 30 to 40 cents per pound for his cotton, $2 to $3 for his wheat, $1.50 for his corn—but he is prosperous when he is able to pay those expenses he is obligated to pay, pay his interest and annual installment on his mortgage and taxes, and have a sufficient amount left to purchase the necessities of life and some luxuries, regardless of the prices of his products. When, and in that event, the wheels of every manufacturing plant will begin to turn, giving employment to those within its territory, our trains will begin to run in a normal fashion, our people will be employed in every line of industry throughout the country, and there will be general prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, can we solve this farm problem? Yes; it can be solved; and when we have done so there will not be the Utopia on earth that many of us dream of, but there will be happiness and contentment among every class of people in thought, action, and deed; Congress will be relieved of the solution of the troublesome problems that have been confronting it for several years. Mr. Speaker, I again ask, Is there a solution to this problem or can legislative action aid in the solution? I want to say to this membership in emphatic terms that this Congress can solve the problem that is existing today.

Why do I say this? Because Congress has given aid and assistance to almost every line of business and has rehabilitated it to the extent there is apparently today on the surface a return to normal conditions, and apparently we are on the road to what is commonly called recovery. But mark my words, Mr. Speaker, it is only a hypodermic or soothing salve that is giving relief to the patient, and in the end the major operation must be performed, and that major operation is the solution of the problem I am talking about today; that is, giving proper and adequate relief to the agriculture people of this Nation. It is the fundamental problem, and we must give relief to the fundamental so as to branch out to the different archways of business to properly conserve the same.

Mr. Speaker, how can this be done? It can be done by the refinancing of the farm mortgages of this Nation. As stated, 32,000,000 people are engaged in agricultural pursuits. Of the 41,500,000 gainfully employed in 1930, 10,500,000 were employed in agriculture, or two out of every four were employed in that occupation, the prosperity of which is our very life and existence. As stated, unless there is given to those who are pursuing this occupation, which represents 30 percent of our population, the proper and adequate relief, I make this prediction, Mr. Speaker, there will never be a return to that which we call normal conditions.

Mr. Speaker, how can we give this relief? It can be done by refinancing the farm mortgages at a rate of interest and annual payments that will permit this class of people to live and enjoy the homes they have sacrificed years of labor, working 15 hours a day, clad in overalls and common shoes, or barefooted, to attain the goal that every human being desires; that is, a place they may call home, because home is the dearest spot on earth; it is there one sits by the fireside with his wife and babies and talks of the troubles and hardships of the day. Deprive him of this home after years of labor and toil and you have turned a Nation-loving and patriotic citizen into one of hatred and a Communist.

Mr. Speaker, I returned to my home only a few days ago, and there came to my office some of the most substantial citizens of my county, saying the Federal land bank was foreclosing their homes. I glanced over a few papers of the different counties in my district a week or so ago, and in one county there were 14 homes being foreclosed by the Federal land bank; this week I noticed in the same paper there were 19 homes being advertised, 33 in the course of 6 weeks by the Federal land bank, with local institutions foreclosing 8 or 10 farm homes at the same time; and my information is that the Federal land bank now owns 20 percent of the farms of that county.

Let me say this, there has been allocated hundreds of millions for the Resettlement Administration, trying to place people on the farm and give them homes, buy their mules, plow tools, in fact, everything that is necessary to operate a farm, thereby giving them a chance; yet, through this agency, the Federal land bank, we are foreclosing and placing on the roads and highways a large percent of the honest-to-God citizens who have struggled for years to accumulate enough to pay for a home by taking away from them that home they have acquired by years of toil.

Oh, yes; the question will be asked, "Why did he become indebted to the extent he cannot meet his obligations today?" When the Farm Act was passed in 1916, for 4 or 5 years afterwards the farmers were begged to make loans on their property so that this institution could function.

The farmers were not immune to the wiles of human passion—that is, to have money to spend—any more than any other class of people, so they placed mortgages on their farms, and statistics will show that 95 percent of the mortgages that exist today were given at a time when cotton was from 25 to 40 cents per pound, with wheat, corn, and every other farm product in proportion, yet he is called on today to meet the annual installment, interest payment, on a restricted program, with the price of their products one-fourth of what they were at the time that he sold his birthright; that is, gave his mortgage. Each and every Member of this body and every individual throughout the country knows there is not a chance of the farmer liquidating his obligation under existing conditions.

Mr. Speaker, I know the departments will report to you that a large percent have met their payments. If this is reported, then turn and ask how much has that farmer left after he meets his payments to spend for the necessities of life.

I received a letter just the other day from a farmer in my district, and this is only one out of hundreds, in which he said he had just paid his Federal land-bank installment, but did not have a dime left, and was pleading with me to aid him in getting work with the W. P. A., or any other agency, so that he could buy a few of the necessities of life and start a crop for another year. I say refinance the mortgage on the home of that poor old man, who is bent with age, who has served his country for 10 these many years, and is one of our most worthy citizens, to the extent that he can meet his annual payments and interest, pay his taxes, and have enough to live on for the very short time that is allotted to him.

I know the departments are going to say a greater percent are meeting their payments, but until we have placed the agricultural people of this Nation in a position, as I have stated, that they can meet their interest and annual installments on their mortgages and have a sufficient amount from their farm products, regardless of price, to buy the necessities of life and a few luxuries, Mr. Speaker, I say, and the future will prove it, there will never be a return to normal conditions.

How can this be done? This Government only a few days ago sold several hundred million dollars' worth of bonds at a rate of interest of $1\frac{1}{2}$ percent. If this Congress will authorize the issuance of bonds, secured by the farms of this Nation, at a rate of $1\frac{1}{2}$ percent, and refinance the farm mortgages at this rate, with the principal annual payments not over $1\frac{1}{2}$ percent, totaling not over 3 percent per year, over a period of from 45 to 50 years, you will find that these same investors will be glad to invest in the same, and save from pollution the stream that gives to us the only pure water of economic faith existing in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I have studied the Lemke bill, that has passed out of the Agricultural Committee, and which the Rules Committee refuses to give a ruling on, thereby giving the membership an opportunity to vote on it, and in my humble opinion it is the best method of refinancing the farm mortgages that I can conceive of.

I want to plead with the membership to urge the Rules Committee to give us a rule on this bill and let us vote on it. It is said the President opposes it, but I do not believe so, because our President is not going to oppose constructive legislation, and especially that which is as all important as this.

I am a born Democrat and intend to follow the Democratic Party as long as I live. I am for Franklin D. Roosevelt, was for him at the last convention, and am for him as a standard bearer of the Democratic Party this fall. I know his heart beats in unison with the common class of people; I know his whole soul and life is directed with a view of service to them; I know that he is sympathetic, and I know if this Congress will act on this one proposition and the membership will properly present it to him in a light that will show the necessity of it, I believe he will not oppose it.

Mr. Speaker, let me in a parting word say: You have driven up in your cars on many occasions to railroad crossings and have observed the words, "Stop, look, and listen." Thousands have adhered to these words and passed on and are enjoying the pleasures of life today; yet, there are many who did not adhere to the warning, and today they are resting in eternity we know not where.

Mr. Speaker, if we the membership do not heed these warning words; if we do not pass this legislation, legislation which is going to preserve this great Nation of ours, ours will be the last rose of summer economically, and that rose, the petals of which were once beautiful, will only be a fond reminiscence of that which could have been our lot for the asking.

SENATOR BORAH AND FOREIGN ENTANGLEMENTS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH has a consistent record on the side of peace and against war. Every American knows that Senator BORAH is opposed to all forms of entangling alliances that might involve us in Old World disputes. He has ever been fearless and outspoken in trying to keep the United States out of war, and particularly out of European blood feuds and boundary disputes.

Back in 1916 he was almost politically crucified, along with Senators Gronna, La Follette, and Stone, as one of the "willful 12", by President Wilson because he was opposed to arming merchant ships, which would, and did, drag us into the World War. As we look back, he was right; but such was the propaganda and clamor of the war profiteers, he had to stand against the rising tide of popular opinion and resentment. Today the Congress would, by an overwhelming vote, refuse to permit our merchant ships to be armed. Senator BORAH stood out against the espionage law when few voices dared to express any kind of opposition at a time the propagandists of hate saw a German spy under every bed.

Once we entered the war, he supported all war measures to attain victory. But after the armistice was signed and our troops had been brought home he led the fight against the League of Nations and the Versailles Treaty. He saw that the Versailles Treaty was conceived in hate, cupidity, and revenge, contrary to the armistice terms, and put into effect by compulsion. He battled without giving or receiving quarter against American participation in both the League and the Versailles Treaty. His actions were overwhelmingly ratified by the American people, and time and current events have given additional endorsements. His voice is again being raised to warn our people to keep out of the quarrel over the reentry of German troops into the Rhineland. President Roosevelt tried a year ago to get power from Congress to determine the aggressor nation, a sure way to become involved in war, but failing to get it, insisted on being given power to lay economic sanctions against warring nations. Again Senator BORAH helped to block this attempt of the New Deal administration to involve us in foreign intrigues, boundary disputes, war sanctions, and commitments. The Senator has been the champion and tribune of the American people who want to mind their own business and to keep out of all foreign wars and entanglements. He opposed the cancelation of the war debts and only lately suggested the reopening of the war-debts question in order to pay the adjusted-service certificates to World War veterans, which he voted for.

He was the American author of the Briand-Kellogg pact to outlaw war as an instrument of national policy except for defensive purposes, which over 50 nations have ratified, and for the first time in history war was outlawed or delegatized. It may be only a deterrent against war, but at that it constitutes a great bloodless revolution and a step in the direction of peace.

After the World War the Senator opposed the confiscation of German or alien property as being contrary to the accepted principle of international law and was instrumental in having most of the alien property returned. He likewise supported the bill introduced in Congress in 1924 by Representative HAMILTON FISH, of New York, providing for $10,000,000 to buy foodstuffs for the relief of starving women and children in Germany.

Senator BORAH's family settled in Pennsylvania before the Revolutionary War. His great-grandfather, Jacob Borah, served in a Pennsylvania regiment under Washington. His family moved to a farm in southern Illinois around 1820, and have lived there ever since as substantial farmers and leading citizens. If he is nominated on the Republican ticket for President, he will have a tremendous appeal to the millions of people of German origin in the United States, particularly in such States as Wisconsin, Illinois, North Dakota, and Minnesota, which may be difficult for any Republican to carry this fall. If elected, he would be the first native son of the great State of Illinois to reach the White House. Both Grant and Lincoln lived in Illinois, but neither was born there. The people of Illinois have an opportunity in the primaries to be held on April 14 to nominate Senator BORAH, who was born near Fairfield, Wayne County, and lived there until early manhood, for the highest office within the gift of the people. If they succeed in nominating Senator BORAH for the Presidency, he will be elected, as he has the confidence of the people and is one Republican candidate who can attract the liberal and diverse elements that have left the Republican Party in recent years.

ELECTION CONTEST—LOCKE MILLER VS. JOHN G. COOPER

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 438. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 438

Resolved, That Locke Miller is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-fourth Congress from the Nineteenth District of the State of Ohio.

Resolved, That John G. Cooper is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives of the Seventy-fourth Congress from the Nineteenth District of the State of Ohio.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, April 13—that being Jefferson's birthday—immediately after the reading of the Journal and disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN], who is Chairman of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, may be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if there will be anything said about the spending of the $30,000,000 to make a second memorial in the city of St. Louis to Thomas Jefferson?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will state to the gentleman that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] has not yet submitted a manuscript to me of his speech on that occasion, and I cannot inform the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. The Public Works Administration has authorized the spending of $30,000,000 more—

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]?

There was no objection.

REPORT OF THE UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit another unanimous-consent request. It is rather unusual for me to ask permission of this sort, but there was recently held in the city of Washington a conference of about 100 of the mayors of the largest cities of the country—Republican, Democratic, Socialist, and otherwise. They made a report of their findings with reference to anticipated needs for relief, to come up shortly before the Congress upon recommendations from the President. It is a rather brief document, and I ask unanimous consent that, for the information of all Members on both sides of the House, this statement may be incorporated in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

A REPORT PREPARED BY THE UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS AND SUBMITTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES BY HON. F. H. LAGUARDIA, MAYOR OF NEW YORK CITY, PRESIDENT, UNITED STATES CONFERENCE OF MAYORS, ON MARCH 12, 1936

SECTION I

Part 1

The time has come when the United States Conference of Mayors, on behalf of the larger cities of the United States, feels it necessary to report on a comprehensive basis on the Federal W. P. A. program. There has been a great deal of promiscuous and misinformed talk recently concerning the character of the work being conducted under the W. P. A. Since the major cities of the Nation are sponsors for the largest and most important W. P. A. projects now under way, we are anxious to put a true picture before the American people as to what has been accomplished through the W. P. A. program.

The integrity and permanent usefulness of the city projects which have been approved by the Federal Government need no apology from anyone. Nor do the cities ask the Government or the President to defend the W. P. A. work which is being assisted by Federal funds. These projects are the cities' own projects. All the Government has done is to approve or disapprove what the cities have submitted.

As chief executives of these major cities, we are of the opinion that any honest and impartial analysis of the work being prosecuted in the important cities of the country will reveal that practically every project represents a useful and, in most cases, a permanent public improvement. Secondly, there remain a multitude of additional useful things to be done under future work programs. And finally, it is apparent that the city officials of America will never consent to the abandonment of the work principle in giving relief assistance. The dole, based upon idleness and groceries, has no place in our American scheme of society.

Part 2

The mayors and executives of our cities are more intimately and responsibly concerned with unemployment and destitution than any other group of public officials in America. This was always true, even in the days when private charity was called upon to meet most of the needs.

Since the depression, the seriousness of the problem of unemployment and destitution has transcended all other problems in its importance to city executives. The total expenditures in some cities, including Federal and State contributions, for the relief of unemployment and destitution have exceeded the aggregate of the operating budgets of these cities.

City officials are held personally responsible by their constituents for the prevention of privation and suffering, for the maintenance of order, and the protection of property. These responsibilities are inextricably associated with one another.

City executives do not depend upon tabulations of figures and reports of case workers for their knowledge of these problems. Physically, not statistically, they come face to face with haggard and desperate men and women, and with the pitiful appeal of hungry children. In the days before they had Federal aid in meeting their problems, they had thrust upon them on several occasions the terrible and tragic duty of using force to restrain the angry riots of their own hungry and hopeless citizens.

The mayors of our cities are concerned with national policies as they relate to unemployment and destitution only to the extent that these policies may affect the manner in which they have to meet in their respective cities their own pressing problems of relieving destitution, maintaining order, and protecting property.

Wholly in the interest of safeguarding the welfare of the cities, the United States Conference of Mayors, consisting of most of the principal cities of America, has undertaken to obtain from the mayors and officials of over 100 major cities unbiased and objective opinions on the three basic questions having to do with the relief of unemployment and destitution.

The questions propounded were:

(1) Is work the proper method of meeting the unemployment problem as compared to the dole and idleness?

(2) Are we doing useful work under the W. P. A. program?

(3) Would there be useful work yet to be done under a continued W. P. A. program?

The results of this survey of the leading cities of the country constitute an amazing unanimity of opinion on the part of the responsible officials actually on the firing line of the battle against destitution and unemployment. Out of over 100 opinions expressed by the city executives queried, but one reply to all of the three questions varied in substance from the others. Only this one reply expressed some doubt as to whether or not there could be developed sufficient additional useful projects to keep the destitute unemployed busy for another year.

To the question:

1. "Do the unemployed want work or the dole?"

The following two replies are typical of a unanimous opinion expressed by all of the cities covered in the survey:

"They do not want charity";

"They do want employment";

"They do want to earn the money they obtain";

"They do want to spend their money as they see fit" (city of Chicago);

And

"We all know the great social benefits that a community derives by keeping the minds and bodies of the unemployed employed at some useful endeavor until they can once again return to work in private industry without degeneration of their moral and physical fiber" (city of Detroit).

In answer to the question:

2. "Are we doing useful work under the W. P. A. program?"

The following typical statements were given:

"I cannot make it too emphatic that all of these are not only useful but absolutely necessary projects" (city of Newark).

Another:

"At the outset I must state that every project now in force in this city is, in my opinion, a worth-while, useful, essential, community-enriching work; and as far as this municipality is concerned, the improvements could not have been made by the city alone without Federal aid. This city itself is being materially benefited by reason of having its schools, city hall, fire houses, and streets repaired and placed in a usable, first-class condition. The money expended is not being wasted; instead it is being used on projects which are necessary, essential, and worth while" (city of Hoboken).

Another:

"I should like to go on record concerning the W. P. A. work being done in our city as being not only useful and community-enriching work but also that the same was the result of deliberations and studies made by our city planning commission covering a period of some twenty-odd years. In these studies the planning commission had the advice of our foremost city planners, and everything undertaken was for the community's improvement" (city of Allentown).

And—

"I am pleased to advise you that it has been our rule to not approve the carrying on of any work, whether it be under C. W. A., F. E. R. A., or W. P. A., in this city unless such projects were proven to me by the heads of the various departments in our city to be of value. As you are aware, we are a party to this program and are spending considerable money in the way of contributions, and I therefore feel it my duty to endeavor to see that we get the most value for the money spent, both from that donated by the local government as well as from the Federal Government" (city of Highland Park, Mich.).

The following quotations are typical answers to the question of:

3. "Would there be useful work yet to be done under a continued W. P. A. program?"

"As far as the city of Milwaukee is concerned, there would be no need of submitting any additional projects to continue the program for at least another year. All of the projects so far submitted have been carefully considered and everyone is useful and worth while. Assuming that all of the $5,138,421 that has so far been allotted to the city of Milwaukee for W. P. A. projects for operations up to April 1, 1936, will be spent by that date, the city of Milwaukee could do work to the extent of approximately $42,000,000 more, which is the difference between the total of the Federal funds required to do all of the projects submitted and the $5,138,421 allotted up to the present time" (city of Milwaukee).

And—

"There are other projects of as much value and importance to the community yet to be undertaken during the next fiscal year as those which have been accomplished under Federal aid during the past 2 years. These new projects comprehend additional construction of sewers, repair of storm-drainage systems, etc., reconstruction of earthquake-damaged public buildings, including 12 fire stations and five branch libraries, elimination of traffic hazards, construction of bridges, and other projects of equal value and importance" (city of Long Beach).

And—

"We have worthy projects already filed and approved sufficient to occupy the unemployed for another 2 years" (city of Oklahoma City).

Part 3

The above are indicative of the statements filed by approximately 100 cities and included in the body of this report. This information should serve to demonstrate to the President, to Congress, to the Federal W. P. A., and to the people of the country three basic and fundamental facts:

1. Work, and not the dole, is the American way of meeting the relief problem.

2. The W. P. A. projects now in operation constitute valuable and useful public improvements of a permanent character.

3. We have really only begun to find and develop community projects of lasting value to the citizens of American cities.

Part 4. Criticisms of the program

Of course, the cities are not entirely satisfied with the present W. P. A. program. The criticism most frequently voiced is that "not enough people have been put to work." In other words, the plea is made that quotas for every city should be increased so that every employable person is given a job instead of the dole. This is a problem which only Congress can answer, since the number of persons to be employed depends upon the amount of money made available by the Federal Government. Such a criticism is no indictment of the principles behind the work program.

Secondly, there is some feeling on the part of cities that more authority should be vested in the local governments in the conduct of the W. P. A. program. This is an administrative matter which the conference will submit to the proper officials as soon as additional appropriations for the W. P. A. are voted by Congress.

Lastly, there is in our opinion an important criticism that the various Federal programs in the past have not had the element of continuity of operation. It is for that reason that the conference of mayors is urging an appropriation adequate and sufficient to enable the W. P. A. to carry out a full year's program beginning July 1 next. This will make possible the planning of projects over a whole 12 months' period.

There follows, herewith, detailed and supporting data from municipalities in every section of the United States.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] has prepared a letter to the President of the United States asking that the present enrollment of the C. C. C. camps be kept at 500,000. Some 250 Members of the House have signed this petition. We would like to send it to the President tomorrow and would appreciate it very much if any of the Members who have not signed, but who desire to, will contact some of us who have these petitions in the cloak rooms. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, with the unsettled conditions in Europe, with war clouds growing darker day by day, I desire to place in the RECORD at this time in the proceedings of Congress the amount of money which is being expended at the present time upon airports, under the Works Progress Administration, throughout this Nation. I therefore asked Mr. John S. Wynne, in charge of the airport section of the Bureau of Air Commerce, to compile the latest statistics for me showing the projects which are approved and now under way. The first work started in October of 1935. In each of the States, but not at the National Capital, W. P. A. funds are being used for construction and improvement, and I am informed that officials have under consideration for submission airway projects totaling additional expenditures of approximately $1,200,000 for beacons, radio stations and intermediate fields on airways now established, but with aids incomplete.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this valuable information in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I also want to bring to the attention of the Members of the House this further fact in connection with unsettled world conditions, and that is that in this Nation practically every concern manufacturing aircraft is located upon the coasts of the United States, and due to the danger from attack we should give serious consideration to the need for aircraft development inland.

In the next few days additional funds will be voted by Congress for work relief, and I am firmly of the opinion that an earmarked amount for airport construction should be made. Because of the national defense need and the permanent improvement, such projects are of unusual importance.

[Here the gavel fell.]

CONSIDERATION OF MEDICAL RECORDS OF OFFICERS BY NAVY SELECTION BOARDS

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced a bill to prohibit the consideration by Navy selection boards of the medical records of officers under consideration for promotion.

The medical history of an officer has no proper place in determining his relative fitness for promotion to a next higher grade. If the laws and regulations of the Navy Department, pertaining to the physical condition of officers, are properly being enforced, it must be assumed that the officer is physically fit for the duties he is performing at all times.

The question of whether or not an officer is physically qualified for an advanced rank is one which should be decided upon by the medical authorities after an officer has been selected for promotion and is being examined medically to qualify for such promotion. It is then that it should be determined either that the officer is physically qualified for the advanced rank or that he is not qualified for military duty, in which case he should be retired for such physical disability as disqualifies him for such promotion.

Subsequently if it is found that an officer has been selected and promoted, having been certified by the medical examining board as to his suitability for such promotion, that his condition was such as not to warrant such certification, then the responsibility should be placed squarely upon the members of the board who under oath certified as to the officer's physical condition.

An officer is either fit for duty or he is not fit for duty as far as promotion is concerned, the higher the rank of an officer the less necessity for the rigid physical requirements. It is upon the younger officers that the most strenuous and arduous duties fall and with whom endurance for physical strain is essential. As officers get into the higher ranks their duties become more administrative and executive and it is experience and judgment rather than perfect physique that is necessary.

I feel certain that the enactment of this bill will do a great deal to improve the selection system of promotion in the Navy and Marine Corps. Selection at best is very faulty and unsatisfactory. The more complicated the selection system becomes the more the human equation enters into the consideration to defeat the very purpose of promotion by selection boards, the object of which was supposed to be rigid adherence to the principle of selection solely on the basis of merit as determined by the military proficiency of the officer and his record.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ARKANSAS, 1836-1936—A STUDY OF ITS GROWTH AND CHARACTERISTICS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask that the document herewith presented, entitled "Arkansas, 1836-1936—A Study of Its Growth and Characteristics, in Observance of Its Centenary, 1936", be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the document will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

PROCEEDINGS OF AMERICAN INSTRUCTORS OF THE DEAF

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the report of the proceedings of the twenty-ninth meeting of the convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, submitted pursuant to law, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Virginia, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Whereas the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, although authorized by the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act to make rules and regulations concerning the advertisement of alcoholic beverages in Virginia, is without power to regulate interstate advertising of such beverages through the press and by means of other agencies: Now, therefore,

Resolved by the Senate of Virginia (the house of delegates concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby memorialized to enact such legislation as will provide for the adequate regulation and control of interstate advertising of distilled spirits; and that a copy of this resolution be promptly transmitted by the clerk of the senate to the presiding officers of the Senate and to each Member of the Congress of the United States from Virginia.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of County Commissioners of Ward County, N. Dak., favoring the adoption of the so-called Townsend old-age revolving pension plan, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Local No. 2673, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, of Anacortes, Wash., protesting against alleged discrimination against union members of the Works Progress Administration, and favoring the reinstatement of discharged workers, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Charles M. Green, of Lynn, Mass., praying for an inquiry into the receivership and proposed reorganization of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Co., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by the General Organization of the New Lots Evening High School, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring a continuance of aid to needy students of educational institutions, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of New York, praying for the enactment of Senate bill 1632, providing for the regulation of commerce by water carriers, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of the pending military appropriation bill, and favoring the use of proposed reductions therein toward education and relief purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4132) to amend section 4b of the National Defense Act, as amended, relating to certain enlisted men of the Army, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1686) thereon.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 3748) to authorize the Bureau of Mines to conduct certain studies, investigations, and experiments with respect to sub-bituminous and lignite coal, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1687) thereon.

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 8300. A bill to authorize a preliminary examination of Suwannee River, in the State of Florida, from Florida-Georgia State line to the Gulf of Mexico (Rept. No. 1688); and

H. R. 8797. A bill to provide a preliminary examination of Onondaga Creek, in Onondaga County, State of New York, with a view to the control of its floods (Rept. No. 1689).

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4190) to amend the act approved February 7, 1913, so as to remove restrictions as to the use of the Little Rock Confederate Cemetery, Arkansas, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1690) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1880) granting the Distinguished Service Cross to Col. John A. Lockwood, United States Army, retired, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1691) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 3669) providing for the suspension of annual assessment work on mining claims held by location in the United States and Alaska, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1692) thereon.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 3247) to amend title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, as amended by the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, and as extended by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1693) thereon.

Mr. WAGNER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was recommitted the bill (H. R. 10104) to aid in providing the people of the United States with adequate facilities for park, parkway, and recreational-area purposes, and to provide for the transfer of certain lands chiefly valuable for such purposes to States and political subdivisions thereof, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1694) thereon.

ACCEPTANCE OF PAINTING, LIEV EIRIKSSON DISCOVERS AMERICA

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, certain citizens of Norway have presented to the United States a copy of the painting Liev Eiriksson Discovers America. On next Monday that event is to be celebrated in the Capitol by accepting the painting; but, before it can be done, a joint resolution will have to be passed.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which I send to the desk, and which I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on the Library.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 165) directing the Architect of the Capitol to accept a copy of the painting, Liev Eiriksson Discovers America, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol is authorized and directed to accept as a gift to the people of the United States from certain Norwegian citizens a copy of the painting Liev Eiriksson Discovers America, and to cause such copy to be hung in a suitable place at the National Capitol.

A bill (S. 4289) to correct the military records of DeRosey C. Cabell, Thomas McF. Cockrill, James N. Caperton, Junius H. Houghton, Otto F. Lang, Paul B. Parker, James DeB. Walbach, and Victor W. B. Wales; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4290) for the relief of Lindsley M. Brown; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SHEPPARD and Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 4291) to correct the military record of Clyde Blakley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4292) relative to acceptance as third-class mail matter of bills or statements of account produced by photographic or mechanical process; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. ROBINSON and Mrs. CARAWAY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 229) providing for the contribution by the United States to the expense of the celebration by the State of Arkansas of its admission to the Federal Union; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 230) amending paragraph (4) of subsection (n) of section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GUFFEY and Mr. HASTINGS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 231) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Swedes in Delaware; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 232) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government of Sweden and individuals an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the three hundredth anniversary of the first permanent settlement in the Delaware River Valley, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 233) providing for the participation of the United States in the Great Lakes Exposition to be held in the State of Ohio during the year 1936, and authorizing the President to invite the Dominion of Canada to participate therein, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

CONVICT-MADE GOODS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in view of the millions of unemployed, I am opposed to unfair competition of convict-made goods with free labor. I believe that my thought in this regard is shared by millions of right-thinking people throughout the Nation. However, it is not always possible for consumers to know whether or not certain articles are made by prison labor. I hold that each article so made should be plainly and clearly marked with the words "convict made", together with the name and location of the penal or reformatory institution wherein it is produced.

A survey made by the United States Department of Labor in 1932 shows that 82,276 prisoners were employed at productive work at that time. There has been a continued increase of the State-use system whereby all the products made in prison are used in public institutions and none are sold in the general market. In 1905 only 26 percent of all productive labor in Federal and State prisons was under the State-use system. In 1914 this percentage had grown to 33, and in 1923 to 55, while in 1932 it was found that no less than 65 percent were working under the State-use system.

The total value of the products resulting from the labor of 82,276 State and Federal prisoners employed at productive work in the United States was approximately $75,000,000 in 1932. The manufacture of clothing of various kinds gave employment to the largest number of prisoners—approximately 19,000, or 23 percent, being so employed. More than 22,000,000 shirts having a value of over $8,000,000 were thus produced during the year 1932. Binder twine, with a total value of some $4,000,000 in 1932, was a very important item, and it is also of interest to note that some 36,000,000 automobile license tags were made in 1932 by prison labor.

There is a strong opposition to the sale of prison-made goods in competition with those produced by free labor. This led to the passage of the Hawes-Cooper Act, which became effective in 1934. It was the general opinion of prison officials at that time that this act would probably result in most States in the restriction of prison labor exclusively to the State-use system.

I introduce a bill similar to a bill already introduced in the House by Mr. ROBSON of Kentucky and known as H. R. 11372, asking that Public Law No. 215, entitled "An act to prohibit the interstate transportation of prison-made products in certain cases", be amended as follows:

No person shall deliver for shipment any such package, as described in the foregoing section, unless each article therein contained shall be plainly and clearly marked with the words "convict made", together with the name and location of the penal or reformatory institution wherein produced.

I ask that the bill which I now introduce may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as indicated by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The bill (S. 4286) to amend Public Law No. 215, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT TO AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ROBINSON submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for forest-fire cooperation from $1,578,632 to $2,500,000 intended to be proposed by him to House bill 11418, the Agricultural Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PRICE DISCRIMINATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. COPELAND (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3154) making it unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price or terms of sale between purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, to prohibit the payment of brokerage or commission under certain conditions, to suppress pseudo-advertising allowances, to provide a presumptive measure of damages in certain cases and to protect the independent merchant, the public whom he serves, and the manufacturer from whom he buys, from exploitation by unfair competitors, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. COOLIDGE) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 255), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration hereby is authorized to employ until the end of the present session an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,400 per annum.

TAXATION OF TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I tender a resolution, and ask to have it lie on the table, in order that I may address the Senate at an appropriate time when it will not interfere with the established program. The resolution contemplates some method of taxing the exempt bonds of the Government, and does not touch the subject now under consideration. Thus, I postpone any discussion of it at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 256) was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas it is estimated that approximately 20,000,000,000 of Government bonds are exempt from any direct taxation by the United States Government: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Congress by appropriate action legislate appropriate method under the Constitution and laws of the United States under which bonds and other securities of the United States of America held through purchase of transfer, now exempt from taxation, shall be subject to taxation upon the interest drawn from the bonds—the interest to be taxed on the way from the Treasury to the holder—or the bonds on principal to be taxed on a basis that would be equitable, measured by the necessities of and justice to the people of the United States.

STUDY OF TRANSPORTATION IN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

Mr. SHIPSTEAD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 257), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed, either in the United States or abroad, to study ocean, rail, inland-waterway, and truck and bus transportation in the several European countries with a view to determining to what extent and in what manner such transportation is subjected to government regulation, the effectiveness of such regulation and the effect of such regulation upon such transportation, and upon the level of rates, fares, and charges paid by the public, and the measure of coordination, if any, between the various transportation agencies. The committee shall report to the Senate (or to the Secretary of the Senate, if the Senate is not in session) the results of its study, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such places within or outside the United States, whether or not the Senate is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to employ and fix the compensation of such experts, and clerical and stenographic assistants, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary.

The expenses of the committee, not to exceed $, including traveling expenses, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers approved by the committee and signed by the chairman, or member of the committee designated by him.

RESTRICTION OF IMMIGRATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a radio address which I delivered last Thursday night at 11:15 p. m. from Washington, D. C., over station WMAL, through the network of the National Broadcasting Co. The address concerned itself with the question of immigration.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, I am not going to make a political speech. On the contrary, I am making an appeal to every citizen of the United States and to every law-abiding alien who is legally within the confines of our country. There are now bills pending in Congress which, in my opinion, are a menace to our Nation and an insult to every law-abiding alien who is legally in the United States. I refer to the Kerr-Coolidge bills.

I feel, as a United States Senator representing the great State of North Carolina, and having at heart the interest of the whole Nation, that I would be derelict in my duty if I failed to lay before you all the facts regarding the Kerr-Coolidge bills.

First. The Kerr-Coolidge bills, which are identical, create an interdepartmental committee composed of a representative from the State Department, one from the Department of Justice, and the third member from the Department of Labor.

Second. The Kerr-Coolidge bills specifically exempt from deportation alien narcotic addicts.

Third. The Kerr-Coolidge bills grant broad discretionary power to the proposed interdepartmental committee allowing alien criminals of the most dangerous, immoral, and diseased classes to remain in the United States for purely sentimental reasons. These aliens are mandatorily deportable under existing statutes.

Fourth. The Kerr-Coolidge bills grant the same broad discretionary power to the proposed interdepartmental committee to refrain from deporting aliens who enter the country illegally, or who remain here in violation of the present law.

Fifth. The Kerr-Coolidge bills grant broad discretionary power to the Commissioner of Immigration to allow an alien admitted for a temporary stay to remain permanently in the country, despite the fact that in making application for temporary admission, the alien swore that he sought entry for a strictly limited period of time. This provision puts a premium on dishonesty and bars the honest alien who seeks to enter through legal channels after securing his visa abroad.

Sixth. The Kerr-Coolidge bills grant broad discretionary power to the proposed interdepartmental committee to permit an alien who is in the United States in violation of the law to escape deportation if he has a relative, even by marriage or adoption, in the United States, and this relative need not be a citizen of the United States.

Seventh. The Kerr-Coolidge bills, in effect, nullify the penal provisions of the present laws which were drafted to protect our country from an influx of aliens.

Eighth. The Kerr-Coolidge bills are strongly opposed by the 21 standard railroad labor organizations, the American Federation of Labor, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Sons of the American Revolution, the Junior Order of the United American Mechanics, the Patriotic Order of the Sons of America, the Military Order of the World War, and the American Coalition of 115 patriotic, civic, and fraternal societies throughout the United States.

To give you an idea of how un-American this proposed Kerr-Coolidge legislation is, I want to state the names of a few of the organizations supporting this measure: The American Civil Liberties Union, which everyone knows is the defender of radical activities throughout the Nation; the International Migration Service, with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, and a British viscountess as its honorary president; the Foreign Language Information Service, which, so far as I know, has never failed to oppose immigration legislation designed to protect the American people; and the National Institute of Immigrant Aid.

Let me add that the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, born in Scotland and a naturalized citizen, says that every organization he knows interested in the welfare of the alien has endorsed this bill.

Advocates of the Kerr-Coolidge bills—and they are led by the Department of Labor—insist that opposition to their provisions is due to the fact that the intent of these measures are not understood. To the contrary, I believe the opposition is due solely to the fact that the intent and purposes of these measures are thoroughly understood by the opponents, and I am one of those opponents.

By varying estimates, there are between five and eight million persons in this country who owe no allegiance to our Government. The Commissioner of Immigration estimates that there are approximately 5,000,000 aliens in the United States. Others estimate the figures to be between seven and eight millions; but whatever the number of these aliens may be, they live here and work here, and, for reasons best known to themselves, they prefer to retain their citizenship in the countries from whence they came.

Statistics vary, but the best information available places the number of these aliens now employed in this country at approximately 3,000,000. Those 3,000,000 aliens now employed displace 3,000,000 Americans, who must either be maintained on relief by the taxpayers or else maintain themselves through the exhaustion of their savings. It is said that a million and a half or more of the aliens now in the United States are on relief and are maintained at the expense of the American taxpayers. The expenses to date for the support of these aliens runs into untold millions of dollars, all of which must be paid by our American people.

Let me direct your attention to the fact that there are now 12,625,000 people out of work in the United States, according to the last survey made by the American Federation of Labor. Now, let us examine the facts about this situation, using only such information as has been made available by the Department of Labor itself.

By the Department's own figures, there are now in the United States 2,862 aliens, who, under existing laws, would be mandatorily deportable.

Without any authority of law, for 2 years and 8 months the Department of Labor has prevented these deportations. Specifically, the Department of Labor now asks Congress to enact the Kerr-Coolidge bills so that these same 2,862 aliens may legally be permitted to remain in this country.

Who are these aliens for whom the Department of Labor is so solicitous?

1. According to the Department's own statement, practically all—at one time the Department used the figure 98 percent—entered this country illegally.

2. From the departmental records it is proven that many—a large percentage, possibly—when they entered the country illegally actually committed a second crime, that of perjury, for which the penalty as prescribed by existing law is a fine of $10,000 or imprisonment for 5 years or both.

3. The Labor Department's own records disclose that among these aliens, for whose particular benefit Congress is now asked to relax existing laws, there are those who are:

Public charges.

Criminals with long or short police records.

Those who flout not only civil and criminal law but moral laws as well.

To me not the least amazing feature of this attempt on the part of a great governmental agency, to break down immigration barriers erected by Congress in its desire to protect American citizenship, is the persistency with which the attack is maintained.

This is not the first Congress which has been asked to take this step.

In the past 3 years Congress has, by emphatic vote, refused its approval to the proposal submitted by the Department of Labor.

Notwithstanding this definite refusal of Congress to be a party to what seems to me an over-bold attempt to protect thousands of aliens who have defied our laws from the day they set foot on our shores, the pressure on their behalf continues.

The Kerr-Coolidge bills have been called alien deportation acts. They are misnamed. They should be designated bills to protect the alien criminal, the alien narcotic addict, and the alien undesirables of every class from deportation.

Are there any of my listeners tonight who believe for one moment there is another nation on the face of the earth which would put the interest of the alien above that of the citizen? I appeal to you now to telegraph or to write immediately to your Senators and to your Congressmen and urge them to oppose with all their vigor the Kerr-Coolidge bills.

In conclusion, ladies and gentlemen, may I say that at the present time I have a bill pending in the United States Senate which, if enacted, will rid this country of undesirable aliens, protect the honest and law-abiding immigrant, and tighten up the immigration laws. Congressman STARNES, of Alabama, is sponsoring the Reynolds-Starnes bill in the House of Representatives; however, I shall not attempt an explanation of any bill tonight.

Finally, don't neglect to wire or write, at once, your Senators and Congressmen to oppose the Kerr-Coolidge bills.

Thank you.

MEMORANDUM FOR EMPLOYEES OF AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be published in the RECORD a general memorandum for employees of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, issued by Mr. Chester C. Davis, Administrator, under date of March 9, 1936.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GENERAL MEMORANDUM FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ADMINISTRATION,
OFFICE OF THE ADMINISTRATOR,

March 9, 1936.

I am using this approach to explain some of the steps that have been taken during the past 2 months as well as to look forward with you into what may be expected under our future operations. Now that the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act has become law, we can begin to sight down the road and size up our responsibilities under the new agricultural program.

First, in the way of background, I want to tell you that plans had been under consideration several months prior to the Court's decision for a decentralization of the paper work in connection with the new projected programs. This was being studied looking toward the possibilities of greater efficiency and economy of operation. If those plans could have been carried forward an opportunity would have opened for many people to return to their home States during February and March of this year. This would have made it possible immediately to offer field employment to the some 700 employees in the Controller's Office appointed after May 31, 1935, who under normal circumstances would have been separated from the service late in January. These plans were interrupted by the decision, however, and since the retention of these employees could not be justified for a clean-up program, they were placed on furlough status. Also each division was requested to submit a list of the people who would not be needed in completing existing work. In making up these lists consideration was given to the type of work for which the employees were trained, along with their efficiency rating and length of service. At the same time the required provisions of law relating to married employees in the service were observed, and of this class usually it was the employee in this Administration who elected to take the furlough. Furthermore, the laws relative to military-preference employees have been rigidly followed.

Immediately after the decision our personnel offices went into action and began to arrange for transfers to other Government agencies. They not only assisted furloughed employees in securing other employment, but also arranged transfers for many not on the furlough list. This relieved the situation considerably and made it possible to retain many employees who otherwise would have been placed on furlough. This work is going on, and as a result we have in some instances been able to recall employees who have not been successful in their search for other employment. However, it has only been possible to recall employees in certain classifications.

Now, a word about these furloughs. They were given instead of terminations out of consideration for the uncertainties then existing and in order that our civil-service employees could maintain their eligibility for transfer to other governmental agencies. Every employee placed on furlough status was also given credit for the accrued annual leave he earned during his connection with this administration. I believe that when all things are considered the furlough plan has many advantages and is in the interest of the greatest number of employees.

So much for the past. Most of you are primarily interested in the steps to be taken under the new program in order that you can shape your plans accordingly. Those of you who have studied the new legislation realize that it represents an entirely different approach to the agricultural problem. When the Agricultural Adjustment Act became law in 1933 I doubt if many knew exactly how it could be administered. Much the same situation prevails today, but with a background of experience we do know that the necessary organization can be put in shape to move forward—and I believe successfully.

Although our plans are still in the formative stage, we are in agreement on certain features of the new program in which you are interested. Probably the most important feature from your standpoint will be the decentralization of all work involving the examination and approval of applications for grants. With this work being handled in the field, the organization necessary to carry the load in Washington will be relatively small. I realize there has been a general misunderstanding on this point, giving rise to many unfounded rumors, and for this reason I want to outline briefly the procedure that will be followed.

Congress has recently authorized the payment of obligations under the Agricultural Adjustment Act accrued prior to January 6. The Members of Congress and the many contract signers are expecting a workmanlike job in clearing these obligations, and I believe you will back me to the limit in assuring them that they are going to see the job done just as efficiently as it was being handled before the decision. In this connection I have heard rumors to the effect that from anywhere to 2,500 furlough notices had been prepared and were ready to be sent out. Let me assure you that this is not only untrue but that, as far as I know, no person in an administrative capacity has even made such a recommendation. It is true that furloughs will be inevitable as the work decreases, but it is not contemplated that any further furloughing will be necessary before May 15. We are attempting to arrange new positions and transfers to other agencies for our employees in order to hold furloughs to a minimum.

With this objective in mind, our efforts in assisting employees to find other employment will be intensified. I am sure that most of you know Julien Friant and James E. Jones or know of the interest that they have in you. They have taken over this job, and I know that they will do their best in helping you work out your individual problems. We realize that there are many employees in such circumstances that it would not be feasible for them to accept employment outside of Washington, and they will be given every assistance in securing transfers to other governmental agencies.

First consideration for appointments in connection with the new program will be given to those of you who have gone down the line with us here and those employees already in the field who have been with us through the several commodity-program campaigns. I want you to understand that no inexperienced personnel will be employed until it has been determined that the positions in the State offices cannot be filled by people from that State who have had experience either in Washington or in the State commodity offices under the old programs. If your services have been satisfactory and you are interested in returning to your home State, you may be sure that you will be among those receiving preferential consideration for any openings that may develop. It is expected that work in the field offices under the new program will start around the 1st of August.

Recently a canvass of the organization was made to find employees who were willing to accept employment in their home States in connection with the cotton-price-adjustment offices. I feel that our purpose in this was generally misunderstood. We expect that this work will last approximately 6 months, after which we will be moving forward under the new program. So, although we can only promise temporary employment, prospects are exceptionally good that the people selected for these positions will find continuous work. Some of these positions are still available, and I hope that some of you will find it possible to take advantage of the opportunity offered.

In conclusion, I want to assure you that your welfare is a matter of great concern to this Administration, and every effort will be made to make the required personnel adjustments in an orderly and humane manner.

Sincerely yours,

CHESTER C. DAVIS, Administrator.

LOBBYIST, 1936 MODEL—ARTICLE FROM NEW YORK TIMES MAGAZINE

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in yesterday's New York Times Magazine entitled "Lobbyist—1936 Model."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LOBBYIST—1936 MODEL—CONGRESSMAN BLUMPUS LEARNS HOW THE STEAM IS APPLIED IN THE HIGH-PRESSURE MACHINERY

By Duncan Aikman

WASHINGTON.—Congressman Blumpus is having heat trouble. But it has nothing to do with the climate in the District of Columbia. It is entirely a matter of the Blinders bill and the voters back home.

Mr. Blumpus returned to the final session of the Seventy-fourth Congress only dimly aware that a Blinders bill existed. It is one of those painfully technical measures invoking the interstate-commerce powers of the Government to alter the scope of operations for certain major industries. Congressman Blumpus original hope was that he could get some statesmanlike advice from his party whips on how to vote on it and so avoid bothering his head with bewildering details. After all, he has mental troubles enough with the bills that come up in his own committees.

But the Congressman knows better now. Three weeks ago tomorrow he got a dozen telegrams from Smithville—a manufacturing town of about 8,000 in the northern end of his district—telling him he was expected to go out and battle for the Blinders bill from now on. Next day there were 50 similar telegrams from Jonesville. The next, there were 202 from Blankborough—the district's metropolis. In larger or smaller furies, according to the size of the towns, the wires kept coming for 10 days until all the population centers in the district had been exhausted.

The wires were mostly from businessmen, but there was an impressive mixture of labor leaders and local political celebrities.

They all said substantially the same thing: "Counting on you to put your shoulder behind the Blinders bill, which will do a lot for business (or labor, or farm markets, or the political set-up) around here. Stop. Best of luck."

"You can sure pick up that lobby's walking delegate's trail through the district, can't you?" snorted Congressman Blumpus' secretary about the third day of the deluge.

"Yeah," said the Congressman. "It looks like a headache."

It was. When the mails could catch up with the telegraphic facilities, resolutions endorsing the Blinders bill began pouring in from the chambers of commerce, the Young Voters' Federated Forums, the Independent Citizens' Alliance, the United Jeffersonian Clubs of Brown County, and so forth. Letters rolled in from merchants, lawyers, and manufacturers; there were others in the hard scrubs of day laborers and old-time farmers, and in the neat hands of politically conscious housewives. Workers of more or less efficacy in his late campaign took to transmitting barbed bits of political gossip. "Hear So-and-So is coming out against you in the primary if you don't declare for the Blinders bill", was the burden of these discourses. "Sure hope you will see your way clear to do so."

Businessmen in Washington on visits began dropping into the Congressman's office. Five out of six of them, by the secretary's check, worked the conversation around to the Blinders bill. A surprise delegation of three old-fashioned farmers appeared. As they sat on the edge of their chairs with their hats on their knees, the Blinders bill's potential benefits to the farm markets seemed to be the only conversational topic they could think about. Meanwhile, half a dozen daily and 19 weekly newspapers in the Congressman's district started campaigning for the Blinders bill.

Eventually Congressman Blumpus decided to take a run out to the Midlands to see what the shouting was all about. He found awaiting him this letter from the Citizens' Progressive Political Study League (stationery claimed 50,000 voting members): "You are requested to attend our meeting at 8 p. m. tonight and make a full and explicit statement of your attitude on the Blinders bill. If you do not see fit to attend, our organization necessarily will assume that you are opposing this bill for unjust and insufficient reasons."

Snarling grimly, Congressman Blumpus goes into conference with his political lieutenants. "What I want to know," he begins violently, "is how much of this Blinders bill is real and how much fake?" And for that reason he is keenly interested in the Senate committee's inquiry into lobbying.

Congressman Blumpus is a typical victim of the Washington legislative lobby, 1936 style. Yet all this time he has not seen a professional lobbyist. No one has invited him to Lucullan dinners or to exclusive house parties with the Blinders bill's multimillionaire backers. No one has suggested that Mrs. Blumpus might like to go to an intimate tea at the mansion of an internationally known hostess and meet the visiting Dutchess of Ipecac. No one has sent cases of rare wines or liquors or jumbo boxes of de luxe cigars. Mr. Blumpus reflects humorously that if he were the kind of Congressman who would like a $1,000 bill for his vote on the Blinders bill, he wouldn't know where to go for it and would probably be kicked downstairs if he tried. In fact, he has to do a little telephoning around to find out where the Blinders bill lobby is working from and who is running it.

During his week-end in the district however, Congressman Blumpus learned plenty. There had been a quiet meeting of the "key men" of commerce and industry in Blankborough the week after New Year's. It was addressed by spokesmen for national big business and a decision was reached to "go for" the Blinders bill 100 percent and "put the word out." So when a district organizer for the crusade passed along the Blumpus home front his job was easy.

All the chamber of commerce secretaries along the line already had "the word." So the organizer's duties were confined to sitting at their elbows while they telephoned the local magnates most likely to acquiesce in the suggestion that the time had come to send their Congressman Blinders bill telegrams.

In addition to calling on chamber of commerce secretaries, the organizer held a series of levees for various brands of local talent—chiefly lawyers and aspiring young politicians. No one was precisely promised anything like a legal retainer or a contribution to his campaign fund. All the same, most of the organizer's callers came away with the feeling that they had made a "swell contact" and that it would be a good idea to do something to deserve it. Consequently, within a week after the organizer's passage, nearly every club in every locality he visited—political, social, or occupational—was addressed by a volunteer spokesman for the Blinders bill, and induced to adopt a resolution for the Blumpus mails.

A little more investigation uncovered the rest of the background. The political small fry enlisted by the organizer had persuaded their relatives, dependents, pool-room intimates, and hangers-on to write the affecting series of personal letters the Congressman had been getting. A distinguished labor leader had been promoted to the management side of operations and now his chief duty seemed to be addressing labor groups on the virtues of the Blinders measure. Even the three old farmer partisans turned out to be poor relations by marriage of an executive in a pro-Blinders corporation.

Today, after his week-end of fact-checking and soul-wrestling, Congressman Blumpus has decided to fight the Blinders bill to a finish. He is honestly convinced that its benefits to business in general have been greatly exaggerated and that it would do business in his own district positive harm. Still he takes off his hat to this intensive promotion of the favor-trading industry in his district. It was about the slickest demonstration of pressure lobby politics he has seen since he came to Congress. If they'd overdone it just a little less, they might have got him.

The Blinders bill campaign is Washington's latest type of lobby and it calls for a distinct, if not altogether unprecedented, type of lobbyist. Let us say for purposes of blurred identification that the Blinders lobby is conducted by an expert called Earl Smithers.

Mr. Smithers brings to his post great natural talents, vast experience, an exhaustive acquaintance with nearly every brand of regional "Who's Who" the Nation offers, and a controlling maxim. After graduating brilliantly from an advertising agency 15 years ago, he managed national publicity campaigns for a number of corporations whose public relations were important, and went on from there to direct political relations for a national association of "vested interests" in a dozen State capitals between Massachusetts and Oregon.

As a result of his professional gaddings about, he knows "key men" everywhere—newspaper publishers, editors, and star reporters; political leaders, both real and ostensible; financial magnates whose words are virtually commands on the corporation front in their regions, the special pleaders and ballyhoo artists for various types of business interests. He knows ward bosses in Connecticut, pulpit leaders in San Francisco, distinguished educators in the Middle West, labor leaders, national panjandrums of lodge brotherhoods, chieftains of veterans' organizations, and fellow lobbyists of greater and less degree everywhere. If need develops, he can get someone to make a point for him in the St. Louis City Council or a southern church convention.

Curiously enough, he hasn't a particularly extensive acquaintance with Congressmen and Senators. This is because the maxim, "Never embarrass a statesman by forcing a lobbyist's attentions upon him unless he likes it" is his first rule of conduct. He knows perhaps a dozen Congressmen and a Senator or two who do "like it", and when it comes to these he can entertain with reasonable magnificence. What he prefers to do is to operate as a coordinator of field armies.

When a campaign is on Mr. Smithers is hardly visible in Washington. He keeps away from committee hearings unless officially summoned, preferring to have his side presented by bluff businessmen, and an occasional corporation lawyer, because it sounds "less professional." As he conceives his job, he is not a personal-contact man at all, except with an inner group of statesmen who were on his side from the beginning and have been picked to act as his congressional strategists. With these he is constantly in touch. But most of the time he sits in his office rolling up prodigious telephone bills as he keeps in touch with "progress" in two-thirds of the States and scores of congressional districts. Indeed, he appointed and daily instructed the organizer who "turned on the heat" in the Blumpus district.

At crucial points in his struggle Mr. Smithers may even be absent from Washington. If the front seems to be crumbling in California, or Arkansas, or Minnesota, he will hop an airplane to straighten out the situation, leaving Capital operations to take care of themselves. He knows that if the armies out in the field keep striking simultaneously his Washington job is three-fourths done.

And when the final vote comes you won't see Mr. Smithers waiting in the gallery to receive congratulations. The boys in the districts put this over, is his attitude, so let 'em celebrate in the districts. He'll take his, thank you, at a little testimonial dinner the nabobs of his business group throw him in New York, with perhaps a fat bonus check for an appetizer. Meanwhile, he hopes, with becoming and very genuine modesty, that his name won't even get into the newspapers.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

WAR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending motion may be laid aside temporarily so that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the War Department appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York that the pending motion submitted by the Senator from Kansas may be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of considering the War Department appropriation bill.

Mr. McNARY. I understand that the request is that the pending motion be laid aside temporarily in order that the appropriation bill may be taken up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that the motion of the Senator from Kansas be temporarily laid aside for the purpose indicated. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 11035) making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I think it will expedite consideration of the bill if I make a brief statement of the policy pursued by the committee.

There are a number of items in the bill which are related to one general proposal. It will be recalled that last year, after serious consideration of the matter, the Senate adopted a plan by which the Army was to be increased to 165,000 enlisted men, with a corresponding increase in the number of officers. It has been found by the committee that, as a matter of fact, notwithstanding the action of the Congress, the number of men actually enlisted has been only 147,000, and that no progress is being made beyond that point because of the suggestion of the Budget Bureau to the War Department.

The committee went over the matter again, reviewed the evidence, and decided it was wise that we should have 165,000 enlisted men and the appropriate number of officers. General MacArthur last year and General Craig this year said that we ought to have in the Army 280,000 enlisted men. The committee feels that 165,000 is the reasonable number we should now have, certainly in view of our action of last year. So, a good many of the amendments which will be offered are with a view to conforming to the general principle that the Army shall consist of 165,000 enlisted men.

There is a further addition relating to the Army Engineers. Senators will recall that last year when the flood-control bill was before the Senate, largely because of a very humorous and effective speech by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the flood-control bill was sent back to the committee. That bill carried authorizations for $604,000,000. Since that time we have added $180,000,000, making a total of $784,000,000. Since those authorizations have not been made by law, unless they should be made by some further action of the Congress and appropriated for, the only activity of the Army Engineers this year will be in connection with river and harbor items.

The Budget allowed $100,000,000 for these items, we increased the amount to $150,000,000, and a proposal for an additional amount will be presented, I presume, in due time by the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The committee thought it wise that we should go forward rather more energetically with the river and harbor projects, in view of the fact that unless further action be taken they will constitute the sole activities of the Army engineers. Accordingly the Army engineers were asked to submit to the committee the list of those amounts which can be profitably expended during the fiscal year 1937 on projects authorized by Congress, necessary in the interest of commerce and navigation, and on which no substantial delay is expected in the fulfillment of local cooperation. So the projects which are included in the bill are those which have been begun and those which have been authorized and are considered by the Army engineers to be necessary.

We had a further thought in the matter to the effect that we still have unemployment in the country and that by the pursuit of the plan to carry on these engineering projects there would be material relief of that situation throughout the United States.

On pages 5, 6, 7, and 8 will be found the list of projects and the amount of money allocated to each. It will be seen that the entire country is covered. As a matter of fact, if we should adopt this policy it would furnish means of employment activity throughout the country.

I thought it wise to advise the Senate of these matters in order that all might understand the reasons for the increases over the sums carried in the bill as it passed the House. It explains why the amounts carried by the bill as reported by the Senate committee are as large as they are.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I wish to ask the Senator if the river and harbor expenditures totaling $150,000,000, placed in the bill on the recommendation of the Army engineers, are taken care of by the amendments of the Senate Committee on Appropriations increasing the various amounts?

Mr. COPELAND. They are.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. No appropriation is carried in the bill, as I understood the Senator's statement, except for projects which have been authorized.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct. They have been studied and presented by the Army engineers, approved by the two committees of Congress, and authorized in acts of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. The total amount carried for the river and harbor improvements is $150,000,000, I believe.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; the total amount is $150,000,000, as shown on the last page of the report of the committee. The House allowed a smaller amount.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I understand all the river and harbor projects carried in the bill have been covered by enabling acts of Congress.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; every one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—Military activities and other expenses of the War Department incident thereto—Salaries, War Department", on page 3, line 10, after the word "exceed", strike out "$303,960" and insert "$323,960", so as to read:

Office of Chief of Engineers, $123,260: Provided, That the services of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, and such other services as the Secretary of War may deem necessary may be employed only in the office of the Chief of Engineers, to carry into effect the various appropriations for rivers and harbors, surveys, and preparation for and the consideration of river and harbor estimates and bills, to be paid from such appropriations: Provided further, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year 1937 shall not exceed $323,960; the Secretary of War shall each year, in the Budget, report to Congress the number of persons so employed, their duties, and the amount paid to each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Military activities—Field exercises", on page 9, line 4, after the word "for" to strike out "payment of claims not exceeding $500 each in amount for damages to or loss of private property incident to such exercises that have accrued or may hereafter accrue: Provided, That settlement of such claims shall be made by the General Accounting Office upon the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of War where the amount of damages has been ascertained by the War Department and payment thereof will be accepted by the owners of the property in full satisfaction of such damages" and insert "settlement of claims (not exceeding $500 each) for damages to or loss of private property resulting from such exercises that have accrued or may hereafter accrue, when each claim is substantiated by a report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the troops engaged, and approved by the Secretary of War, whose action thereon shall be conclusive, $255,321", so as to read:

For all expenses required for the conduct of special field exercises, including participation therein by the National Guard and the Organized Reserves, comprising allowances for enlisted men for quarters and rations, movement of matériel, maintenance, and operation of structures and utilities, and any other requisite supplies and services, and for settlement of claims (not exceeding $500 each) for damages to or loss of private property resulting from such exercises that have accrued or may hereafter accrue, when each claim is substantiated by a report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the troops engaged, and approved by the Secretary of War, whose action thereon shall be conclusive, $255,321.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Finance Department—Pay of the Army", on page 10, line 10, before the word "commissioned", to insert "three hundred and fifty"; in the same line, after the word "officers", to strike out "$33,944,252" and insert "$34,619,252"; in line 14, after the word "officers", to strike out "$2,186,501" and insert "$2,224,001"; in line 16, after the word "by", to strike out "nonflying" and insert "nonrated"; in line 18, after the word "such", to strike out "nonflying" and insert "nonrated"; in line 20, after the word "and", to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty-five"; in line 22, after the name "Philippine Scouts", to strike out "$60,883,292, and, in addition, $2,344,211 of the appropriation 'Pay of the Army, 1936', which sum shall remain available until June 30, 1937, for defraying the cost of increasing the enlisted strength of the Regular Army from an average of 147,000 to an average of 150,873 enlisted men, and shall be available also for the objects embraced by and in addition to other appropriations contained in this act", and insert "$66,573,060"; in line 22, after the word "available", to strike out "$6,309,574" and insert "$6,481,574"; in line 23, after the word "allowances", to strike out "$5,912,561" and insert "$6,031,511"; on page 12, line 7, after the words "in all", to strike out "$153,759,906" and insert "$160,453,124"; and in line 11, after the word "discharges", to strike out "$153,474,906" and insert "$160,168,124", so as to read:

For pay of not to exceed an average of 12,350 commissioned officers, $34,619,252; pay of officers, National Guard, $100; pay of warrant officers, $1,474,844; aviation increase to commissioned and warrant officers of the Army, including not to exceed 5 medical officers, $2,224,001, none of which shall be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonrated officers at a rate in excess of $1,440 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such nonrated officers; additional pay to officers for length of service, $9,706,748; pay of not less than an average of 165,000 enlisted men of the line and staff, not including the Philippine Scouts, $66,573,060; pay of enlisted men of National Guard, $100; aviation increase to enlisted men of the Army, $508,782; pay of enlisted men of the Philippine Scouts, $1,050,447; additional pay for length of service to enlisted men, $4,759,614; pay of the officers on the retired list, $12,369,850; increased pay to not to exceed 7 retired officers on active duty, $9,145; pay of retired enlisted men, $13,589,060; pay not to exceed 60 civil-service messengers at not to exceed $1,200 each at headquarters of the several Territorial departments, corps areas, Army and corps headquarters, Territorial districts, tactical divisions and brigades, service schools, camps, and ports of embarkation and debarkation, $72,000; pay and allowances of contract surgeons, $53,076; pay of nurses, $899,260; pay of hospital matrons, $600; rental allowances, including allowances for quarters for enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available, $6,481,574; subsistence allowances, $6,031,511; interest on soldiers' deposits, $30,000; payment of exchange by officers serving in foreign countries, and when specially authorized by the Secretary of War, by officers disbursing funds pertaining to the War Department, when serving in Alaska, and all foreign money received shall be charged to and paid out by disbursing officers of the Army at the legal valuation fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, $100; in all, $160,453,124, less $285,000 to be supplied by the Secretary of War for this purpose from funds received during the fiscal year 1937 from the purchase by enlisted men of the Army of their discharges, $160,168,124; and the money herein appropriated for "Pay of the Army" shall be accounted for as one fund: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, no officer of the Army shall be entitled to receive an addition to his pay in consequence of the provisions of the act approved May 11, 1908 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 803).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 17, to strike out:

LXXX—238

None of the money appropriated in this act shall be used to pay any officer on the retired list of the Army who for himself or for others engages in the selling, contracting for the sale of, negotiating for the sale of, or furnishing to the Army or the War Department any supplies, materials, equipment, lands, buildings, plants, vessels, or munitions. None of the money appropriated in this act shall be paid to any officer on the retired list of the Army who, having been retired before reaching the age of 64, is employed in the United States or its possessions by any individual, partnership, corporation, or association regularly or frequently engaged in making direct sales of any merchandise or material to the War Department or the Army.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

None of the money appropriated in this act shall be paid to any officer of the Army on the active list while such officer is employed by any person or company furnishing war materials or supplies to the Government, and such employment is hereby made unlawful: Provided, That no payment shall be made from money appropriated in this act to any officer on the retired list of the Army who, for himself or for others, is engaged in the selling of, contracting for the sale of, or negotiating for the sale of, to the Army or the War Department, any war materials or supplies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Travel of the Army", on page 15, line 7, after the word "employees", to strike out "$3,096,027" and insert "$3,126,027", so as to read:

For travel allowances and travel in kind, as authorized by law, for persons traveling in connection with the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department, including mileage, transportation, reimbursement of actual expenses, or per-diem allowances, to officers and contract surgeons; transportation of troops; transportation, or reimbursement therefor, of nurses, enlisted men, recruits, recruiting parties, applicants for enlistment between recruiting stations and recruiting depots, rejected applicants for enlistment, general prisoners, cadets and accepted cadets from their homes to the Military Academy, discharged cadets, civilian employees, civilian witnesses before courts martial, dependents of military personnel, and attendants accompanying remains of military personnel and civilian employees; travel pay to discharged military personnel; transportation of discharged prisoners and persons discharged from St. Elizabeths Hospital after transfer thereto from the military service, to their homes, or elsewhere as they may elect, the cost in each case not to be greater than to the place of last enlistment; hot coffee for troops traveling when supplied with cooked or travel rations; commutation of quarters and rations to enlisted men traveling on detached duty when it is impracticable to carry rations, and to applicants for enlistment and general prisoners traveling under orders; per-diem allowances or actual cost of subsistence while in a travel status, to nurses, civilian employees, civilian witnesses before courts martial, and attendants accompanying remains of military personnel and civilian employees, $3,126,027, which may be increased, subject to the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, by transfers from other appropriations contained in this act of such amounts as may be required in addition to those herein provided for travel in connection with development, procurement, production, maintenance, or construction activities; and, with such exception, no other appropriation in this act shall be available for any expense for or incident to travel of personnel of the Regular Army or civilian employees under the War Department, except the appropriation "Contingencies of the Army" and the appropriations for the National Guard, the Organized Reserves, the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, citizens' military training camps, the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, the United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands, the United States Soldiers' Home, the nonmilitary activities of the Corps of Engineers, and the Panama Canal, and except as may be provided for in the appropriation "Air Corps, Army."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quartermaster Corps", on page 19, line 17, after the words "in all" to strike out "$25,693,741, and, in addition, $501,714 of the appropriation 'Pay of the Army, 1936', which shall remain available until June 30, 1937", and insert "$29,084,455", so as to read:

Subsistence of the Army: Purchase of subsistence supplies: For issue as rations to troops, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, civil employees when entitled thereto, hospital matrons, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, general prisoners of war (including Indians held by the Army as prisoners but for whose subsistence appropriation is not otherwise made), Indians employed by the Army as guides and scouts, and general prisoners at posts; ice for issue to organizations of enlisted men and offices at such places as the Secretary of War may determine, and for preservation of stores; for the subsistence of the masters, officers, crews, and employees of the vessels of the Army Transport Service; meals for recruiting parties and applicants for enlistment while under observation; for sales to officers, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps while on active duty, and enlisted men of the Army. For payments: Of the regulation allowances of commutation in lieu of rations to enlisted men on furlough, and to enlisted men when stationed at places where rations in kind cannot be economically issued, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty. For payment of the regulation allowance of commutation in lieu of rations for enlisted men, applicants for enlistment while held under observation, civilian employees who are entitled to subsistence at public expense, and general prisoners while sick in hospitals, to be paid to the surgeon in charge; advertising; for providing prizes to be established by the Secretary of War for enlisted men of the Army who graduate from the Army schools for bakers and cooks, the total amount of such prizes at the various schools not to exceed $900 per annum; and for other necessary expenses incident to the purchase, testing, care, preservation, issue, sale, and accounting for subsistence supplies for the Army; in all, $29,084,455.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, line 18, after the word "reasons", to strike out "$5,759,522" and insert "$6,621,779", so as to read:

S. C., title 10, sec. 751), and to enlisted men of National Guard on discharge from Federal service, as prescribed in amendatory act of September 22, 1922 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 752), and to members of the National Guard who have been mustered into Federal service and discharged on account of physical disability; in all, $12,825,819, of which amount not exceeding $250,000 shall be available immediately for the procurement and transportation of fuel for the service of the fiscal year 1937.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Barracks and quarters and other buildings and utilities", on page 28, line 20, after the word "posts", to strike out "$12,139,668" and insert "$13,039,668", so as to read:

For all expenses incident to the construction, installation, operation, and maintenance of buildings, utilities, appurtenances, and accessories necessary for the shelter, protection, and accommodation of the Army and its personnel and property, where not specifically provided for in other appropriations, including personal services, purchase and repair of furniture for quarters for officers, warrant officers, and noncommissioned officers, and officers' messes and wall lockers and refrigerators for Government-owned buildings as may be approved by the Secretary of War, care and improvement of grounds, flooring and framing for tents, rental of buildings, including not to exceed $900 in the District of Columbia, provided space is not available in Government-owned buildings and grounds for military purposes, lodgings for recruits and applicants for enlistment, water supply, sewer and fire-alarm systems, fire apparatus, roads, walks, wharves, drainage, dredging channels, purchase of water, disposal of sewage, shooting galleries, ranges for small-arms target practice, field, mobile, and railway artillery practice, including flour for paste for marking targets, such ranges and galleries to be open as far as practicable to the National Guard and organized rifle clubs under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War; warehouse and fuel-handling equipment; stores required for use of the Army for heating offices, hospitals, barracks, quarters, recruiting stations, and United States disciplinary barracks, also ranges and stoves for cooking food at posts, for post bakery and bake-oven equipment and apparatus and appliances for cooking and serving food when constituting fixed installations in buildings, including maintenance and repair of such heating and cooking appliances; for furnishing heat and light for the authorized allowance of quarters for officers, enlisted men, and warrant officers, including retired enlisted men when ordered to active duty, contract surgeons when stationed at and occupying public quarters at military posts, officers of the National Guard attending service and garrison schools, and for recruits, guards, hospitals, storehouses, offices, the buildings erected at private cost, in the operation of the act approved May 31, 1902 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 1346), and buildings for a similar purpose on military reservations authorized by War Department regulations; for sale of fuel to officers; fuel and engine supplies required in the operation of modern batteries at established posts, $13,039,668, and $2,500,000 of this appropriation shall be available immediately for the procurement and transportation of fuel for the service for the fiscal year 1937.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 22, to insert:

ACQUISITION OF LAND

For the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, N. Y., as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1491), $431,000, to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Signal Corps—Signal Service of the Army", on page 33, line 3, to strike out "$5,282,556" and insert "$5,301,806", so as to read:

Telegraph and telephone systems: Purchase, equipment, operation, and repair of military telegraph, telephone, radio, cable, and signaling systems; signal equipment and stores, heliographs, signal lanterns, flags, and other necessary instruments; wind vane, barometers, anemometers, thermometers, and other meteorological instruments; photographic and cinematographic work performed for the Army by the Signal Corps; motorcycles, motor-driven and other vehicles for technical and official purposes in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of communication or signaling systems, and supplies for their operation and maintenance; professional and scientific books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, and maps for use of the Signal Corps and in the office of the Chief Signal Officer; telephone apparatus, including rental and payment for commercial, exchange, message, trunk-line, long-distance, and leased-line telephone service at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, excepting the local telephone service for the various bureaus of the War Department in the District of Columbia, and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War; electric time service; the rental of commercial telegraph lines and equipment, and their operation at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, including payment for official individual telegraph messages transmitted over commercial lines; electrical installations and maintenance thereof at military posts, cantonments, camps, and stations of the Army, fire-control and direction apparatus, and material for Field Artillery; salaries of civilian employees, including those necessary as instructors at vocational schools; supplies, general repairs, reserve supplies, and other expenses connected with the collecting and transmitting of information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise; experimental investigation, research, purchase, and development, or improvements in apparatus, and maintenance of signaling and accessories thereto, including patent rights and other rights thereto, including machines, instruments, and other equipment for laboratory and repair purposes; lease, alteration, and repair of such buildings required for storing or guarding Signal Corps supplies, equipment, and personnel when not otherwise provided for, including the land therefor, the introduction of water, electric light and power, sewerage, grading, roads and walks, and other equipment required, $5,301,806.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Air Corps—Air Corps, Army", on page 36, line 14, after the word "airplanes", to strike out "(including radio and armament)"; in line 19, after the word "any", to strike out "expense incident to the use of" and insert "structural improvements or for the installation of any new equipment not of a removable character at"; and in line 21, after the name "California", to strike out the comma and "as an air station: Provided further, That no available appropriation shall be used upon lighter-than-air craft, other than balloons, not in condition for safe operation on June 30, 1936, or that may become in such condition prior to July 1, 1937", so as to read:

For creating, maintaining, and operating at established flying schools and balloon schools courses of instruction for officers, students, and enlisted men, including cost of equipment and supplies necessary for instruction, purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, instruments, and materials for theoretical and practical instruction; for maintenance, repair, storage, and operation of airships, war balloons, and other aerial machines, including instruments, materials, gas plants, hangars, and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith, and the establishment of landing and take-off runways; for purchase of supplies for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs in connection with aerial photography; improvement, equipment, maintenance, and operation of plants for testing and experimental work, and procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, gas, and sewerage, including maintenance, operation, and repair of such utilities at such plants; for the procurement of helium gas; for travel of officers of the Air Corps by air in connection with the administration of this appropriation, including the transportation of new aircraft from factory to first destination; salaries and wages of civilian employees as may be necessary; transportation of materials in connection with consolidation of Air Corps activities; experimental investigations and purchase and development of new types of airplanes, autogiros, and balloons, accessories thereto, and aviation engines, including plans, drawings, and specifications thereof, and the purchase of letters patent, applications for letters patent, and licenses under letters patent and applications for letters patent; for the purchase, manufacture, and construction of airplanes and balloons, including instruments and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction (airplanes and balloons), or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith; for the marking of military airways where the purchase of land is not involved; for the purchase, manufacture, and issue of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purposes; for all necessary expenses connected with the sale or disposal of surplus or obsolete aeronautical equipment, and the rental of buildings, and other facilities for the handling or storage of such equipment; for the services of not more than four consulting engineers at experimental stations of the Air Corps as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 a day for not exceeding 50 days each, and necessary traveling expenses; purchase of special apparatus and appliances, repairs, and replacements of same used in connection with special scientific medical research in the Air Corps; for maintenance and operation of such Air Corps printing plants outside of the District of Columbia as may be authorized in accordance with law; for publications, station libraries, special furniture, supplies and equipment for offices, shops, and laboratories; for special services, including the salvaging of wrecked aircraft; for settlement of claims (not exceeding $250 each) for damage to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post and approved by the Chief of Air Corps and the Secretary of War, $59,397,714: Provided, That $10,000 shall be transferred to and made available to the Bureau of Mines on July 1, 1936, for supplying helium; and not less than $41,055,925 (including $7,686,753 for the payment of obligations incurred under the contract authorization for these purposes carried in the War Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1936) shall be expended for the production or purchase of new airplanes and their equipment and accessories, of which $29,322,602 shall be available exclusively for combat airplanes, their equipment and accessories: Provided further, That in addition to the amounts herein provided for the procurement of new airplanes and for the procurement of equipment, spare parts, and accessories for airplanes, the Chief of the Air Corps, when authorized by the Secretary of War, may enter into contracts prior to July 1, 1937, for the procurement of new airplanes and for the procurement of equipment, spare parts, and accessories for airplanes to an amount not in excess of $10,669,786, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment of the cost thereof: Provided further, That no part of this or any other appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any structural improvements or for the installation of any new equipment not of a removable character at Crissy Field, Calif.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Medical Department—Army—Medical and Hospital Department", on page 37, line 18, after the word "patients", to strike out the comma and "including supernumeraries", and on page 39, line 2, after the name "Medical Department", to strike out "$1,465,198" and insert "$1,491,448", so as to read:

For the manufacture and purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants, for military posts, camps, hospitals, hospital ships and transports, for laundry work for enlisted men and Army nurses while patients in a hospital, and supplies required for mosquito destruction in and about military posts in the Canal Zone; for the purchase of veterinary supplies and hire of veterinary surgeons; for expenses of medical supply depots; for medical care and treatment of patients, not otherwise provided for, including care and subsistence in private hospitals of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, of applicants for enlistment, and of prisoners of war and other persons in military custody or confinement, when entitled thereto by law, regulation, or contract: Provided, That this shall not apply to officers and enlisted men who are treated in private hospitals or by civilian physicians while on furlough; for the proper care and treatment of epidemic and contagious diseases in the Army or at military posts or stations, including measures to prevent the spread thereof, and the payment of reasonable damages not otherwise provided for for bedding and clothing injured or destroyed in such prevention; for the care of insane Filipino soldiers in conformity with the act of Congress approved May 11, 1908 (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 198); for the pay of male and female nurses, not including the Army Nurse Corps, and of cooks and other civilians employed for the proper care of sick officers and soldiers, under such regulations fixing their number, qualifications, assignments, pay, and allowances as shall have been or shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War; for the pay of civilian physicians employed to examine physically applicants for enlistment and enlisted men and to render other professional services from time to time under proper authority; for the pay of other employees of the Medical Department; for the payment of express companies and local transfers employed directly by the Medical Department for the transportation of medical and hospital supplies, including bidders' samples and water for analysis; for supplies for use in teaching the art of cooking to the enlisted force of the Medical Department; for the supply of Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.; for advertising, laundry, and all other necessary miscellaneous expenses of the Medical Department, $1,491,448.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Corps of Engineers—Engineer service, Army", on page 40, line 14, to strike out "$518,427" and insert "$536,427", so as to read:

For the design, development, procurement, maintenance, alteration, repair, installation, storage, and issue of engineer equipment, instruments, appliances, supplies, materials, tools, and machinery required in the equipment and training of troops and in military operations, including military surveys and the Engineer School; for the operation and maintenance of the Engineer School, including (a) compensation of civilian lecturers, and (b) purchase and binding of scientific and professional books, pamphlets, papers, and periodicals; for the procurement, preparation, and reproduction of maps and similar data for military purposes; for expenses incident to the Engineer service in military operations, including military surveys, and including (a) research and development of improved methods in such operations, (b) the rental of storehouses and grounds within and outside the District of Columbia, and (c) repair and alteration of buildings; for heat, light, power, water, and communication service, not otherwise provided for; and for the compensation of employees required in these activities, $536,427.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Seacoast defenses", on page 45, line 10, after the name "United States", to strike out "$3,915,591, of which not less than $3,150,973 shall be available exclusively toward improving the harbor defenses of the Pacific coast of continental United States" and insert "$915,591", so as to read:

United States, $915,591.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 14, after the word "departments", to strike out "$3,379,511, of which not less than $3,141,780 shall be available exclusively toward defense projects in the Hawaiian department" and insert "$379,511", so as to read:

Insular departments, $379,511.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 17, to strike out "$1,223,892" and insert "$498,892", so as to read:

Panama Canal, $498,892.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 18, to change the total appropriation for seacoast defenses from "$8,518,994" to "$1,793,994."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Arms, uniforms, equipment, etc., for field service, National Guard", on page 51, line 25, after the word "That" to strike out "officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard and Organized Reserves, who, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War, volunteer to participate without pay as competitors or range officers in the national matches to be held during the fiscal year 1937, may attend such matches without pay, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, but shall be entitled to travel and subsistence allowances at the same rates as are provided for civilians who attend and participate in said matches: Provided further, That", and in line 17, after the word "by", to strike out "law" and insert "law, which expense shall be provided by the appropriation 'Promotion of rifle practice'", so as to read:

No appropriation contained in this act shall be available for any expense for or on account of a larger number of mounted units and wagon companies of the National Guard than were in existence on June 30, 1932: Provided, That officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the National Guard and Organized Reserves may be ordered to duty, with their consent, for the care, maintenance, and operation of the ranges used in the conduct of the national matches and such officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men while so engaged shall be entitled to the same pay, subsistence, and transportation as officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of corresponding grades of the Regular Army are entitled by law, which expense shall be provided by the appropriation "Promotion of rifle practice"; and after being duly mustered may be paid for the period from the date of leaving home rendezvous to date of return thereto as determined in advance, both dates inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Organized Reserves", on page 54, line 18, after the words "in all", to strike out "$8,474,195" and insert "$8,574,195", so as to read:

For pay and allowances of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps on active duty in accordance with law; mileage, reimbursement of actual traveling expenses, or per-diem allowances in lieu thereof, as authorized by law: Provided, That the mileage allowance to members of the Officers' Reserve Corps when called into active service for training for 15 days or less shall not exceed 4 cents per mile; pay, transportation, subsistence, clothing, and medical and hospital treatment of members of the Enlisted Reserve Corps; conducting correspondence or extension courses for instruction of members of the Reserve Corps, including necessary supplies, procurement of maps and textbooks, and transportation and traveling expenses of employees; purchase of training manuals, including Government publications and blank forms, subscriptions to magazines and periodicals of a professional or technical nature; establishment, maintenance, and operation of divisional and regimental headquarters and of camps for training of the Organized Reserves; for miscellaneous expenses incident to the administration of the Organized Reserves, including the maintenance and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and purchase of 15 such vehicles; for the actual and necessary expenses, or per diem in lieu thereof, at rates authorized by law, incurred by officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army traveling on duty in connection with the Organized Reserves, and for travel of dependents, and packing and transportation of baggage of such personnel; for expenses incident to the use, including upkeep and depreciation costs, of supplies, equipment, and matériel furnished in accordance with law from stocks under the control of the War Department, except that not to exceed $785,775 of this appropriation shall be available for expenditure by the Chief of the Air Corps for the production and purchase of new airplanes and their equipment, spare parts, and accessories; for transportation of baggage, including packing and crating, of Reserve officers ordered to active duty for not less than 6 months; for the medical and hospital treatment of members of the Officers' Reserve Corps and of the Enlisted Reserve Corps, who suffer personal injury or contract disease in line of duty, as provided by the act of April 26, 1928 (U. S. C., title 10, secs. 451, 455), and for such other purposes in connection therewith as are authorized by the said act, including pay and allowances, subsistence, transportation, and burial expenses; in all, $8,574,195; and no part of such total sum shall be available for any expense incident to giving flight training to any officer of the Officers' Reserve Corps unless he shall be found physically and professionally qualified to perform aviation service as an aviation pilot, by such agency as the Secretary of War may designate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Citizens' military training—Reserve Officers' Training Corps", on page 59, line 8, after the words "station wagons", to strike out "$4,067,996" and insert "$4,585,846", so as to read:

For the procurement, maintenance, and issue, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of War, to institutions at which one or more units of Reserve Officers' Training Corps are maintained, of such public animals, means of transportation, supplies, tentage, equipment, and uniforms as he may deem necessary, including cleaning and laundering of uniforms and clothing at camps; and to forage, at the expense of the United States, public animals so issued, and to pay commutation in lieu of uniforms at a rate to be fixed annually by the Secretary of War; for transporting said animals and other authorized supplies and equipment from place of issue to the several institutions and training camps and return of same to place of issue when necessary; for purchase of training manuals, including Government publications and blank forms; for the establishment and maintenance of camps for the further practical instruction of the members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and for transporting members of such corps to and from such camps, and to subsist them while traveling to and from such camps and while remaining therein so far as appropriations will permit, or, in lieu of transporting them to and from such camps and subsisting them while en route, to pay them travel allowance at the rate of 5 cents per mile for the distance by the shortest usually traveled route from the places from which they are authorized to proceed to the camp and for the return travel thereto, and to pay the return travel pay in advance of the actual performance of the travel; for expenses incident to the use, including upkeep and depreciation costs, of supplies, equipment, and matériel furnished in accordance with law from stocks under the control of the War Department; for pay for students attending advanced camps at the rate prescribed for soldiers of the seventh grade of the Regular Army; for the payment of commutation of subsistence to members of the senior division of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps, at a rate not exceeding the cost of the garrison ration prescribed for the Army, as authorized in the act approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act approved June 4, 1920 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 387); for medical and hospital treatment until return to their homes and further medical treatment after arrival at their homes, subsistence during hospitalization and until furnished transportation to their homes, and transportation when fit for travel to their homes of members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps who suffer personal injury or contract disease in line of duty while en route to or from and while at camps of instruction under the provisions of section 47a of the National Defense Act approved June 3, 1916 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 441), as amended; and for the cost of preparation and transportation to their homes and burial expenses of the remains of members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps who die while attending camps of instruction as provided in the act approved April 26, 1923 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 455); for mileage, traveling expenses, or transportation, for transportation of dependents, and for packing and transportation of baggage, as authorized by law, for officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Regular Army traveling on duty pertaining to or on detail to or relief from duty with the Reserve Officers' Training Corps; for the purchase, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor vehicles, including station wagons, $4,585,846; of which $400,000 shall be available immediately:

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the increase in line 8, page 59.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the item referred to by the Senator from New York relates to citizens' military training in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. Provision is made for an increase in the number of trainees, but not to the number for which we have provided in several previous years. We had very convincing testimony from the various organizations, largely of citizens—this being a matter having to do with the citizen soldiery—and decided that it was wise to make the addition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 60, line 6, after the words "Air Corps", to strike out "Medical Corps", so as to read:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be available for any expense on account of any student in Air Corps, Dental Corps, or Veterinary units not a member of such units on May 5, 1932, but such stoppage of further enrollments shall not interfere with the maintenance of existing units.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill in regard to the amendment on page 60, line 6, where "Medical Corps" is stricken out. The House put in a provision reading:

Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this act shall be available for any expense on account of any student in Air Corps, Medical Corps, Dental Corps—

And so forth.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to permit the organization of the R. O. T. C. in medical schools. There was such an arrangement heretofore, but it was eliminated. Abundant evidence was presented to the committee that some of the large medical schools might just as profitably and as well have R. O. T. C. organizations as in the case of academic institutions. I will add my own experience if I may.

During the war I organized a base hospital unit, and expected to go with it to Europe, when it was decided by the Council of National Defense that the medical schools should operate actively, and that the deans should be sent back to those schools. That decision was reached because of the experience of England, which put all its doctors and medical students in the army at the beginning of the war, and by the time the war was ended so many of them had been killed that practically all the medical service of England was being performed by medical men from the United States. Take, also, the experience of the National Guard: In my own State, for example, we have a whole medical regiment, officered by medical men, and many of the members of that regiment are medical students. So, in view of the fact that we are continuing the R. O. T. C.'s, and not appropriating more money, we are taking off the limitation and permitting the establishment of some R. O. T. C. units in medical colleges.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, referring to the increase in appropriation on line 8, page 59, undoubtedly a portion of that increase is to go for training the Medical Corps.

Mr. COPELAND. It was found by the testimony of the War Department that there were many more applications from colleges than could be taken care of; and we thought it wise, as we had done in some years past, to make provision for carrying on that activity.

I may say, frankly, so far as I am concerned, that I am much more interested in the development of what might be called the citizen soldier than in the development of the professional soldier. It is perfectly amazing, as the Senator will see if he will study the bill, how few additions were made by the Senate committee. Indeed, I might say the opposite occurred on the military side; reductions were made; and the only increases of any consequence to be found in the bill are in the direction of the care of the citizen soldier.

This matter is thoroughly understood by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who is better qualified than am I to answer questions; but I hope the Senator from North Dakota is satisfied.

Mr. FRAZIER. Am I to understand, from the Senator's statement in regard to being primarily interested in citizen soldiers, that he represents the view of the committee in that statement?

Mr. COPELAND. I think so.

Mr. FRAZIER. In other words, the Appropriations Committee and the Military Affairs Committee are more interested in the citizen soldier—that is, in making all the citizens soldiers, or as many as possible—than in the Regular Army?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, I should not say that. I do not think there is any thought on the part of the committee that we wish to regiment the whole United States, by any means; but the Senator knows there are advantages in this training beyond simply getting ready to carry a gun and go and kill somebody. There are the setting-up exercises, for example.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, well, that is all bunk.

Mr. COPELAND. Wait just a moment. It may be "all bunk" to the Senator, but it is not "all bunk" to me. Furthermore, as regards the particular item under discussion, the American Medical Association and other medical organizations have urged that it be adopted.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, of course, we may have setting-up exercises without being members of the Army. The same thing is true of compulsory military training in the schools. All kinds of gymnastic training and physical exercises may be had in the schools without military training. So far as the benefit of that is concerned, it is a very small argument and a poor argument.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me use another argument, then, which will prevail with the Senator. He has set aside the setting-up exercises.

In every State where there are colleges there are many poor boys who have difficulty in paying their way. The pittance they receive for their training, which I think is $12 a month for the 8 months of the college year, amounts to a total of about $100. It is worth something, is it not, to make it possible for some of these young men to stay in school who could not otherwise do so? Even the contribution of this small amount of money may make the difference between having an education and not having an education.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, of course $12 a month helps some boys to attend school; but what I object to is compelling them to take military training in order to get the $12 a month.

Mr. COPELAND. Let us see about that. Whether or not a man is compelled to take military training depends, not upon the Government, not upon this bill, not upon what Congress does, but upon what the individual college determines.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, in a recent case decided in the courts of California, where some students objected to taking compulsory military training, the court decided, as stated in its opinion, that it was the Congress that was responsible for compulsory military training.

Mr. COPELAND. Even a court might be mistaken; but the Senator knows that there are schools—in fact, I attended one myself—where chapel attendance is compulsory. I had to go to chapel or I could not stay in school.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator probably ought to go some more. [Laughter.]

Mr. COPELAND. If the individual college decides that chapel attendance and attendance upon the R. O. T. C. are both compulsory—and probably the case referred to by the Senator was a case like that—the court would properly say, "That is the rule of the college. If you do not want to go to that college, go to some other college."

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator's argument about the assistance given to students in colleges and universities to take military training is on a par with a copy of a letter I received from North Dakota just a day or two ago. A farm organization in that State adopted a resolution protesting against the action of the F. E. R. A. officials of North Dakota and sent me a copy of a letter, signed by the executive secretary, F. E. R. A., for North Dakota. This purports to be a copy of the original letter, and I think undoubtedly it is correct. It is directed to executive secretaries of the county welfare boards, and starts out:

Greetings—

A very legal sounding introduction, at least.

The letter says:

We are in receipt of a letter from Colonel Madison, headquarters sixth recruiting division of Minneapolis, Minn., in which he advises us that during the next 2 months the Army is making an intensive effort to secure the additional soldiers authorized by a recent act of Congress. Two new recruiting stations have been added in our State—and will be in operation for the next 2 months, and it is thought that the welfare offices are in a position to help him in this matter, due to the close touch had by your county welfare secretaries with the class of young men who are eligible for the Army. The Army can take no one with dependents, and you probably know of some young men whose condition would be improved by enlisting in the Army.

That is North Dakota—

This official had the same idea of the Army as has the Senator from New York, that it improves the health of the young men, and so forth.

Mr. COPELAND. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. FRAZIER. The date is February 28, 1936.

Proceeding with the letter:

To be eligible, these men must be between the ages of 18 and 35, in good health, single, without dependents, without police record, able to secure certificates of good character from reputable citizens of their communities, and by test show that they have the equivalent of an eighth-grade education. It occurred to me that you may have men in your county who are eligible for the Army who do not have dependents, so that they are not eligible for the Civilian Conservation Corps. Several young men have written to this office stating they are single with no dependents and are very anxious to get on Work Progress Administration work or something that would enable them to make enough money to pay their board, room, and clothes. Of course young men of this kind cannot be certified to Works Progress Administration nor Rural Resettlement, and it does not seem that men of this kind should be placed on relief and be a burden to the welfare board. As a matter of fact, it would seem to me that these men, if they so desired, could go out and work for their board and room and clothes on some farm.

Of course, we can hardly picture a young man from the city who never has worked on a farm going out to work on a farm for his board and room.

The letter continues:

However, they are not inclined to do this, and it strikes me that some of them would make good soldiers, and probably their going in the Army would make jobs for others who are on relief and thus relieve the relief situation to some extent.

Sergt. Oliver M. Strand is in charge of recruiting stations at Fargo, and he would be the person for you to write to concerning any prospective enlistees for the United States Army. It seems to me that cooperating with Colonel Madison in his effort to select additional soldiers would be a benefit to the relief situation in your counties.

The letter, as I have said, is signed by the executive secretary of the F. E. R. A. for North Dakota.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, that strikes me as a very good letter. What the Senator is talking about is a different subject from what we were discussing a little while ago. The letter refers to the Army, does it not?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I may say that, as the Senator knows, in the organization of the Army there are various corps areas, and it is rather interesting that in certain corps areas there are more applicants for enlistment in the Army than in other corps areas. There is a desire that citizens may get whatever employment there is and whatever advantages there may be, and there is a desire to have all the corps areas represented. I did not notice the place from which the letter was written.

Mr. FRAZIER. It was written from Bismarck, N. Dak.

Mr. COPELAND. In the Senator's section of the country perhaps these men are now engaged in farming or other activities and are not interested in the Army, but I thought the gentleman made a very good presentation when he said that it might very well be that if there are unemployed farm hands in that section, if some of the men who need employment should go into the Army it would leave jobs for others. I think that is a very good argument.

Mr. FRAZIER. I was interested to discover whether the F. E. R. A. headquarters in Washington were responsible for a letter of this kind, or whether it was their policy that anyone eligible for the Army must either join the Army or starve. Mr. Hopkins was not in when I attempted to get information about the matter, but I got in touch with one of his assistants and informed him of the purport of the letter. He said, "No; we are not responsible for it. This is the first I have heard of it." I was glad to have that statement, because I did not think they would take the attitude that anyone must either join the Army or starve to death.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator knew that before he made the inquiry.

Mr. FRAZIER. The statement came from one of their officials.

Mr. COPELAND. There is absolutely no relationship between the F. E. R. A., or any other alphabetical agency, and the bill we are now discussing.

Mr. FRAZIER. This was the opinion of a local official; but he entertains very much the opinion indicated by the Senator from New York in his argument that $12 a month paid to students who take military courses in colleges or high schools will be of benefit, and will enable them to go to school. If a young man enlists in the Army, of course, it gives him a meal ticket.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 60, line 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Citizens' military training camps", on page 62, line 9, after the words "in all", to strike out "$2,000,000" and insert "$2,275,000", so as to read:

For furnishing, at the expense of the United States, to warrant officers, enlisted men, and civilians attending training camps maintained under the provisions of section 47d of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 442), uniforms, including altering, fitting, washing, and cleaning when necessary, or subsistence allowances and transportation, or transportation allowances, as prescribed in said section 47d, as amended; for such expenditures as are authorized by said section 47d as may be necessary for the establishment and maintenance of said camps, including recruiting and advertising therefor, and the cost of maintenance, repair, and operation of passenger-carrying vehicles; for expenses incident to the use, including upkeep and depreciation costs, of supplies, equipment, and matériel furnished in accordance with law from stocks under the control of the War Department; for gymnasium and athletic supplies (not exceeding $20,000); for mileage, reimbursement of travel expenses, or allowance in lieu thereof as authorized by law, for officers of the Regular Army and Organized Reserves, and for the travel expenses of enlisted men of the Regular Army, traveling on duty in connection with citizens' military training camps; for purchase of training manuals, including Government publications and blank forms; for medical and hospital treatment, subsistence, and transportation, in case of injury or disease contracted in line of duty, of members of the citizens' military training camps and for transportation and burial of remains of any such members who die while undergoing training or hospital treatment as provided in the act of April 26, 1928 (U. S. C., title 10, secs. 454, 455); in all, $2,275,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Board for Promotion of Rifle Practice, Army", on page 64, line 2, after the name "Secretary of War", to strike out "$545,726" and insert "$645,726", so as to read:

Promotion of rifle practice: For construction, equipment, and maintenance of rifle ranges, the instruction of citizens in marksmanship, and promotion of practice in the use of rifled arms; for arms, ammunition, targets, and other accessories for target practice, for issue and sale in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice and approved by the Secretary of War; for clerical services, including not exceeding $25,000 in the District of Columbia; for procurement of materials, supplies, trophies, prizes, badges, and services, as authorized in section 113, act of June 3, 1916, and in War Department Appropriation Act of June 7, 1924; for the conduct of the national matches, including incidental travel, and for maintenance of the National Board for the Promotion of Rifle Practice, including not exceeding $7,500 for its incidental expenses as authorized by act of May 28, 1928; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $645,726.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—Nonmilitary activities of the War Department—Quartermaster Corps—Cemeterial expenses", on page 64, line 24, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$6,000" and insert "$177,000, of which $171,000 shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of War "for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of such suitable lands in the vicinity of the city of Baltimore, Md., as in his judgment are required for enlargement of existing national cemetery facilities, and shall remain available until expended", and on page 66 line 8, after the name "Rock Island", to strike out "$814,990" and insert "$985,990", so as to read:

For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for and pay of superintendents and the superintendent at Mexico City, and other employees; purchase of land (not to exceed $177,000, of which $171,000 shall be available for expenditure by the Secretary of War for the acquisition, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of such suitable lands in the vicinity of the city of Baltimore, Md., as in his judgment are required for enlargement of existing national cemetery facilities, and shall remain available until expended); purchase of tools and materials; purchase, including exchange, of one motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicle; and for the repair, maintenance, and operation of motor vehicles; care and maintenance of the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, chapel, and grounds in the Arlington National Cemetery; repair to roadways but not to more than a single approach road to any national cemetery constructed under special act of Congress; headstones for unmarked graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines under the acts approved March 3, 1873 (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 279), February 3, 1879 (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 280), March 9, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 56), March 14, 1914 (38 Stat., p. 768), and February 26, 1929 (U. S. C., title 24, sec. 280a), and civilians interred in post cemeteries; recovery of bodies and disposition of remains of military personnel and civilian employees of the Army under act approved March 9, 1928 (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 916); not to exceed $734 for repairs and preservation of monuments, tablets, roads, fences, and so forth, made and constructed by the United States in Cuba and China to mark the places where American soldiers fell; care, protection, and maintenance of the Confederate Mound in Oakwood Cemetery at Chicago, the Confederate Stockade Cemetery at Johnstons Island, the Confederate burial plats owned by the United States in Confederate Cemetery at North Alton, the Confederate Cemetery, Camp Chase, at Columbus, the Confederate Cemetery at Point Lookout, and the Confederate Cemetery at Rock Island, $985,990.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Corps of Engineers—Rivers and harbors", on page 69, line 23, after the words "by law", to strike out "$138,677,899" and insert "$188,677,899", so as to read:

To be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; for survey of northern and northwestern lakes and other boundary and connecting waters as heretofore authorized, including the preparation, correction, printing, and issuing of charts and bulletins and the investigation of lake levels; for prevention of obstructive and injurious deposits within the harbor and adjacent waters of New York City; for expenses of the California

Débris Commission in carrying on the work authorized by the act approved March 1, 1893 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 661); for removing sunken vessels or craft obstructing or endangering navigation as authorized by law; for operating and maintaining, keeping in repair, and continuing in use without interruption any lock, canal (except the Panama Canal), canalized river, or other public works for the use and benefit of navigation belonging to the United States; for payment annually of tuition fees of not to exceed 35 student officers of the Corps of Engineers at civil technical institutions under the provisions of section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 535); for examinations, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors; and for printing, including illustrations, as may be authorized by the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives, either during a recess or session of Congress, of surveys under House Document No. 308, Sixty-ninth Congress, first session, and section 10 of the Flood Control Act, approved May 15, 1928 (U. S. C., title 33, sec. 702j), and such surveys as may be printed during a recess of Congress shall be printed, with illustrations, as documents of the next succeeding session of Congress, and for the purchase of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and motor boats, for official use, not to exceed $146,050: Provided, That no funds shall be expended for any preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate not authorized by law, $188,677,899.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer to change those figures.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he will not allow us to complete the committee amendments? I shall then interpose no objection whatever to reopening the question as to the figures.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not want to complicate the matter. I expect to ask that $20,000,000 be added to the figure in this amendment. If I agree to this figure now, there might be a question whether we could make it larger.

Mr. COPELAND. So far as I can speak for the committee and the Senate, if the Senator will present his amendment, including the increase in the figures, it will not be opposed.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment go over for the time being.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the committee amendment may be adopted now, I may say that I will be in full accord with the Senator in bringing his amendment before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. We can come back to this amendment. If we adopt the amendment now, it may complicate the situation when I offer the amendment I propose to offer. I suggest that we let the committee amendment go over.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment of the committee to which the Senator from Florida desires to offer an amendment go over, because he might not be able to have the vote reconsidered if it were agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, and the clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was, under the subhead "United States Soldiers' Home", on page 71, line 17, after the word "Fund", to insert "the accounts for which to be audited and settled as the Secretary of War shall direct", so as to read:

For maintenance and operation of the United States Soldiers' Home, including maintenance, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled freight- and passenger-carrying vehicles, to be paid from the Soldiers' Home Permanent Fund, the accounts for which to be audited and settled as the Secretary of War shall direct, $799,105.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, after line 8, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 4. That as to contracts or subcontracts in excess of $10,000, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the payment of a profit in excess of 10 percent to any contractor or subcontractor for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete aircraft or ordnance material, or any portion thereof.

Mr. O'MAHOONEY. Mr. President, by authority of the committee I desire to offer an amendment to come in on page 76, line 8.

Mr. NORRIS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Was the committee amendment on page 76 agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask that the Senator from Wyoming withhold his amendment until the committee amendment on page 76 may be acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 76 to strike out lines 9 to 14.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of this amendment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the language on page 76 proposed to be stricken out was placed in the bill on the floor of the House. It was considered in the Senate committee, and the language was not agreed to. It reads:

Sec. 4. That as to contracts or subcontracts in excess of $10,000, no appropriation contained in this act shall be available for the payment of a profit in excess of 10 percent to any contractor or subcontractor for the construction and/or manufacture of any complete aircraft or ordnance material, or any portion thereof.

The Secretary of War, the Chief of the Air Corps, the Chief of Staff of the Army, and other officers of the War Department, as well as civilian witnesses, pointed out that if the War Department calls for bids on 10 airplanes, with each bid there must be presented a finished airplane. A bid will not be received until the War Department actually has an airplane to see and to study.

It will be realized that the successful bidder may be required, then, by reason of negotiations, to change his airplane. It may be impossible to modify the model which he has presented, and he may have to bring forward another plane made in accordance with the recommendations of the War Department. If he is not permitted to have in excess of 10 percent profit he cannot recoup himself for the losses which he will incur by reason of his efforts to bid. So it became very plain to the committee that it would not be in the public interest to have in the law this particular provision relating to airplanes. It might be proper with reference to something else, but where it is necessary to know what sort of plane the Department is to receive, it would actually have to see the plane, have a plane manufactured. Therefore it seemed wise to strike out the language.

Once more I call attention to the fact that this language was inserted on the floor in the House, and was never considered by the House committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, as I understand, if this amendment shall be agreed to, it will leave the bids wide open, and the manufacturers may make as much as they can.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think that is true.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is no limitation, at least.

Mr. COPELAND. There are limitations.

Mr. FRAZIER. What are they?

Mr. COPELAND. There are limitations placed by law on the functions of the War Department. I do not think the Senator can find evidence of any abuse in the War Department in this particular.

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh—

Mr. COPELAND. I am not going to discuss the general question; I am limiting the discussion to airplanes. So far as airplanes are concerned, if we are to build up aviation, and have the fleet of airplanes in this country which we should have, we must encourage the manufacturers. Most of the airplane concerns are operating on a shoestring, anyway. If the Senator will look over the earnings of the airplane manufacturers he will be surprised to find how very small their profits are.

Mr. FRAZIER. What is the cost of the average airplane which the Government buys for the Army or the Navy?

Mr. COPELAND. I do not believe I can answer that question.

Mr. FRAZIER. The cost is sufficiently high so that a 10-percent profit would be a fairly good profit, would it not?

Mr. COPELAND. I suppose if a manufacturing concern built five airplanes and had one adopted, it probably would make two or three thousand dollars. It would not make much.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course it is not a one-plane proposition. A number of planes undoubtedly would be built at one time by one company; and it seems to me that a 10-percent profit would be sufficient.

Mr. COPELAND. I have presented the argument. That is all I can say about the subject. The language in question was not approved by the committee of the House. It was disapproved by our committee. There are many pages of testimony which I suggest that the Senator from North Dakota read. From the argument and testimony contained in the hearings, it is quite conclusive that we ought not to include this language in the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Undoubtedly companies making airplanes or other paraphernalia for the War Department would like to make more than 10-percent profit.

Mr. COPELAND. There was not a representative of an airplane concern before the committee.

Mr. FRAZIER. The provision does not refer to airplanes only, as I understand, but refers to other things.

Mr. COPELAND. No; it relates only to airplanes.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I am somewhat confused as to one matter, and have been unable to find any member of the Appropriations Committee who can explain it.

There appears on page 4 of the report on the bill submitted by the committee an item of $100,000.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator pardon me a moment? May we have the other amendment disposed of? Then I shall be glad to reply to the Senator's question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment on page 76, to strike out lines 9 to 14?

Mr. FRAZIER. I object. It seems to me there ought to be a roll call on so important a question.

If the language in question is not placed in the bill, it will mean that bids for aircraft, for ordnance material, or any portion thereof, will be let without regard to the amount of profit that may be made. Where airplanes are made by the thousands, it seems to me that 10 percent is a big profit, and there ought to be a limit.

As I understand, the House committee put this provision in the bill, and it seems to me it ought to stay in the bill. If it is stricken out in the Senate, I suppose it will go to conference. I do not know what will be done with it in conference. I should like to see the Senate go on record with regard to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been requested. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota perhaps is laboring under a delusion so far as this 10 percent plus is concerned. I think we all recollect the impositions made upon the Government during the war by the use of the cost-plus method. For my part, I believe that if the responsible authorities of the War Department are at all intelligent they will get better prices through competitive bidding than if they were free to make cost-plus contracts with anyone who might desire to make such bids. There is no way of determining in advance what the cost is going to be; and, for my part, as a buyer, I should rather have legitimate competition than to enter into a contract with anybody on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. FRAZIER. If I correctly understand the language of the provision, Mr. President, it does not limit competition at all. The only limitation is that the profit shall not be in excess of 10 percent.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, no; the Senator is wrong about that. There are other provisions of law that require competition.

Let me point out one other matter: This provision applies not alone to the finished airplane but to every part of it. The Secretary of War pointed out to us that a great many articles which the Department buys are taken from the shelf, so to speak; that is, they are articles which are in stock; they may be motors or other things which are in stock, and perhaps have been on the shelves for a long time. The Department pointed out that it would be impossible to determine whether there was more than a 10-percent profit in connection with such materials. However, they gave the committee abundant proof—proof satisfactory to the committee—that the greatest care is exercised in the competitive features of bidding and in the selection of material. It was pointed out to the committee, as the Senator from Michigan said, that the alternative would be to go back to the cost-plus procedure, which would be infinitely more expensive than the proposed method.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the limitation of profit to 10 percent is made in case of bids in excess of $10,000. So, if a manufacturer of parts makes a bid in excess of $10,000, or any other manufacturer makes a bid of over $10,000, under this provision he would be limited to a profit of not to exceed 10 percent. If the amendment is stricken out, the sky is the limit.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. DUFFY. I know of one instance in my State where there was a limitation of profit as to machinery or some parts of machinery being made for a naval vessel; and I have been informed that the company doing the work are no longer interested in trying to get any Government business, because so many items enter into the execution of a contract that they often suffer losses. They felt that there ought to be some way of balancing up their losses. They often run into great losses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee, on page 76, to strike out lines 9 to 14. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. FRAZIER. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President—

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I was in the course of making an inquiry of the Senator from New York when I was interrupted in order to have action completed on the pending amendment. I fear I have some confusion in my mind as to what is meant, on page 4 of the committee report, where it says:

Organized Reserves: Officers' Reserve Corps, $100,000.

That appears to be an amount added by the Appropriations Committee. Is that correct?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. COUZENS. On February 18 I received a telegram from the adjutant general of the State of Michigan, in which he said:

Pending War Department appropriation bill as passed by House needs $100,000 to be added by Senate to national-matches allotment to remedy conditions under the preceding appropriation act.

I notice that is referred to in the paragraph above the $100,000, and I wondered whether there was any connection.

Mr. COPELAND. No; there is no connection. The preceding language, which the Senate has already adopted, makes it possible for men to be assigned from the National Guard, as the writer of the telegram suggested to the Senator, and that their expenses shall be paid if they are ordered to the place; and provision is made by the language to take care of the very proposal suggested by the gentleman from Michigan who sent the telegram.

Mr. COUZENS. In other words, while no additional appropriation is made, the latitude which is given the War Department is adequate to cover the field?

Mr. COPELAND. That is true.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 76, line 8, at the end of the section, it is proposed to strike out the period and to insert a colon and add the following:

Provided, That the commanding officer of the post at which any such exchange is situated shall certify on the monthly report of the post-exchange council that such exchange was, during the period covered by such report, operated in compliance with this section.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the principle of this amendment was agreed to by the committee, and the amendment is offered in this manner merely because at the time the committee completed its work on the bill the exact language the committee desired to use had not been selected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the amendment is satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. COUZENS. I should like to know what the amendment is intended to accomplish.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Section 3 of the bill is a restriction upon the operation of post exchanges and subexchanges, designed to prevent them from entering into unnecessary competition with local merchants. The post exchange is operated for the sole benefit of members of the Army or those who are associated with the military service. There has been a tendency in some places to violate that general purpose, and the right which has been recognized by Congress for the maintenance of these posts has in some cases been abused. The amendment is merely intended to prevent that abuse.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. If this amendment shall be adopted, will the posts referred to be prohibited from selling to civilians and others not in the posts?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The law as it now stands, Mr. President, provides that no part of any appropriation shall be used to pay any expense in connection with the operation of these exchanges, save and except for real assistance and convenience to military personnel and civilians employed or serving at military posts, and to retired enlisted naval personnel in supplying them with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government. The effect of the amendment which is proposed is merely to provide that the commander at each post shall certify each month that the exchanges are operated in accordance with that law. It adds nothing new.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there additional committee amendments?

Mr. NORRIS, Mr. ROBINSON, and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the consideration of committee amendments has been completed.

Mr. COPELAND. I have one or two amendments which I was asked to present.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well, I have no intention of interfering with the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. I send forward an amendment for which an appropriation has already been provided or approved by the Senate, but this language is necessary in order to perfect the amendment and have it conform to law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 10, line 11, after the figures "$34,619,252", it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That on and after July 1, 1936, there shall be authorized 1,183 officers of the Medical Corps and 258 officers of the Dental Corps, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 30, 1922 (42 Stat. 721), and the authorized commissioned strength of the Regular Army is hereby increased by 300 in order to provide for the increase herein authorized in the number of officers in the Medical and Dental Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

Mr. COUZENS. Do I understand correctly that the amendment increases the number of officers in the Medical and Dental Corps in proportion to the increase in other branches of the Army?

Mr. COPELAND. The committee acceded to the desire of the Senator from Michigan that in making provision for an increase in the Army there should be provision for the necessary doctors and dentists. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I have one more amendment which I was asked by the committee to present to the Senate without any particular recommendation, but in order that the Senate might be advised as to the request. I wish Senators would give heed to the proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, line 9, after the word "commission", it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That the act approved August 30, 1935, Public, No. 403, Seventy-fourth Congress, shall not apply to contracts entered into to meet the emergencies of storm, flood, or accident, dangerous to navigation, from funds involving appropriations for rivers, harbors, or flood control: Provided further, That this appropriation shall be available for the continued employment of persons hitherto employed without regard to the civil-service laws on projects started with funds allotted from appropriations made by the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933, the Emergency Appropriation Act of June 19, 1934, and the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of April 8, 1935.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, Public Act 403, referred to in the proposed amendment, undertakes to maintain the standards as determined by the Department of Labor of those who work on projects, and that sort of thing. I take it that the purpose of the amendment is to make it possible to continue employment upon relief projects in river and harbor activities without regard to the civil-service law or the provisions of the particular act, Public, No. 403.

So far as I am concerned, I have no recommendation to make, and I do not think the committee has. I leave the question to the determination of the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think the amendment ought to be rejected. It has back of it an insidious sort of purpose which I do not like. I never heard it discussed in the committee at all. The idea appears to be to limit the authority and power of the President under the act of 1935 by imposing some new restrictions as to the use of the funds therein provided. That act is temporary; it will expire in 1937. It is being executed by the President in accordance with its terms. He appreciates the responsibility that rests upon him under that act, and now to come in, at this late day, with an effort to restrict him in the use of these funds when he is vested with absolute authority and also with full discretion in their use is, I think, a great mistake. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have no further amendments to offer on behalf of the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, is there not a committee amendment which has been passed over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that there was an amendment passed over on page 69.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the agreement to that amendment depends on other amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, line 23, after the word "law", it is proposed to strike out "$138,677,899" and insert "$188,677,899."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, that amendment was passed over to await action of the Senate on individual amendments offered by Senators.

Mr. COPELAND. I take it that the clerk read the amendment merely for the information of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see any reason why that amendment should be considered first. I have an amendment which I desire to offer and to which I think there is no objection whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Nebraska will present his amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 71, after line 11, it is proposed to insert the following:

Flood control, Missouri River, Nebr.: For maintenance, repairs, and revetment work in the flood-control work now in progress at or near the town of Niobrara, Nebr., to be immediately available, $130,000.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if the amendment has been recommended by the Budget Bureau and approved by the Department?

Mr. NORRIS. It has been approved, and the work is in progress now. As a matter of fact—

Mr. COUZENS. It is subject to a point of order, is it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no; it is not subject to a point of order, as I understand. I received the exact figures this morning from the Chief of Engineers, who says it will take the amount proposed to complete the project. The work ought not to be suspended, because it is partially completed, and because great danger from flood may arise. The amount proposed is merely sufficient to complete a project on which the engineers are now working.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is this a flood-control project authorized by act of Congress?

Mr. NORRIS. I so understand. The Chief of Engineers told me so this morning over the telephone. He also said that $175,000—I think that is the amount—has already been expended upon the work and that it will take $130,000 more.

I will state the reason why the amendment ought to go in the pending bill. I am personally acquainted with the location of Niobrara, where this work is being done; I myself have visited it. It is in a bend of the Missouri River, where a dangerous condition has existed for several years. If a heavy flood should happen in the Missouri River at that point, it would wipe the city of Niobrara off the map. The river has already washed away its banks very close to the city itself, and it is now on the particular bottom where the city is located. The engineers are working on it, and they want to get the work finished if they can before the danger arises of a summer flood in the Missouri River. I have explained the amendment to the Senator in charge of the bill, and he has no objection to it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, assuming that this project is authorized, as I understand it is, so far as I am concerned I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer an amendment and ask the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to it. The amendment which I am about to propose authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to convey to the city of Little Rock certain real estate, accurately described in the amendment, for use in connection with the municipal airport there.

The property was acquired by the War Department during the World War. Since the establishment of the airport it has been used in connection with the landing field and the buildings. The city finds it necessary materially to improve its airport there, and therefore this amendment is presented. The amendment imposes five conditions, which I will state:

First. That the property shall be used only for public purposes;

Second. That in case of national emergency the War Department may take over the entire airport and operate it without rental or other charge to the United States Government;

Third. That the municipality shall at all times furnish free use of the City of Little Rock Municipal Airport to all Army and Navy aircraft, together with hangars and necessary service facilities;

Fourth. That a prior right to the use of the airport shall be granted to the Arkansas National Guard in training its air squadron; and Fifth. The requirement is made that the municipality shall expend annually in new and additional improvements to the airport an amount equal to the amount now paid to the United States Government as rental.

The city now rents that portion of the airport and pays an annual rental which I think is $1,200 a year. The amendment authorizes the conveyance of the land to the city to the end that the airport may be properly and effectively improved and maintained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 37, after line 6, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to convey to the city of Little Rock, Ark., a municipal corporation of the State of Arkansas, the land described in section 2 hereof, subject to the following conditions:

(1) Said property shall be at all times utilized only by the municipality for public purposes.

(2) In time of national emergency, upon request of the Secretary of War, the municipality shall turn over complete control and operation of the entire Little Rock Municipal Airport and the property thereon, without rental or other charge, to the United States of America, for such use and for such length of time as the emergency shall require, in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

(3) That the said municipality shall at all times furnish free use of the said Little Rock Municipal Airport to all Army and Navy aircraft, together with such hangar and necessary service facilities as are available at said airport.

(4) That the said municipality shall furnish free use of the airport field and the squadron hangar now located thereon to the One Hundred and Fifty-fourth Observation Squadron, Arkansas National Guard, or its successor as designated by the War Department, and that the said squadron during periods of intensive training under direction of the War Department, shall have right-of-way or priority in the use of the said field, and that the municipality shall continue to extend to the squadron the same free services of said field as are now extended to the squadron, including free use of the lighting system for night flights.

(5) The municipality shall annually expend in new and additional improvements to the airport an amount equal to the amount now paid the United States of America as rental.

SEC. 2. The land authorized to be conveyed by the Secretary of War under section 1 hereof is described as follows:

Beginning at an iron pin marking the southwest corner of the east half of the northeast quarter (E $\frac{1}{2}$ NE $\frac{1}{4}$), section 12, township 1 north, range 12 west of the fifth principal meridian; thence

(1) South eighty-four degrees forty-five minutes west (S. 84°45' W.), along the east and west half section line of said section, said line also being the center line of Seventeenth Street, a distance of one thousand two hundred forty-one and sixty-five hundredths feet (1,241.65'), to a point in the easterly right-of-way line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad; thence

(2) North thirty-four degrees fifty-six minutes west (N. 34°56' W.), along said right-of-way line, a distance of one thousand five hundred forty-eight and seventy-eight hundredths feet (1,548.78'), to a point in the center line of Thirteenth Street; thence

Along the center line of Thirteenth Street, the following three (3) courses:

(3) North eighty-four degrees forty-six minutes east (N. 84°46' E.), a distance of nine hundred forty-one and four hundredths feet (941.04') to a point;

(4) South eighty-four degrees twenty-one minutes east (S. 84°21' E.), a distance of one hundred seventy-nine and no hundredths feet (179.00') to a point;

(5) North eighty-four degrees fifty-four minutes east (N. 84°54' E.), a distance of eight hundred eighty-four and thirty hundredths feet (884.30') to a point in the center line of the Harrington Avenue, said center line also being the west line of the east half of the northeast quarter of said section 12; thence

(6) North five degrees thirty-six minutes west (N. 5°36' W.) along said center line, a distance of one thousand fifty-eight and eighty hundredths feet (1,058.80') to a point; said point being two hundred eighty-six and no hundredths (286.00') from a stone monument marking the northwest corner of the east half of the northeast quarter of said section 12; thence

(7) North thirty-seven degrees thirty-five minutes east (N. 37°35' E.), a distance of three hundred ninety-one and sixty hundredths feet (391.60') to a point in the north line of said section 12, distant two hundred sixty-eight and no hundredths feet (268.00') from said stone monument; thence

(8) North eighty-four degrees thirty-two minutes east (N. 84°32' E.) along the north line of section 12, a distance of eight hundred forty-three and eighty-five hundredths feet (843.85') to an iron pin, said pin being two hundred eleven and no hundredths feet (211.00') from a stone monument in the northeast corner of said section 12; thence

(9) South five degrees thirty-one minutes east (S. 5°31' E.), a distance of two thousand six hundred fifty-seven and seventy hundredths feet (2,657.70') to an iron pin, said pin being two hundred eleven and no hundredths feet (211.00') from an iron pin in the southeast corner of the east half of the northeast quarter of section 12; thence

(10) South eighty-four degrees forty-two minutes west (S. 84°42' W.) along the east and west half section line of said section 12, said line also being the center line of Seventeenth Street, a distance of nine hundred thirty-five and eighty hundredths feet (935.80') to a point; thence

(11) North five degrees thirty-six minutes west (N. 5°36' W.), a distance of seventy-five and ten hundredths feet (75.10') to a point; thence

(12) South eighty-four degrees forty-two minutes west (S. 84°42' W.), a distance of one hundred seventy-two and twenty hundredths feet (172.20') to a point; thence

(13) South five degrees thirty-six minutes east (S. 5°36' E.), a distance of seventy-five and ten hundredths feet (75.10') to the point of beginning.

Containing in all an area of one hundred fifteen and eight hundred and four thousandths acres (115.804 A.) more or less, all as shown on map no. 6490-101, entitled: "Reservation boundary Little Rock, A. I. D., Little Rock, Ark.", dated March 1928 and filed in the office of the Quartermaster General, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, so far as I can as a member of the committee, I may say that I have no objection to the amendment.

Now, as a Senator, I should like to say that, in my opinion, as to all the airports there must be strict Federal supervision. It gives a false sense of security to a pilot who thinks there is an airport somewhere where he can land unless that airport is properly lighted, unless it has a radio beam, unless it is taken care of in a manner to give proper and accurate information to the aviator. Otherwise, it ought not to be operated at all.

Speaking as the Senator in charge of the bill for a moment, provision is made in the amendment that in time of emergency the airport may be taken over by the Federal Government, so that the interests of the public are certainly safeguarded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, line 15, after the word "navigation", it is proposed to insert the following: "and to include waterway improvements investigated by the War Department under specific authorization from Congress and subsequently undertaken pursuant to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935", so as to make the clause read:

For the preservation and maintenance of existing river and harbor works, and for the prosecution of such projects heretofore authorized as may be most desirable in the interests of commerce and navigation; and to include waterway improvements investigated by the War Department under specific authorization from Congress and subsequently undertaken pursuant to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

And on page 69, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "$138,677,899" and insert in lieu thereof "$208,677,899."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the amendment is evidently based on the original print of the bill as it came from the House. As the bill has been reported by the committee, the appropriation referred to has been increased. I think the Senator intends to add to the total sum as reported by the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. That would be the effect.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest that the clerks be authorized to increase the totals where necessary.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am told that if my amendment should be adopted, it would increase the amount carried by the amendment which has been recommended to the Senate by the committee.

Mr. COPELAND. The committee amendment on page 69, line 23, has not as yet been passed upon; but, as I understand, the Senator from Florida proposes to add $20,000,000 to the $188,677,899 which has been included in the bill as a committee amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is correct. The amount carried in my amendment would be added to the amount carried in the committee amendment which has not as yet been agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make a brief statement?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New York for that purpose?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. When the item referred to by the Senator from Florida came up in the committee I took the position that it was subject to a point of order under rule XVI of the Senate. The subcommittee sustained me in that regard. The same point was raised in the full committee and by a very close vote, and after the chairman announced that he did not think it was subject to a point of order, the full committee rejected the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

I have very serious question in my mind about the amendment being in order under rule XVI. As one reads that rule it is very clear, certainly, that the amendment could not be received under the first section; but there is a provision in the rule, in the last two lines of the first section, under which such an amendment may be presented if it is proposed in pursuance to an estimate submitted in accordance with law. If that means that an estimate submitted by the Director of the Budget is the kind of estimate intended to be covered by the rule, then the Senator from Florida has a perfect right to submit his amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. It has been the invariable practice in the Senate and in the House that to be authorized by law a project must be in pursuance of some specific provision in the law having to do with the project. In other words, it does not give authority of law to any item to have the Director of the Budget simply send an estimate to Congress. When we come to consider the rules, we are bound by the rules of the Senate, and the universal practice has been that unless authorized by law amendments providing for such projects are not proper upon a general appropriation bill.

Mr. COPELAND. That is exactly the view I take.

Mr. FLETCHER. The rule, however, does not so provide.

Mr. COPELAND. I have taken the view just expressed by the Senator from Missouri. I had a long talk this morning with our very able parliamentarian, Mr. Watkins. He has convinced me, if not the Senator from Missouri, that the Senator from Florida has a right to present the amendment.

However, I wish to say that I do not believe the language of the rule as interpreted is what the Senate intended it should be. I do not believe the Senate ever intended to formulate a rule which would make it possible to consider an estimate from the Budget Bureau as an authorization for a project. I cannot conceive it possible that the President, in connection with the $4,000,000,000 relief act, could allocate $1,000 each to a thousand projects and then the Director of the Budget could send in estimates accordingly.

If that be a correct interpretation of the rule as it exists, then Congress might be bound for the next 50 or 100 years by authorizations which its committees never considered and upon which Congress never had passed. I am convinced that the Senate never intended in the formulation of rule XVI to give such tremendous power to the Director of the Budget and to have him overrule the wishes and desires of the Congress.

However, the rule is as it is and our parliamentarian, Mr. Watkins, has convinced me that a point of order against the proposal could not properly be sustained. I am rather glad personally that that is the view of our parliamentarian, because my great affection for the Senator from Florida has put me in a very embarrassing position during the past week or two. I am not promising him that I am going to vote for his proposal, but I am somewhat relieved to find that technically he is correct. Therefore, so far as I am concerned I have no disposition to keep him off the floor and prevent him presenting his argument in behalf of his amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. The point of order may be made at any time, may it not? In other words, the point of order is not waived by not making it at this particular time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there is a good deal to be said on that amendment before it is voted upon.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment. I understood the Senator from Florida desired to address the Senate on it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Several other things are going to happen before the amendment is voted on.

Mr. KING. I hope so.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; let them happen. I shall be ready for them.

Mr. CLARK. I make the point of order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the Senator present his point of order. I cannot see any foundation at all for it, and the Committee on Appropriations held that the amendment was not subject to a point of order; but the Senator may present it if he desires.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this matter involves a complete departure from the practice heretofore uniformly followed by the Senate, so far as I know, and authorizes the Bureau of the Budget in the future to make authorizations for appropriations for all matters not previously authorized by law. Before a matter of such importance, and one which will set such a precedent for the future, is discussed, I think there ought to be a quorum present; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	King	Pope
Austin	Costigan	La Follette	Radcliffe
Bachman	Couzens	Lewis	Reynolds
Bailey	Davis	Logan	Robinson
Barkley	Donahay	Loneragan	Russell
Benson	Duffy	Long	Schwollenbach
Bilbo	Fletcher	McAdoo	Sheppard
Black	Frazier	McGill	Shipstead
Bone	George	McKellar	Smith
Borah	Gerry	McNary	Stetwer
Brown	Gibson	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkeley	Glass	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Gore	Moore	Townsend
Burke	Guffey	Murphy	Trammell
Byrd	Hale	Murray	Truman
Byrnes	Harrison	Neely	Tydings
Capper	Hatch	Norbeck	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hayden	Norris	Van Nuys
Carey	Holt	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark	Johnson	Overton	Wheeler
Connally	Keyes	Pittman	White

Mr. LEWIS. I rise to announce the absence of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] because of illness.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and my colleague [Mr. DIETERICH] are detained on official business.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is engaged before the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to address myself very briefly purely to the point of order.

In what I shall say upon the point of order there will be no expression of opinion whatsoever as to the merits of the project proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Florida. Certainly, so far as my feeling toward the Senator from Florida is concerned, it is simply one of affection; and as to the project itself, I do not profess to have any information, other than such as has been derived from a few newspaper articles on the project which I have read. But, to my mind, the question involved in this point of order is the most important parliamentary proposition which has come before the Senate of the United States since I have been a Member of it, and one of the most important parliamentary problems presented to either branch of Congress during my lifetime.

Briefly, the proposition embodied in the amendment of the Senator from Florida goes directly to the very fundamentals of the universal practice in this country, which has required authorizations by law before items of appropriation may be offered on general appropriation bills.

I do not think the importance of the precedent we are to set here today can possibly be overestimated. Without going into the merits of whether or not the Government of the United States should construct the Florida canal—which is a question of fact to be determined on its merits by the Congress of the United States—the question presented here today is whether the Director of the Budget, by his mere act, has a right to make items of appropriation authorized on general appropriation bills, without any other previous authority of law.

Without going, as I say, into the merits of the desirability of the Florida canal, we are all familiar with the outline of the facts—that out of funds which were authorized by law to a specific amount, granted to the President in his discretion, the President allocated some $5,000,000 for preliminary work upon a project which has been variously estimated to cost from $150,000,000 to $350,000,000. There are many other projects in the same situation, some in my State; but for the Senate to hold that with that allocation, undoubtedly made in accordance with law and with funds properly within his control, the Director of the Budget has the authority or the right, either under the law or under the rules of the Senate, further to increase the authorization beyond that contained in the $4,800,000,000 act, is to say that Congress, having appropriated $4,800,000,000 in an emergency, the Director of the Budget by his own act has authority to increase that authorization from $4,000,000,000 to $40,000,000,000, or, for that matter, to $400,000,000,000, if the Director should see fit to do so!

I submit that Senators ought to give very careful consideration to the point of order raised, not with respect to the merits of the Florida Canal project, which will properly be determined when substantive legislation authorizing such a project is properly brought in and considered by the Senate, not influenced by our affection for the Senator from Florida, whom we all deeply respect and admire, but considering the precedent which is sought to be set of raping the Congress of its jurisdiction, jurisdiction which is only that of Congress, to authorize appropriations, and conferring the jurisdiction upon an administrative official, namely, on the Director of the Budget.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The situation which arises in connection with the Florida ship canal may arise as to many other projects which have been or may be begun.

Mr. CLARK. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator contend that the President did not have the lawful authority under the blanket appropriation of $4,800,000,000 to designate certain projects which should be either completed or begun out of that $4,800,000,000? And if he had the authority under the act appropriating the money to establish certain projects, does not that itself cure any defect by reason of a lack of specific authority given by the Congress for the appropriation of money for the project?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, it is my contention, and I think the contention cannot be successfully attacked as a legal proposition, that neither the President nor the Director of the Budget had a right to authorize the expenditure of or to expend one penny in excess of the $4,800,000,000 appropriated by Congress. It was perfectly proper and perfectly legal for the President to authorize the expenditure of any of that sum in any manner he might see fit to choose, under the blanket authority, but, as I said a moment ago, simply because $10 might be spent on a $10,000,000 project, to say that that was an authorization which gave the Director of the Budget the authority or the legal right to make an estimate in regard to it is simply to extend the appropriation of the $4,800,000,000 without any limit whatsoever.

Mr. BARKLEY. I grant that the Senator is correct in stating that neither the President nor the Director of the Budget—and, of course, in this matter it is the President, because the Director of the Budget is simply acting under his direction—

Mr. CLARK. The Director of the Budget made the estimate. That is the theory on which the amendment is being offered.

Mr. BARKLEY. He does not authorize the expenditure. Assuming that the President had the lawful power to designate this project, or any other project which might have been completed out of the $4,800,000,000, or might have been started, if the establishment of the project itself was lawful, then is it necessary to secure a specific act of Congress legitimatizing the authority on the part of the President?

Mr. CLARK. I think unquestionably it is, because unless my contention be correct, there is absolutely no limit which can be conceived of to the extent to which the Treasury of the United States might be subjected to expense because of the original appropriation of $4,800,000,000. When we voted for the $4,800,000,000 appropriation we were voting for the greatest expenditure of money ever made in peacetime by any nation on the face of the earth, but it certainly was not our intention to obligate the Government of the United States—at least, it was not mine when I voted for the bill—to obligate the Government of the United States, to expend one penny more than the sum carried in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is never any obligation on the part of Congress, moral or legal, to appropriate more money than it provides in any appropriation bill, even though it is for a project which Congress itself has authorized, because Congress can authorize projects and appropriate money partly to build them, and then refuse to appropriate any more; and there is no remedy for that. That is a thing which sometimes happens.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator knows, as he has been very much interested in it, that in the city in which I reside there is a project for which the President made an allocation of funds for as much of the project as could be completed in 1 year, and left a very large portion of the project unallotted for, and very properly, because it could not be completed within a year. I hope that some day, and as soon as practicable, Congress may authorize the completion of that project; but because I am very hopeful that the Congress in its wisdom may see fit to pass substantive legislation authorizing the completion of that project, it has never occurred to me for a moment to offer an amendment as a rider to a general appropriation bill for the completion of the project.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not entirely agree with the Senator. Of course, I realize that if, either out of funds available, or other funds which may be appropriated, the President does not allocate sufficient money to complete that project, and all other projects begun under the $4,800,000,000, it will then be up to Congress to decide whether it will complete them by additional appropriations.

Mr. CLARK. I agree entirely with the Senator from Kentucky on that proposition; but it is the right of Congress to decide whether it wishes to appropriate the necessary money to complete the project.

Mr. BARKLEY. The decision ought to be rendered on the merits of the case.

Mr. CLARK. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. It ought not to be rendered on a point of order. My contention is that this is a new situation, and not covered by any ruling of the Chair heretofore. Where the President authorizes the beginning of a project, which he had a legal right to do, it is a legal project, although he cannot spend a dollar beyond the money already appropriated. But having established it legally, and within the authority conferred upon him, a point of order would not lie against the authority of the President in establishing it, although the Senate or the House might vote down an appropriation for which an estimate had been made.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that, so far as I know, no one has thought of contending that a point of order would lie against the original expenditure. My only proposition is that an estimate based simply on an allocation in a blanket $4,800,000,000 appropriation act, made on his own motion by the Director of the Budget, does not relieve the amendment from its susceptibility to a point of order, and does not constitute authority of law.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know how I shall vote on the Florida project—

Mr. CLARK. Nor do I.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not interested in it one way or the other; I may vote against it when it comes before the Senate; but my point is that the project having been established by the President under the authority of Congress, a point of order does not lie now on the ground that it was not established lawfully, that it was not authorized, although the expenditure of the entire amount might not be authorized under the blanket appropriation. I think the status of the project cures any lack of specific authority by Congress to appropriate for it.

Mr. CLARK. Perhaps I did not make my contention perfectly clear to the Senator from Kentucky. My contention is not that the original allocation was unlawful, or without authority of law, or that the expenditures made up to date have been without authority of law, because the President had specific authority, in the $4,800,000,000 appropriation act to spend the money for practically any purposes for which he saw fit to spend it. My point is not that the original expenditure was unlawful but that further expenditure will be unlawful unless specifically authorized by Congress.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Let me ask a hypothetical question and see if I understand correctly the position of the Senator from Missouri. In the event the Senate should sustain the amendment—in other words, hold that the point of order is not well taken—in the event that the Senate and the Congress should place in the appropriation bill this item appropriating $20,000,000 for the continuation of work on the Florida canal, does the Senator hold that it would be the duty of the Comptroller General to refuse to allow the money to be spent for further construction of the canal?

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator mean, unless this amendment should be enacted into law, or additional authorization should be made?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. In the event the point of order shall not be sustained, then the Senate will vote upon the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. I make no such contention. Of course, if the Senate shall choose to allow a rider appropriating $40,000,000,000 to be added to the bill, the Comptroller General would have no right to declare it illegal, if the Congress passed the bill and the President signed it. It is the matter of retaining the proper authority in the Congress itself, control of the appropriations, to which I press my point, not that the Comptroller General would have the slightest right to declare an act of Congress invalid.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to add a word, with the permission of the Senator from Missouri, in further answer to the point raised by the Senator from Kentucky. It seems to me there is a confusion of terms. There is absolutely no question that when Congress appropriated the $4,800,000,000 the President had the right to spend the $4,800,000,000. He could spend it at any place for work or work relief.

Mr. CLARK. He could have spent it all on the Florida canal if he had so desired.

Mr. ADAMS. The authorization of a project is a legislative act. The President of the United States has not the authority, and the authority cannot be delegated to him, to authorize a project, for that is a legislative act. In other words, when we are discussing the authorization for a project, a thing which only Congress can do, it is very different from appropriating money and putting it into the hands of the President and giving him the power to spend it. We did not give to the President the power to authorize projects so as to lay the foundation for demanding of the Appropriation Committees subsequent expenditures. It seems to me, as the Senator from Missouri has pointed out, that there is a very vital and essential matter of principle involved which does not concern this one particular project, that is, as to whether or not Congress has attempted to surrender its rights to control the purse of the Nation.

I do not think Congress meant to do that, and I think it perfectly clear that Congress could not do that. If the authorization for a project is a legislative matter, as it is under our practice, we cannot delegate it to the President; we cannot delegate it to the Bureau of the Budget. So, if an amendment is offered for which there must be an authorization, the Director of the Budget cannot furnish the authorization, nor can the President furnish the authorization.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. KING. I desire to supplement the very pertinent remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] by challenging attention to action recently taken by the Senate.

A number of States in the West appealed to the President to obtain a part of the $4,880,000,000 for irrigation and reclamation projects. The President made a number of allocations for such projects. Some of the projects have been partially completed. Others have not been entered upon, although plans for them have been formulated. Recently some of us who were interested in those projects realized that the President had no power to make them permanent projects, because a legislative act was required to do that; and we therefore secured an amendment to an appropriation bill and had those projects legislatively authorized. If that bill shall be signed by the President, the Congress may go ahead and make appropriations. But in the absence of legislation declaring those projects to be Government projects—that is, unless there was legislation back of them—I doubt whether the President could make any further allocations for them.

Mr. CLARK. At that point let me ask the Senator from Utah a question. Does he think that when Congress appropriated the $4,880,000,000 for public works, we authorized the work to be done on the installment plan of $1 down and a dollar forever?

Mr. KING. No; certainly not.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I came to the Capitol this morning expecting to raise a point of order against the proposed amendment, as I did in the subcommittee. I did what I could in that direction in the full committee. It is perfectly clear in my mind now that there is something wrong about a plan which would permit through the medium of a regular appropriation bill a project to be carried forward which has not been authorized by the Congress. I am perfectly clear that the President had a perfect right under the $4,880,000,000 appropriation act to allocate to the Florida canal any sum of money that he saw fit, and he can do it now.

Mr. CLARK. And that has not been disputed.

Mr. COPELAND. No; and that money can be spent at any time up to the 1st of July 1937.

Mr. CLARK. Let me ask the Senator from New York a question. As jurisdiction of Senate committees goes, the authorization of a canal of this sort is a matter solely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, is it not?

Mr. COPELAND. That is true.

Mr. CLARK. That committee has appointed a subcommittee, composed, I believe, of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], to pass on this matter.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. CLARK. Yet, while those hearings are still in progress, while the subcommittee has not reported to the full committee, and while there has been no substantive legislation on the subject, it is now sought, by rider on the appropriation bill, to give general authority for continuation of the project.

Mr. COPELAND. I am in full agreement with my friend the Senator from Missouri. When I came here to discuss this matter, my attention was called to rule XVI; and I shall now read it to the Senate.

I said in my introductory statement a little while ago that I know it never was the intent of the Congress of the United States to delegate to the Director of the Budget its power to decide what projects shall be undertaken. I know certainly that I am right in estimating the sentiment of the Congress. So far as the point of order is concerned, however, it hinges wholly upon the last two lines of rule XVI; Mr. Watkins, the Parliamentarian, convinced me, I think, upon that subject. I wish to be unconvinced, because I am thoroughly out of patience with the idea of delegating our power to any executive officer of the Government. I know little about law, but it seems to me that even the Supreme Court might find fault with such a delegation of power.

However, this is what the rule says:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session—

We all agree with that.

Mr. FLETCHER. Go on.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going on, if the Senator will be patient. I do not like to go on, but I will go on.

I continue—or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

Mr. CLARK. But, Mr. President, the Senator is not giving any consideration or authority to the last four words of the rule—"in accordance with law." Submitted in accordance with what? "Submitted in accordance with law." Does the rule say "proposed in pursuance of an estimate"? It does not. It says, "proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law."

Mr. President, what law gives the Director of the Budget authority to submit an estimate for projects not hitherto authorized by law? When the Director of the Budget submits such an estimate, he is not submitting an estimate submitted in accordance with the law. The Director of the Budget is controlled by the law creating the Bureau of the Budget; and when he goes out of his authority to submit an estimate for a project not hitherto authorized by law, he is violating the law, and does not bring himself within the Senate rules.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that if the rule said "or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted and in accordance with law", the Senator and I would be all right. It is the duty of the Director of the Budget to submit estimates.

Mr. CLARK. Estimates not in accordance with law cannot be submitted by him, under our rules.

Mr. COPELAND. There is a law which permits him to submit estimates. May I ask the Senator to enlarge upon the subject so as to justify us in taking the position that the amendment is actually subject to a point of order?

Mr. CLARK. It appears perfectly clear to me that if the Director of the Budget arrogates to himself the authority to submit an estimate for a project which never has been authorized by law, he exceeds the authority given the Bureau of the Budget in the very act to which it owes its existence, and, therefore, it is not an estimate authorized by law, and not entitled to be considered in connection with this rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to say briefly that the rule is so plain that it seems to me it does not need any interpretation.

In the last clause of the rule the language "or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law" is used. This estimate was submitted by the War Department, by the Bureau of the Budget, and was recommended by the Chief of Engineers. The estimate is made for the whole appropriation bill, covering the whole bill. Included in the whole bill is the item with which we are now dealing. The estimate was made under the general law, according to law, beyond any question whatever; and, the estimate having been made according to law, the amendment is perfectly in order. It is made according to the express language of the rule.

How can it be assumed that the items here covered were never authorized by law? In my judgment, they were authorized in the first place by law, and the question of delegating the power of Congress is not involved at all. There are persons who think the act of 1935 a foolish act; but we cannot help that. It is the law. It never has been challenged. The Senator admits that the President had authority to authorize the commencement of this project.

Mr. CLARK. I not only admit it; I proclaim it. That is the very essence of the matter we are considering.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is absolutely right there. He admits that the President had authority to allocate funds for the prosecution of work on the project.

That was done in accordance with law. In this instance there is no delegation by Congress to the President of authority to legislate. Congress makes the President its agent in deciding upon what projects he will enter and decide upon, and what allotments he will make for them. In the last Congress we included several items in the river and harbor bill, as the Senator will recall, being projects subject to the approval and endorsement of the Chief of Engineers. They were approved by the Senate subject to his endorsement. The endorsement was made.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me that the Senator chose an unfortunate illustration, because the bill to which he referred carried no appropriation whatever. It was an authorization reported from the committee of the Senate having jurisdiction over such authorizations. It was not as though we had undertaken to make an appropriation as a rider on a general appropriation bill and made the appropriation subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers. I think the Senator will agree to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the illustration referred to, the projects having been authorized, Congress made appropriations for them, and by law made the Chief of Engineers the agent of Congress to pass upon the merits of the projects. We are doing the same thing here. I think by the act of 1935 we made the President of the United States the agent of Congress to authorize projects and to allocate funds for the work on those projects. It is perfectly legal and according to law that estimates should be submitted to the Congress by the Director of the Budget and by the War Department with reference to the appropriation bill covering the requirements of that Department. Those estimates were made according to law. In my judgment, this project was adopted by the Congress through its agent, the President, according to law. But, anyway, the estimates are here, submitted in regular order as the law requires, and the estimates were before the Appropriations Committee. The Appropriations Committee have acted upon those estimates, and included in the estimates were the items which I seek to incorporate in the bill. I think, beyond any question, this amendment is in order, and is not subject to the point raised by the Senator from Missouri.

As to the argument of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] about projects which were adopted, the projects he mentions were adopted on an appropriation bill; the appropriation bill carried the items which he mentioned. They were subject to a point of order as legislation on an appropriation bill, I presume, but the point of order was not raised; and so they entered into that bill and were authorized by Congress by reason of the passage of the appropriation bill.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Missouri a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. Suppose the Chief of Army Engineers were to go to the Director of the Budget and suggest that $20,000,000 be estimated for a certain purpose and that the estimate should accordingly be made; would that be in accordance with law?

Mr. CLARK. It would not be. I say that under the act creating the Budget Bureau the Director of the Budget has no right to make any estimate for projects not previously authorized by law. Neither the Chief of Engineers nor the Director of the Budget has a right either to appropriate funds or to make estimates for the appropriation of funds—estimates in a technical sense not previously authorized by law. It is perfectly proper for the Chief of Engineers to make any recommendation he may please on any project that may be properly submitted to him, either by the President or by the Congress, to be passed on by him, but the Chief of Engineers has no right to recommend $25,000,000 or $150,000,000 or $1.50 for projects not previously authorized by law, and neither has the Director of the Budget.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not claim to be a parliamentarian, but I wish to submit a few remarks on the theory that this amendment is in order.

If the Chair will consult rule XVI, he will note that it provides:

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law—

If it stopped there, the Senator from Missouri might be correct.

Mr. CLARK. There is no question that the Senator from Missouri would be correct.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator would be correct. Very well. If the rule stopped there, all right; but it does not stop there. The rule continues—or treaty stipulation—

If this were a treaty, the Senator would be correct—or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same—or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee.

In other words, if the committee had reported favorably a resolution, although it had not become a law, authorizing this project, even though Congress had not passed on it, an amendment on the subject would still be in order.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to know if I understand the Senator's position correctly. He has just stated that under the provision of rule XVI which he has just read if any standing committee of the Senate had reported favorably on one of these projects such report would answer the requirements of the rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. It would; that is my understanding of it.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wanted to be sure as to the Senator's position.

Mr. CONNALLY. In other words, whenever a standing committee of the Senate reports favorably, then the matter is ready for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In just a moment I will yield. The rule does not stop there—

Mr. BARKLEY. I want to refer to that very point by pointing to the fact that on numerous occasions amendments have been added to appropriation bills during their consideration on the floor of the Senate because some standing committee had reported a bill and it was on the calendar but unacted on by the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, that is so.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me use a minute of my own time. The mere fact that a committee has recommended it is sufficient. Is such action on the part of a committee an authorization? The Senator from Missouri seems to contend that before the Senate can consider an amendment it must be authorized by statutory law enacted by both bodies of Congress. I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, the Senator is making exactly the argument the Senator from Florida made a little while ago—

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President—

Mr. CLARK. Just a moment. Which points the reason for the rule; that is, that this matter should have been considered properly by the committee having jurisdiction of it. Now this proposition is before a standing committee of the Senate, having jurisdiction, which has not reported on it, but without waiting for the committee, which has jurisdiction to make its report, it is sought to be brought in here and added as an amendment on the appropriation bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is simply trying to show that the Senator from Missouri is incorrect in his narrow, legalistic construction of the rule, and the Senator from Texas is showing why the Senate in the rule provided for the exceptions mentioned. The rule did not stop when it said if a committee had recommended it, then it would be in order, but it proceeds to say:

Or proposed in pursuance of an estimate submitted in accordance with law.

The Senator from Missouri contends that every time the Budget Bureau submits an estimate we then have to sit down and figure out whether or not the law under which he acted was constitutional or was beyond our power.

Mr. President, in passing upon rules and their construction, the Chair is supposed to assume that a law is a law until it is declared to be void. The Chair cannot pass on the constitutionality of a statute.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose Congress authorized the President to build a battleship at a cost of $20,000,000 and when its construction had been nearly completed he discovered that it would take $21,000,000; could it be contended, because by the original authorization he was directed to spend $20,000,000, that Congress could not appropriate an additional $1,000,000 in order to complete the construction of the battleship?

Mr. CONNALLY. It could be contended, but not soundly contended.

Mr. BARKLEY. I mean soundly contended.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, let me suggest to Senators who are worried about the authority of the Senate, who are disturbed about the Senate giving up some authority, suppose rule XVI were not in existence, the Senate could do whatever it pleased; it could consider any item of appropriation whether it was on an appropriation bill or whether it was on a legislative bill or on any other kind of bill. Rule XVI is a limitation on the power of the Senate, and those who are asserting the Senate is going to be hogtied should realize that we have tied ourselves by our own rule. A rule of that kind must be narrowly construed. It is a limitation on the constitutional authority of the Senate itself, and the Chair, the courts, and no one else should give a broad construction to a limitation on the constitutional power of the Congress. So, in construing this rule, the Chair has got to indulge the most liberal construction, because, without the rule, the Senate could consider anything at any time, anywhere.

Mr. President, though we have an estimate here from the Bureau of the Budget, submitted in accordance with law, the Senator from Missouri seems to contend that we have got to go back and investigate the original act. What does that mean? It means according to the law which provides that the Budget Bureau shall submit estimates or the Department shall submit estimates. That is what the law means. It does not mean that a Senator may submit an estimate; it does not mean that some clerk may submit an estimate; but the law provides that a department or the Bureau of the Budget may submit estimates; and if those estimates are submitted in the manner provided for their submission, then such action comes within the rule. It does not mean that the law under which the appropriation was authorized had to be constitutional or anything else; but it means that in submitting an estimate if they follow the method set forth by the statute providing for estimates, then, under this rule, it is in order.

I submit that, Mr. President, as not only the parliamentary rule but common sense.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I think the Senator from Texas has clearly expressed the proper interpretation of the rule, that the estimate must be submitted in the manner the law requires it to be submitted.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. LOGAN. But, listening to the argument of the Senator from Missouri, it seems to me it goes a little further than that. His contention is that this project was established by the President of the United States and that Congress has not given its authority. I do not understand the Senator from Missouri to contend that Congress may not make the appropriation, but that, if it does so, then it becomes a congressional project without Congress having previously considered it. Is that the idea of the Senator from Texas of what the Senator from Missouri is contending from what he has stated?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may I say to my friend that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Texas I will be very glad to explain to the Senator from Kentucky exactly what my position is. I much prefer to explain my own position than to have the Senator from Texas do so.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Texas has made such a clear explanation of the rule, so much better than anyone else, that I thought perhaps he would be able to explain the contention of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that he can have all the time he desires. I now yield to him.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Texas I will claim the floor in my own right and take all the time I desire.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am willing that that should happen.

Mr. President, let us look for a moment at the contention that because this project originally was selected by the President it is not lawful.

If it is not lawful, then we have embezzled about $4,800,000,000 of the people's money, and some of the Senators, instead of worrying about the rules of the Senate, ought to be devising ways and means to stop the utilization of the $4,800,000,000 on any of these projects.

I submit that the language of the rule referring to estimates does not necessarily apply to projects not in existence at all. Suppose it should be a new project? If we have an estimate for it, though there may not have been a cent spent on it, under the rule the Senate may consider it.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

LXXX—239

Mr. ADAMS. The amendment which is under consideration proposes to add to the bill, after the word "navigation", page 69, line 4, these words:

And to include waterway improvements investigated by the War Department under specific authorization from Congress and subsequently undertaken pursuant to the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935.

May I ask the Senator from Texas what projects are covered by the amendment? It would seem to me this is a wide-open authorization of every waterway project that may have been investigated by the War Department. I do not know whether or not all those projects have Budget estimates behind them.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is a member of the Appropriations Committee and ought to know more about the details of this matter than I do.

Mr. ADAMS. I voted against the amendment for that reason.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator now asks me what the amendment means?

Mr. ADAMS. No; I am trying to show that I do not know what may be covered by the amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not arguing about the merits of the proposal. That is for the Senate to determine. Cannot the Senate trust itself to consider the matter? Cannot the Senate pass upon the merits of the proposal? I am merely arguing the purely technical or legal point involved. If the Senate cannot trust itself to pass on these matters, then rule XVI ought to be made still stronger.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Referring to the question propounded by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], the amendment provides for an increase of $20,000,000. The Budget estimate was for $29,000,000, covering five items authorized by the President, namely, the Passamaquoddy project in Maine, the Atlantic-Gulf Ship Canal in Florida, a third project in New Mexico, a fourth project in West Virginia, and a fifth project in Mississippi. Those were the five projects to be taken care of by the $29,000,000, which was not included by the House. The amendment which I have offered eliminates the first project, the Passamaquoddy project in Maine, because it was not examined by the War Department engineers. The amendment would limit the appropriation to taking care of the other four projects which I have mentioned.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. We recognize the Budget Bureau has included the first item. My inquiry is whether or not there may not be other projects which come within the language of the amendment but which were not estimated for?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the language of the amendment covers these certain projects and only these. They have been examined by the War Department engineers and are included in the Budget estimate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in conclusion let me briefly recapitulate. The contention of the Senator from Texas is that the appropriation proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Florida is in order if it is made according to some existing law or some existing treaty or some resolution previously adopted by the Senate. In addition to those classifications are two other classifications; that is, moved by a standing or select committee or proposed in pursuance of an estimate. If the amendment falls within either one of those five classifications, it is in order. I submit that it is in order.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, of course I cannot hope to equal the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] in speaking ex cathedra or with dogmatic authority as to what is sound argument and what is not, but I shall undertake to make my contention plain enough so that even the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] will be able to understand it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I apologize to the Senator from Missouri, but when I first rose I stated that I did not claim to be a parliamentarian.

Mr. CLARK. I think the Senator completely demonstrated that in the course of his argument.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas is willing to have it determined by the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. Since the Senator from Missouri is going to make it so clear that even the Senator from Kentucky will understand it, may I ask that he use simple and childlike language? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLARK. I shall try to do so in order that the Senator may be able to comprehend it.

May I say in passing, because I might forget it later, that the contention of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that to say that rule XVI puts any limitation on the right of Congress or the Senate to make an appropriation would constitute an admission that the Senate cannot trust itself, is to contend that the Senate ought to repeal all of its rules and proceed without any rules whatever, on the theory that the Senate can trust itself; that we as a nation ought to repeal all existing laws on the theory that we as a Nation may proceed without any laws or rules because we can trust ourselves.

For the benefit of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] I will say again, because evidently the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] did not seem to comprehend it, it has never been contended on the part of myself or, so far as I know, anyone else that the allocation made by the President for the Florida ship canal or for the Passamaquoddy project or the St. Louis project, in which I am interested personally, or any other public-works project was not made in accordance with the law. So the contention of my distinguished friend from Texas, that before we appropriate only $4,800,000,000 instead of $40,000,000,000 or $400,000,000,000, as the case might be, we ought to go into court and determine the constitutionality of the $4,800,000,000, is entirely beside the point.

So far as I know, nobody has ever questioned the constitutionality of the Public Works Act of last year and nobody has ever questioned the legality of the appropriations made under that act.

The whole question is whether the authority granted to the President to expend so much as he might see fit for a particular purpose out of that particular appropriation meant authority to obligate the Government beyond the extent of $4,800,000,000, and, if the President proceeded to spend $5,000,000 on a project that might ultimately cost $150,000,000 or $250,000,000 or $300,000,000, whether that allocation of a small part gave authority to the Director of the Budget to send here an estimate.

I contend further, that if the contention be correct, that the allocation by the President did not carry any further authority of law on that project than the allocation made by him under that act, the Director of the Budget had no authority to make an estimate for the project, that the Chief of Engineers and the War Department had no authority to make an estimate for the project and, therefore, the project does not properly come before the Senate as being authorized under our rules, which, it may be, had been adopted because we could not trust ourselves, but nevertheless have been on our rule book for many years. The proposed amendment comes outside the various exceptions authorized by the rule because it is not an estimate which the Director of the Budget had the authority or the right to make, and is therefore not made in accordance with law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, unless the Chair is ready to rule, I wish to say just a few words; but if the Chair is ready to rule, I shall refrain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the purpose of the Chair to submit the question to the Senate. The Senator from Kentucky may proceed.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that connection, then, I wish simply to emphasize a point I made awhile ago in an interrogatory propounded to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and earlier to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

I do not believe a point of order would lie against an item in an appropriation bill reported by the Appropriations Committee increasing the amount of the fund necessary to complete a construction project of any sort which had been authorized by Congress, even though a limitation had been placed upon the amount of money to be spent on the project. For instance, if Congress should include in the Navy appropriation bill, or a bill carrying general legislation with respect to the Navy, an item authorizing the President to construct a battleship to cost $20,000,000, and the President, in pursuance of the authority to construct such a battleship, exhausted the $20,000,000 and found it necessary to have another $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, and the Appropriations Committee should bring in an item authorizing the expenditure of an extra $1,000,000 on the battleship, I do not believe a point of order would lie against that extra $1,000,000, because the construction of the battleship had already been authorized. Of course, the President could not go beyond the $20,000,000 unless Congress should appropriate the extra amount; but the Appropriations Committee could include such additional amount and bring it here as a part of its appropriation bill for the Navy, and a point of order would not lie against it, although in the authorization itself Congress limited to $20,000,000 the amount to be expended.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not heard all the debate, and I desire to ask the Senator a question for information.

Is it conceded, to begin with, that the President, in allocating or setting aside a sum of money for this particular purpose, acted within the power granted to him by Congress?

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, it is conceded by both sides that he acted within the scope of his authority; and that authority never has been questioned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KING. I would not accept without qualification the statement just made by my friend from Kentucky. I am inclined to think that the President might expend the $4,800,000,000 in any way he saw fit, of course, for a proper purpose; but I deny that he would have the right to make commitments that would call for additional appropriations perhaps of hundreds of millions of dollars, and that such commitments would be a valid command to appropriations committees to include in their appropriation bills sufficient amounts to complete the enterprise.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not contend that any allocation or the establishment of any project by the President places any compulsion on Congress to finish the project by the appropriation of additional funds. That is always within the jurisdiction of Congress. We ourselves may authorize the expenditure of $40,000,000 to build a dam across any river in the United States and then refuse to complete it. Congress has that discretion within its jurisdiction. We may appropriate $20,000,000 and deny the other $20,000,000 and let the unfinished dam stand there throughout all eternity. There is no legal obligation on Congress ever to complete anything it starts. It may stop at any time it sees fit to do so.

As I said a while ago, I am not concerned with this project itself. I have no interest in it. I am sorry to say—and I say it with some humiliation—that the State of Florida is the only State in the American Union I have never been in. I have never even crossed it by any process of transportation, and that is my misfortune; so I have no personal interest whatever in this project or any other project in Florida. I contend, however, that when the President, acting under the authority of the act creating the $4,800,000,000 fund, established this project it was established by law and was authorized just as completely as if Congress itself had named that project in the act and had authorized him to allocate, out of the funds at his disposal, any amount up to the amount necessary to complete the project.

It is not possible, by raising a point of order, to make unlawful a thing which has been lawfully established. The point of order is one thing. The merits of this canal are another thing. Admitting the lawfulness of the project when it was established, admitting that it was established in pursuance of an authority passed on to the President by Congress, which nobody has questioned in any effective way, I do not believe it can be successfully contended here that the status of that project can be changed now simply because it turns out that there is not enough money in the $4,000,000,000 appropriation to complete it.

I have no doubt there are many projects which have been established and started under this $4,000,000,000 appropriation which may not be completed without additional funds. I have in mind one or two, not in my own State but in other States, that probably cannot be completed out of the $8,000,000,000. It may be possible that out of any additional appropriation we authorize for relief, the President may be able to allocate sufficient funds to complete these projects. I hope he may.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. It has never been contended that if Congress appropriates additional funds, the President may not allocate anything he pleases for the completion of the project.

Mr. BARKLEY. If Congress, by conferring a blanket authority on the President, has legalized this project in Florida, and if, by appropriating $2,000,000 or a million and a half, or $1,000,000, with blanket authority, the President himself can complete it, it certainly is within the power of Congress to authorize its completion by a specific appropriation carried in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. To show the uselessness of all this discussion, the President has the money, and may allocate a sufficient amount to complete the project even if Congress should turn down the proposed appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course I do not know how much unallocated money the President has at his disposal. The same thing might be said of any other given project. The President may have on hand enough unallocated money to complete some one particular project; but whether he has on hand enough unallocated money to complete all projects is subject to very great doubt.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, yes! In that act we apportioned $900,000,000 for certain purposes, and then, in another item, $350,000,000 for other purposes, making a total of $1,250,000,000. The President has omitted to apportion enough for the completion of this canal. He has not usurped any authority at all. He has just put up to Congress the question whether or not Congress desires to complete the project.

Mr. BARKLEY. My contention is that Congress certainly has the power to do what the President himself could do under the authority of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. In view of the statement the Senator from Virginia has made that the President has ample funds with which to complete this project, I wish to ask the Senator why the President does not do so. Why come and ask us to make another appropriation, when the President has chosen to allocate to this project sufficient funds to start it, and has sufficient funds to complete it?

Mr. GLASS. I imagine it is because he wishes Congress to assume the responsibility.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Virginia and others have alluded to this as a Florida project. The Florida project is not all that is included in this amendment. There are at least three other equally or more meritorious propositions involved—one from Mississippi, which I know is a most meritorious project. So it is not merely a Florida proposition.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is generally understood here that four projects are involved in the amendment proposing to increase appropriation; and the question upon which we are about to pass is not the merits of any of these projects, but whether a point of order lies against the amendment offered to the bill. My contention is that the project was legal when it was established, and it is just as legal now as it was when it was established, and it cannot be illegitimized simply by raising a point of order and saying that the President had the power to allocate funds for its completion, but has not done so. Congress has the power to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] makes the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is not in order. The question is, Shall the amendment of the Senator from Florida be held to be in order?

Mr. CLARK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Couzens	King	Pittman
Austin	Davis	Lewis	Pope
Bachman	Donahay	Logan	Reynolds
Barkley	Duffy	Loneragan	Robinson
Benson	Fletcher	Long	Schwellenbach
Bilbo	Frazier	McAdoo	Sheppard
Black	George	McGill	Shipstead
Brown	Gerry	McKellar	Smith
Bulkley	Gibson	McNary	Stelwer
Bulow	Glass	Metcalf	Thomas, Okla.
Burke	Gore	Minton	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Guffey	Moore	Townsend
Byrnes	Hale	Murphy	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	Murray	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hatch	Neely	Van Nuys
Carey	Hayden	Norbeck	Wheeler
Clark	Holt	Norris	White
Connally	Johnson	O'Mahoney
Copeland	Keyes	Overton

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question before the Senate is, Is the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] in order?

Mr. CLARK. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK. An affirmative vote is a vote to hold the amendment of the Senator from Florida to be in order, and a negative vote is a vote to hold it to be out of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator states it correctly. Those in favor of holding the amendment to be in order will vote in the affirmative, those opposed to the amendment being held in order will vote in the negative.

Mr. CLARK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. AUSTIN. I desire to announce that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] has a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. BARKLEY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BILBO (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. HAYDEN. I wish to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] is necessarily detained. If present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is detained on account of illness, and that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are detained in important committee meetings.

The junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE], the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], and my colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH] are unavoidably detained.

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—42

Bachman	Glass	McNary	Schwellenbach
Barkley	Harrison	Minton	Sheppard
Benson	Hatch	Murray	Shipstead

So the Senate decided the amendment of Mr. FLETCHER to be in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, does the Senator from Florida desire to proceed, or does he prefer that I proceed?

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand the Senator from Michigan is opposed to the amendment, and I should prefer to have him proceed now, so that I may answer his argument.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it seems to me the best possible demonstration of the error the Senate has just made in holding the pending amendment to be in order is the fact that the Senate now must pass upon the merits or demerits of the Florida ship canal, involving an expenditure of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000. In view of the decision the Senate has just made, it puts itself in the position where it now must pass on this project, in the absence of any of the reports which are required traditionally, and as a matter of common sense, by congressional practice, before great waterway undertakings are started.

The Senate now finds itself in a position where it must say "yes" or "no" to the proposal to continue this vast undertaking. The greatest undertaking of its sort in the history of the Nation must be decided by laymen without the benefit of a conclusive report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors. It must be decided by the Senate without a conclusive report from the standing committee of the Senate which has jurisdiction over responsibilities of this nature.

The Senate has just voted itself into a position where it must decide upon its own responsibility, without respect to the traditional reliances which usually protect the Treasury in such instances, whether the Florida canal is justified. So I find myself in the somewhat awkward position of attempting to demonstrate to the Senate that the project is not justified.

Mr. President, I find it necessary to say to the Senate, first, that this is the first major waterway in the history of the United States ever undertaken without an enabling act of Congress prior to its commencement. I am forced to say that this is the first major waterway ever undertaken in the history of the United States without a conclusive report from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors to justify the project. Yet the Senate has concluded that this survey must be made upon its own responsibility. Therefore, the Senate must bear with me while I present what I believe to be the facts which sustain the conclusion that there is not one scintilla of economic justification for this burden of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 which is proposed to be placed on the Treasury of the United States.

Make no mistake what you are voting on, Senators. It is not just a little, innocent amendment involving $20,000,000—not at all! Now is the time when the Senate must decide whether or not this project shall be validated upon congressional responsibility and whether or not it shall proceed to its conclusion. We either stop it now, or we manifestly commit ourselves to subsequent appropriations over the years to complete the project finally, 6, 8, 10 years hence. So the question now pending, Mr. President, is not the question of an appropriation of $20,000,000 at all. That is just the admission fee.

The question pending before the Senate is whether or not we shall commit ourselves to an undertaking involving what I believe to be an ultimate $200,000,000, without any economic justification, and without the submission of any conclusive proofs upon which any Senator can say that the undertaking is warranted.

That is not all we are asked to do, Mr. President. The Senate is asked to disagree with the considered conclusions of the House Appropriations Committee. It is asked to disagree with the considered opinion of the House of Representatives itself. It is asked to disagree with the considered opinion of the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee. It is asked then to disagree with the considered judgment of the Senate Appropriations Committee itself. Here in this last possible forum, when this "innocent" thing can be validated, we are finally to call the roll.

Mr. President, let us now see how this project happens to be under construction at the present time. I assume that Senators are familiar in a general way with what the Florida canal is. My able and distinguished friend the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has decorated the walls of the Chamber with exhibits which will facilitate a better understanding of the physical aspects of the project. We are discussing, I may say briefly, a canal which will be about 200 miles long, starting at Jacksonville on the east coast of Florida and slanting off southwest to the Gulf of Mexico. I repeat, it will be about 200 miles long. It is a very circuitous sort of a route. When it reaches the Gulf it still will have to be dug 25 more miles out into the Gulf before it will reach a point where ships can travel in unrestricted water. But finally it is to be a canal 30 feet deep, at sea level, presumably offering a traffic saving between the Atlantic waters and the Gulf waters.

Mr. President, the canal has been dreamed of for from 50 to 100 years; it has been discussed romantically for half a century but it never occurred to anybody actually to start it or to commit the credit and the Treasury of the United States to any such expenditure until easy money began to flow out of the R. F. C. and the P. W. A. Then Florida interests, particularly in the Jacksonville area—for I may say parenthetically at this point that the State of Florida is sharply divided upon this issue, and half of the State, as I shall presently demonstrate, believes that the proposed canal is the greatest physical menace that ever threatened its welfare—representatives of the northern portion of the State came to Washington and asked for R. F. C. funds to start this undertaking. The R. F. C. turned the application over to the P. W. A. under Secretary Ickes. The application went to P. W. A. on August 14, 1933. It was manifestly of such magnitude that the President felt it very necessary to take extraordinary precautions; and I think I am not speaking beside the mark when I say that he has been utterly reluctant from start to finish that this project should be undertaken solely upon his own responsibility. He appointed a special board of investigation, and the special board of investigation reported respecting costs as follows:

The cost of a 30-foot sea-level canal—the project which is immediately at hand—was estimated at $142,000,000 without interest during the time of construction, or $160,000,000 with 4-percent interest during time of construction. Therefore, even upon the basis of these original estimates, I submit that this is, at minimum, a $160,000,000 project.

I want to call attention parenthetically at this point, however, to the fact that the estimate of $160,000,000 is based upon the June 1934 price index; and when General Markham was before our committee and under cross-examination he said that prices upon materials have already increased an average of 25 percent since 1934; so that factor must be added to the $160,000,000.

That is not all. The $160,000,000 estimate is made on the basis of contractual labor, whereas the canal itself is being built as a work-relief project; and General Markham very frankly stated that on the basis of work relief the cost will be substantially larger than any estimated cost on the basis of contractual operations.

So we have the figure of $160,000,000 minimum which must be increased first by whatever degree the price index increases after June 1934; second, by whatever price increase is inevitably related to the use of work relief instead of contractual labor.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not a fact that in the construction of the Panama Canal, a canal the construction of which was in some respects a work of less magnitude than the pending Florida canal, there were variations in the various estimates of actual construction cost of from $60,000,000 to $70,000,000?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator is correct. I think there was ultimately a substantial spread, although the final estimate made by the Board of Engineers, as I recall, was substantially accurate.

Mr. CLARK. That is perfectly correct; but between the time the construction project was conceived and the time the work was actually begun on another set of estimates and the time it had gone sufficiently far that accurate estimates could be made, there was not only a variation but a large spread on the ultimate cost of the Canal.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is entirely correct; and his observation is completely pertinent to the situation, for the following reason:

We have not as yet a final estimate or recommendation from the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers regarding this project. It has not reached the point where the ultimate figure is even remotely suggested by the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers. Not only that, but the canal as now being built is a sea-level canal.

Every time an inquiry is made as to hazard to southern Florida ground waters, we are told that if a hazard develops the plans will be changed to provide for a lock canal. Furthermore, we are then told that if a lock canal fails to safeguard southern Florida waters against infiltration and depletion the canal will be sealed.

Mr. President, in addition to the $160,000,000, in addition to the factors I have already identified as necessarily increasing the sum, all of these additional tentative factors enter into the proposition. So I think it is conservative to say that we are dealing with a $200,000,000 project.

My firm conviction is, for reasons which I shall subsequently present, that this may be a project involving infinitely more than $200,000,000; but for the sake of this argument let us say that it is a $200,000,000 undertaking. The President then asked his special board for a financial report on the prospectus respecting the Florida canal. The board made its report on September 15, 1934; and this is what the President's special board found: It found that if 8-cent tolls were collected the canal could pay its maintenance and operation and repay the cost of construction without any interest in 80 years. I interrupt myself again to say parenthetically that now it is proposed to build the canal and operate it without any tolls at all; so if the President's special board found that not even the interest could be paid on an 80-year amortization of this canal on a toll basis, what would the President's board have found by way of the economic justification of this undertaking if it had been realized that there were to be no tolls at all?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will be fair enough to state, without any calling attention to it—

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hope so.

Mr. FLETCHER. That the Board of Review appointed by the President made its report on the whole project, I think, on June 28, 1934. That report had to do with the canal itself according to the plans and specifications which had been agreed upon. Then the President directed a special board to consider the question of its self-liquidating possibilities and as to what might be done in that connection. The Senator is reading from that report which has nothing whatever to do with the question before the Senate, because we are not dealing with the self-liquidating feature at all. That report had to do with the toll question and self-liquidating features. That report was never acted on by the President, but the other report, the first report, dealing with the whole project as a river and harbor proposition—and that is the way it is treated now, as a river and harbor proposition—sets the cost at $143,000,000, and says it would justify an expenditure of $160,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What the Senator has stated is precisely what I undertook to show. The report from which I am now reading relates to an inquiry as to whether or not the canal could be so self-liquidating, and the conclusion was that it could not be self-liquidating on a tolls basis; even though it had revenue, it could not be self-liquidating; and I was simply asserting, in passing, that it seemed to me if it failed to be a sound business proposition on a tolls basis, and if it failed to demonstrate compensating advantages on a tolls basis, it was not likely to show any when it was operated free.

However, let me continue with the chronology: What happened down yonder in the executive arm of the Government? Mr. President, the reports which had been accumulated were prepared while the specific project which is now before the Senate was pending before P. W. A. for decision; and I submit that P. W. A. had a great deal better equipment to find out whether the answer ought to be "yes" or "no" than have Senators sitting upon the floor this afternoon. What was P. W. A.'s decision? December 21, 1934, Maj. Philip B. Fleming, Acting Deputy Administrator of P. W. A., recommended that the project be disapproved because it was not self-liquidating.

Let us not misunderstand the phrase "self-liquidating." When the Secretary of the Interior appeared before our committee a few weeks ago I asked him, "What you mean is it was rejected because it was not a sound business proposition?" And he said, "That is what I mean."

Well, let us go on with the chronology. The canal was formally disapproved by Secretary Ickes on January 29, 1935, whereupon Florida submitted revised plans and asked that the matter be reopened. As a result, on February 2, 1935, E. H. Foley, Jr., director of P. W. A. legal division, reported adversely upon the project.

A few weeks later, April 10, 1935, the finance division of the P. W. A. reported again adversely on the project.

In view of these findings, the unanimous adverse findings, of all the experts at his command, Secretary Ickes declined to reopen the case; and it stands, so far as P. W. A. and the Department of the Interior are concerned, precisely where it stood on January 29, 1935, when it was rejected as an unsound business proposition.

Well, there was only one way left then, Mr. President, to make this attack upon the Public Treasury and to commit the American people to this amazing experiment at a time when the Treasury is twice empty already. That way was to go up through W. P. A. and the $4,880,000,000 law, with all its latitude and privileges and permits, and get an Executive order to start the canal in spite of the verdict of P. W. A. and in spite of its utter lack of any economic justification whatsoever when the facts are faced in cold reality.

Mind you, Mr. President, it could not have been done under the Relief Act of 1933, because when we passed the emergency relief appropriation of 1933 we had sufficient precaution or wisdom or foresight or something to write a clause into the act requiring any project eligible for Executive allocation to have been either "authorized by Congress or recommended by the Chief of Engineers."

Of course, if the President had been operating under the 1933 act, he could not have made this allocation; but, just because the Congress failed to put those few words into the 1935 act, precisely as the Senator from Missouri argued in connection with the debate upon the point of order, the back door flew open through which this project could enter and attach itself to 200,000,000 potential dollars.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. Let me say to the Senator that the illustration he is now using shows completely the reason for the rule in behalf of the retention of which I was arguing a little while ago, because the 1933 act was recommended by a substantive committee of the Senate and constituted substantive legislation to be passed on by Congress, while the act of 1935 was reported as an appropriation bill from the Appropriations Committee rather than from the committee having jurisdiction of the substantive legislation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator, and I am in complete agreement with his observations.

The result is, Mr. President, that this project finally was inaugurated by an Executive order on September 3, 1935, when the President segregated $5,000,000 and dedicated it to the commencement of the canal adventure. Since then, I believe, there have been two small additional allocations, $200,000 each. If that be correct, the sum total that has been taken out of the emergency relief fund to build the Florida canal is $5,400,000. But that comparatively inconsequential sum is used as a springboard from which to commit Congress to spend the other $195,000,000 subsequently.

This afternoon is the last time the Senate will have a chance as a free agent to decide whether or not it wants that process to proceed. This is the Senate's last chance to decide whether it wants to build the Florida canal, because if Congress upon its responsibility once makes one appropriation in this direction I will freely agree hereafter with the able Senator from Florida that Congress is under moral obligation to continue and conclude the undertaking.

Up until this moment the Congress is a free agent; up until this moment the Senate never has had a chance—and never dreamed that its power was going to be used to put it in the position which it now finds itself—and the Congress never had a chance to say whether this thing should be done. This afternoon the roll will be called to find out whether it should be done; and, I repeat, I find myself in the difficult position of undertaking to present to the Senate the reasons why it should not be done, whereas the Senate ought to be relying upon reports from the experts. However, this adventure is not being proceeded with in the way waterway projects are usually provided for and carried on. The Senate is proposing action outside the ordinary and traditional precautions. So here we are, and the question is, Should we proceed?

Let us not have any doubt whatever about the fact that it is a totally extraordinary procedure by which the Florida canal gets its conception; there is no doubt about that whatever. I quote from a letter to me from Gen. G. B. Pillsbury, Acting Chief of Engineers of the War Department, dated December 25, 1935:

The customary procedure for the authorization of river and harbor projects has not been followed in the authorization of this canal.

That is bad enough, but worse—and this is highly significant—from the same letter I quote:

The review of the Board—

He is referring now to the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers—

The review of the Board has been deferred at the request of local interests desirous of submitting additional data.

In other words, the traditional precautions not only have been abandoned but the attempt to pursue even a pretense of traditional precaution has been interrupted at the request of the proponents of the canal themselves. This phase of the matter would be funny if it were not so sinister.

Now let me submit another exhibit upon this point—and it all fits into the argument made an hour or so ago by the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and justifies every sentence he uttered. General Markham, Chief of Engineers, sent me recently a confidential—mark that word—a confidential abstract prepared from the reports of the special board of Army engineers on the Florida canal. I promptly asked him if he would not permit me to make the abstract public. He answered me under date of February 11, 1936, as follows:

I regret that I am not in a position to authorize the publication of the abstract in question. The reports of this Department are prepared for Congress, and, under a long-standing rule, have been considered as confidential and not for publication until submitted to that body.

So, Mr. President, we are in the further and final anomalous position of being required, through our failure to follow the usual precautions, to decide whether or not this $200,000,000 canal shall be approved before we even can have the benefit of a report which waits this afternoon in the pigeon-hole of General Markham. If that is not an amazing way in which to proceed in respect to the fiscal responsibilities of the Senate, then I am utterly mistaken.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask a question?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No; I am glad to yield?

Mr. KING. I am amazed at the statement made by the Senator. I assume the committee which had this matter before it must have had reports from the engineers and must have had experts and engineers before it and must have obtained full and complete data from the engineering staff of the Army.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me tell the Senator just what the committee had before it. That is a very pertinent inquiry. In the first place, let me remind the Senator that this project was not before the Commerce Committee, which has legitimate jurisdiction of the question of whether or not the canal should be built. The Commerce Committee has never once passed upon the question. The nearest the Commerce Committee ever came to it was to appoint a subcommittee to decide whether or not a resolution of inquiry which I introduced ought or ought not to be adopted.

We are not talking about the Commerce Committee when I reply to the Senator's question. We are talking about the Appropriations Committee, which has no legitimate jurisdiction whatsoever over the question of whether or not the waterway ought to be built. There never has been a decision or any sort of recommendation as to this project by the committee of the Senate with appropriate jurisdiction. I submit to the Senator that even if it were a small casual expenditure, that would be a challenging expenditure, but when it is a $200,000,000 expenditure potentially, it is so utterly challenging that I fail to understand how any Senator can overlook it.

Let me answer the Senator's question. He asks what the Appropriations Committee had to aid it and upon which to base its decision. It had two very partisan statements by laymen, one by a very partisan friend of the project, my very able and distinguished and beloved friend, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and a statement from an equally partisan adversary. I happened to be testifying at that particular moment.

General Markham sat there as a sort of immobile umpire, embarrassed to say too much about what he really thought of the project. I do not want to put any suspicions in his head, but I could not help but wonder, as I looked at him that day, after having read the record of the Hagood case, whether any engineering officer of the Government could be relied upon to be a free witness when discussing the validity of an Executive expenditure. But there he was! He had no testimony whatsoever to offer respecting the inherent merits of the undertaking except to say that he was the contractor hired by the P. W. A. to build the canal, and that so far as he was concerned he proposed to build it, and that he wanted so much money for this year's portion.

Without any exaggeration, that is the extent of the committee consideration which this $200,000,000 proposition has received at the hands of any committee in the Senate. When I subsequently give the Senator some of the testimony which I have taken the trouble to collect to show how utterly fabulous are the pretenses that there is any economic justification, he will, indeed, wish that he could have the recommendation of some expert upon which to base his judgment.

Mr. President, let us see about this canal and whether it is justified. The proponents of the canal have constantly referred to the fact that the Department of Commerce made a survey and are constantly intimating that they are relying upon the recommendations in the report of the Department of Commerce for the economic justification which they plead in behalf of affirmative Senate action this afternoon.

Mr. President, it happens that the report of the Department of Commerce has been exceedingly difficult to obtain, because it was never printed. It is a very voluminous affair involving nearly a 5-foot bookshelf. I laboriously went through the report of the Department of Commerce when Secretary Roper very kindly made it available to me at my request. In the voluminous presentation of the problem by the Department of Commerce—mark you, we have already had the Department of the Interior turning thumbs down upon the project, and now we are over in the Department of Commerce—what does the Department of Commerce say about it? I quote:

The consensus of opinion of that part of the shipping industry with which contact has been established in the preparation of this study appears to be that the probable cost of building the projected waterway is not justified through any benefits which might thereby accrue to the cargo or the vessel.

The decision of the Department of Commerce is that the project is not justified in terms of economic advantage to ships and shipping.

I continue quoting:

The significance of this is that it rests primarily upon the considered opinion of the principal and naturally most interested group, namely, the tanker trade.

Mr. President, why would not ships use the canal if it were available? That question is constantly asked. When I confronted General Markham in our committee hearings with this quotation from the Department of Commerce report which I have just read, to my amazement General Markham said:

I do not understand why the Department of Commerce should say these things would not use the canal. If it is built I would think that, of course, they would use it.

Returning to the question asked a little while ago by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], let me say that the one last quoted was the Chief of Engineers, the man primarily upon whom we must rely for opinion. He had not even made a semblance of an effort to start to commence to get ready to begin to inquire into the justification for this canal. But the report of the Department of Commerce had within it a complete answer, and here it is. I quote further from the report of the Department of Commerce:

A significant question which has been generally raised relates to the length of time a vessel would be confined to restricted waters. It has been pointed out by ship operators that the proposed waterway would be practically twice as long as the world's longest canal—the Suez—and that roughly 30 to 40 hours would be required to move a vessel from open water to open water over this distance. The question reflects directly the reluctance of those responsible for the operation of ships to have them confined to restricted waters.

That is the answer. When we were arguing about the St. Lawrence seaway 2 or 3 years ago the most formidable argument we confronted was that the seaway was not feasible because it involved the enormous hazard of 40 miles of restricted waters out of a total of 2,000 miles. We were told time and time again that 40 miles of restricted waters were a perfectly vital link in that chain. Here is 200 miles of restricted water out of 200 miles. That is the reason why ships and ship operators, the presumed beneficiaries of this undertaking, are not interested in using the canal if constructed.

Let us go a little further. When my distinguished friend the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Jacksonville lobby want to make a case in favor of the economic justification for this canal they rely upon just one thing. They rely upon the fact that if all of the shipping in Gulf and ocean waters in the area should use the canal, then, hypothetically, the net result would be a navigation saving of a certain amount and of a certain advantage.

It seems to me that the testimony of ship operators, the testimony of shipowners, is of far more importance than the hypothetical calculations of some swivel-chair promoters who have not a single, solitary witness to produce to say, "I would use the canal if it were built."

I am coming to that in a minute, but let us first take the hypothetical case; and, I repeat, the advocates of the canal rely exclusively upon these hypothetical calculations for their economic justification.

Returning to the Department of Commerce report, it estimated that the time savings resulted from 9,573 potential transits involved in 1931 would have been approximately 205,000 hours. I am now reading from the Commerce Department report:

For the purpose of evaluating waterway benefits, the operating costs at sea, plus a proportionate share of fixed or capital charges of each vessel for a period equal to the time saved through the use of the waterway was adopted as a measure. So measured, total benefits which would have accrued in 1931 based on 100-percent participation would have been $6,137,500.

I ask Senators to bear in mind that figure. Let us use a round figure, $6,000,000; and I am quoting the Department of Commerce figures, the report upon which the proponents of the canal have relied for their economic justification. The Department of Commerce says that if all the commerce which was available in Gulf and Florida waters in 1931—all of it, without any exception—had used the canal, the net savings in terms of dollars out of navigation and ship-operation costs would have been $6,000,000.

With money over the years averaging the United States a cost of better than 3 percent per annum for the purpose, is a $6,000,000 saving a justification for a $200,000,000 expenditure? Why, we cannot charge a penny's amortization against the principal. We cannot offset a penny of the annual maintenance and operating cost, which is estimated at another million dollars.

We cannot do a thing but pay the naked interest out of the alleged advantages if we concede that the alleged advantages would be realized; and I repeat that the alleged advantages are based upon a 100-percent participation of all eligible traffic in the canal.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. There have been furnished to the Senate no data justifying this enormous appropriation. The Senator is furnishing us facts. I suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that the Senate may get some information on this subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator; but I am sure if the Senators should return it would only be momentarily, because, after all, what is $200,000,000 in these days?

Mr. KING. I confess that that does not awaken very much interest or concern upon the part of Senators. Nevertheless, it does seem to me that Senators ought to be interested in this important project; and if the Senator does not forbid me, I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me forbid the Senator, because I should like not to break the continuity of what I am trying to say.

Mr. KING. Very well, Mr. President.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his interest. I agree with him that there ought to be an interest which does not exist.

Now we are coming to the most interesting part of all about this thing, from my point of view. I have told you what happens upon the basis of a hypothetical calculation of benefits from this canal. I showed you that if all the hypothetical benefits put together should really be achieved, still the net result in terms of navigation dollar savings would only just about pay the interest on the debt involved and would not provide a penny either for amortization or for the annual maintenance and upkeep charges. But, Mr. President, the alarming and the astounding and the shocking thing is that almost none of the hypothetical trade will use the canal after it is built.

This is a magnificent map which hangs upon the wall, with the red footprints of the ships of the world trailing their way around the tip of Florida; and I suppose the presumption is that after that black line is turned into $200,000,000 worth of ditch, all those red footprints are going to trail right down across that black line. The tragedy of the thing is that there is going to be an utterly merciless disillusionment even for the Senator from Florida and his associates and his constituents, because it is perfectly evident from the record that these ship operators do not propose to use this canal at all. They are not interested in it. They do not think it is feasible, and they do not think it is economically justified.

Now, let us see if that is so.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. KING. Why should the Senator say, as his statement would imply, that all the constituents of the senior Senator from Florida favor this canal? I have received communications from some indicating that a very considerable number of the people of Florida are opposed to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, yes; I am coming to that.

Mr. FLETCHER. About 3 percent of them.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Now, let us see who would use the canal; because, after all, that is the common sense, rational test. Is there anybody who wants the canal? Are these hypothetical beneficiaries prepared to take advantage of grace after it is supplied? Let us see.

In 1933, when the canal was still just a more or less vague prospectus, the Board of Rivers and Harbors Engineers sent a questionnaire to 61 shipping concerns. They tell me that those 61 shipping concerns were all the shipping concerns operating in Gulf and Florida waters; and on the basis of a preliminary engineering prospectus, which lacked much detailed information and was more or less of a test question as to the abstract problem involved, the Board of Engineers asked these 61 shipping concerns how they felt about the canal, and whether they would like to have it built, and whether they would probably use it if it were built. Out of 61 shipping concerns, they were able to find just 9 who expressed any interest whatever in the matter; and on the basis of the original conversation we were told that these 9 shipping concerns undoubtedly would use the canal, and, therefore, that there was proof that although only 9 out of 61 were interested, the canal did involve a practical reality.

That was very interesting; so, in 1935, after the canal had ceased to be just a prospectus, just an abstract thing, and had come to be a specific, 30-foot, sea-level canal over an established route, I asked the same question of the same 61 shipping operators: "Do you consider this canal economically justified? Would you use it if it were constructed?" And, Mr. President, all nine of the ship operators who 2 years before had said they might use the canal if it were built unanimously testified that in their judgment the canal lacked any economic justification whatever, and that they did not expect to use it if, as, and when it were completed and opened.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has told us the answers of the nine. What about the remainder?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am coming to the remainder, because the answers of the remainder are even more significant. The nine testified one way at one time and another way at another time, so perhaps that partially invalidates their credibility. Therefore I am even more interested, as the Senator's question indicates he might be, in some of the other answers; but I wish to finish first with the nine. I submit that it does not lie in the mouths of the proponents of the canal to question the credibility of the nine, because the nine were their witnesses, and I was merely cross-examining.

Now, let us see what some of them say. I am not going to burden the Senate with this material in great detail, but I wish to have Senators understand what the practical ship operator thinks about taking $200,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States to dig this ditch.

Here is a letter from the Gulf Refining Co., New York City, signed by James Kennedy:

We have on different occasions made careful surveys of the practical and economical features of such a waterway; but it is our conclusion, from either standpoint—

That is, practical or economical—it is our conclusion, from either standpoint, that even if it were completed, it probably never would be used by our sea-going vessels.

Senators cannot laugh that off.

Now, let us try one or two others.

Here is a letter from the Pennsylvania Shipping Co., Charles Kurz, president, writing under date of January 6, 1936:

Accordingly, and further because of the risk of collision and grounding that would be taken in navigating the canal, it is our present opinion that we would not avail of the canal excepting in case of some emergency.

Let us see what C. D. Mallory & Co., of New York, one of the largest ship-operating outfits, says under date of December 30, 1935:

We are of the opinion that the proposed canal does not offer sufficient saving to warrant serious consideration.

Then the letter goes on to say that they have been down to Florida and looked the thing over, just to see whether or not they might have made a mistake; and their ultimate conclusion is:

Referring to your recent visit and discussion of a canal across the State of Florida: On further consideration we are inclined to hold to our previously expressed view that the proposed canal does not offer sufficient saving to warrant the expense involved.

I have here a letter from the Brooks-Scanlan Corporation, J. S. Holey, president, under date of January 2, 1936, from which I read one sentence:

We have prepared no data on the saving, but it is our belief that it would be useful and timesaving for vessels from the Gulf to the Atlantic. We have sold most of our vessels; therefore we hardly would be interested in the operation of boats through the canal.

That is rather conclusive as to whether or not some of these hypothetical calculations would ultimately justify themselves.

What does the Sinclair Navigation Co. say under date of December 30, 1935? I read:

In our opinion, the navigation savings would not warrant an expenditure of between $140,000,000 to $200,000,000 for this project.

So it goes, Mr. President, so far as these particular nine are concerned. Now I wish to come to the remainder of the traffic.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves the nine, let me ask, Were there any of the nine who were favorable?

Mr. VANDENBERG. No, Mr. President. The nearest of the nine rendering an opinion which might be construed as favorable was the final one I read, which stated that they were out of the business and therefore would not use the canal anyway, but perhaps, if it were built, theoretically it would be a good thing. I say to the Senator categorically that the nine said "No."

This would hardly be considered conclusive because, after all, nine lines do not tell the whole story of the available shipping operations in that area. So let us go to another classification which comes straight down to the core of the whole contemplation. The Department of Commerce survey shows that even in its theoretical calculations, out of the reported navigation savings of $6,137,500, nearly four and a half million dollars of the hypothetical savings will accrue to oil tankers—$4,100,000 to American tankers and $400,000 to foreign tankers. In other words, the oil trade is the chief reliance in building even a hypothetical pretense of economic justification.

Remember the figures, remember I am relying upon the Department of Commerce survey, and remember that it suggests that nearly two-thirds of the traffic must be from oil tankers in order to arrive at even the hypothetical advantage which is claimed in behalf of the undertaking.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I inquire whether the Department of Commerce, before it even ventured that hypothetical opinion, made a survey through competent engineers as to the cost and as to the feasibility of the proposed waterway? My information is that there is a great deal of doubt as to its feasibility, as to the character of the soil, so as to make possible or feasible a project of this character, and I was wondering whether the Department of Commerce relied upon engineers. Did they avail themselves of the engineering staff of the War Department, which deals with these important problems, or did they have an engineering staff of their own?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, it is my recollection that the Department of Commerce was dealing solely with the economic phase, and did not invade the other fields; but others did, and I shall have something further to say of those aspects a little later.

Let us remember about the oil tankers, and the fact that oil tankers would have to be depended on for two-thirds of the hypothetical traffic in order even to make a pretense of justifying this undertaking. Would the oil tankers use the canal? That is a fair question, and certainly it goes squarely to the heart of the problem.

I have already told the Senate what the Sinclair Navigation Co. and the Gulf Refining Co. say. They say "No." I will now read what is said by some of the other operators of oil tankers, not involved in the misunderstanding regarding the nine to which I have heretofore referred.

I read now from a letter written by the Socony Vacuum Oil Co., 26 Broadway, New York City, January 3, 1936:

I have questioned our operating division, as well as the masters on our ships, and the unanimous opinion is that as far as we are concerned this proposed waterway is neither necessary nor desirable. Even if the canal were open to free transportation, without tolls or any other charges, it is very doubtful there would be any advantage in our using it. This being the consensus of opinion of our practical people—

Mr. President, I hope that the opinion of practical people is not entirely ruled out of consideration in these days. It is the opinion of their "practical people who have had years of experience that the expenditure of such a large amount is not warranted."

Let us look at what is said by one or two others of these operators in the tanker trade, which is the major reliance, I remind the Senate again, of the hypothetical justification of this amazing expenditure of public money. I now quote the Cities Service Transportation Co., 60 Wall Tower, New York, December 28, 1935, a letter signed by C. Story, general manager:

We have given this matter considerable attention, and do not feel that the canal will serve a useful purpose except, possibly, locally, and, if it is constructed, it is not our intention to send any of our large tankers through it, even though there are no tolls. In our opinion, the canal is too long for practical navigation.

Mr. President, some of the little red marks on the map, which is to be relied on as exhibit A in the argument to justify this assault upon the Treasury, represent the ships of the Cities Service Transportation Co., which says over its own signature that it does not propose to send its ships through the canal at all.

Let us see about some more of these operators of tankers. I read from the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, December 31, 1935:

It is our opinion that this project is ill advised and is not in conformity with the mature consideration of practical shipping people. In our judgment, the expenditure of $140,000,000 to $200,000,000 on this project is not justified by economic considerations, nor by present or potential traffic, which could profitably make use of the canal.

Therefore, as we do not believe there would be any monetary advantage to this company, in consideration of anticipated delays due to fog, increased collision hazards while in the confined waters of the canal, and added restrictions which would probably be imposed on oil tankers on account of the nature of their cargoes, we do not contemplate using this canal should it be constructed.

Mr. President, surely this practical evidence, from those who must provide the traffic through the canal, if there is to be any, cannot be ignored by the Senate when it makes up its mind upon this enormous expenditure. I could go on with these letters from operators of tankers, but I will not weary the Senate with further detail. I have letters here from the Texas Co. of New York, and the Sun Oil Co. of Philadelphia. I sum up this phrase of the presentation by saying that I have yet to find a single tank operator who has said that he wants the canal, or would use it if it were built, or considers that it is economically justified in its prospective navigation savings.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. It may be that the Senator will take up later in his address the question I have in mind, and if so, I will not ask him to do so at this time; but the question occurs to me, Have any of the potential operators of the canal given any other reasons for their feeling that they would not use the canal if it were built except what the Senator has read?

Mr. VANDENBERG. What I have read is a rather conclusive cross section of their argument. There are other reasons dropping in here and there, such, for instance, as the fear that insurance rates will be very much heavier while ships are transiting the canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator investigated that subject? I am merely seeking information, and I am at once struck with the query, Why will the shipping interests not use the canal if it shall be built even though we assume, for the sake of the argument, that it never ought to be built and would be an economic mistake? I was wondering whether the Senator had received from any of the shipping interests any other reason except the ones to which he has briefly referred.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Was the Senator present when I opened my original consideration of the report of the Department of Commerce?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have heard every word the Senator has said on the subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator remembers the reason given by the Department of Commerce why the canal would not be used, to wit, the restricted waters.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but "restricted waters" is a very indefinite term. I wish to ask a question. It may not be at all important, but in trying to think of reasons for not using the canal it occurred to me that perhaps its length might be one of the reasons, and that the time taken to go through a canal of such length would be as much as it would take to go around the State of Florida from the Gulf to the ocean.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there is a hypothetical saving of time provided the canal can be transited day and night. There is no saving of time if it cannot be transited after dark. On the theory that it can be transited continuously, there is a saving of time; but there are offsets in ship operating costs to the saving of time.

Mr. NORRIS. One of the shippers referred to the question of insurance. Did the Senator look into that question? Would there be increased insurance?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I specifically asked the largest insurance underwriters of New York—because I have scrupulously undertaken to get all the available facts—whether or not rates would be increased on ships transiting the canal. The answer was that it is impossible to make a prophecy until the canal is built or operating regulations are established, so that all available factors upon which rates are based are in hand. The operating regulations would have more to do with the size and nature of the insurance rates than anything else.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Speaking of restrictions in the canal, is it not true that the Department of Commerce was considering a lock canal; that is to say, the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors considered a canal with three locks in it, and that is what the Department had under consideration? Since then the Board has provided for a sea-level canal without locks.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, all the letters I have been quoting are in reference to the proposed sea-level program now being pursued in the construction of the canal.

Mr. NORRIS. That reminds me of another question which was one of the very vital questions when we were considering the construction of the Panama Canal. Is there any difference between the height of the water in the Atlantic Ocean where the canal starts and the height of the water in the Gulf of Mexico, at the other end of the canal?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I judge not, in view of the fact that the engineers are planning a sea-level canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Then why is anybody talking about a lock canal? How could a lock canal be built in a level country?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It could be done in connection with a phase of the matter that I have not reached, namely, that engineers have said that if there is a menace to the groundwater supply of central and southern Florida from a sea-level canal, it may be obviated by building a lock canal.

Mr. NORRIS. If a lock canal should be built, it could not be supplied with water either from the ocean or from the Gulf of Mexico. It would have to be supplied with water from rivers or from some other source. Is that not obvious?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Unless someone is thinking of supplying the water from rivers that are of a higher elevation, I cannot understand how it would be possible, in a canal of that kind, to have such a thing as a lock.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot answer the Senator's question; and, of course, he cannot find any testimony in any Senate or House committee hearings which will answer his question. That is the vice of the method under which we proceed—snap judgments on the floor of the Senate, without the advantage of any professional and dependable advice; no presentation of the matter save the voluntary, casual argument that one Senator happens to be making because he was challenged by the nature and extent of this amazing enterprise.

Mr. President, there is another phase of the matter. It has been argued that this canal would be a great boon to shipping because of the dreadful hazard in the Florida Gulf waters; but here, again, realities do not appear when summoned to examination. Florida waters are not nearly so deadly as they are painted for the purpose of getting this appropriation. I asked the United States Coast Guard, which is the official source of information, for a report upon this proposition so as to discover whether or not these waters are so stormy that the construction of a $200,000,000 canal is necessary as a contribution to save life at sea. I asked the United States Coast Guard about it. What do you suppose they told me? They sent me a very complete chart which shows that in the past 16 years just one passenger's life has been lost in all these related waters put together. That is the horrible hazard to safety of life at sea which is involved in this contemplation and in this proposition; and, Mr. President, the average maritime property loss in these waters during the past 16 years has been less than $250,000.

It does not make the slightest difference on what basis we make our approach to this amazing expenditure. So far as I am concerned, I am utterly unable to find the slightest justification for it, of any name or nature.

Something else is involved; and this is a matter of home consideration in the State of Florida, so I rather hesitate to say anything about it. Certainly I do not represent the State of Florida in the Senate; but if half the State of Florida thinks it is going to be ruined by this canal—I do not mean economically, I mean physically—somebody ought to present that contemplation for the benefit of whatever consideration Senators wish to give it.

There is involved in this matter another consideration which goes to the responsibility which the Senate must assume when it decides to validate this amazing undertaking. I suppose there is no more distinguished citizen in the State of Florida than Mr. Frank B. Shutt, publisher of the Miami Herald at Miami, Fla. I read a letter dated March 12, 1936, signed by Mr. Shutt. He is not only a distinguished newspaper proprietor but he is one of the leaders at the Florida bar:

DEAR SIR: The Miami Herald—

Referring to his own newspaper—is a Democratic newspaper, and it is supporting generally the policies of the New Deal.

I do not know what that has to do with this contemplation, except that perhaps Mr. Shutt is apologizing in advance for not being able to come along with this particular policy of the New Deal.

Continuing the reading:

It has, however, consistently opposed the creation of the Florida cross-State canal. It has used every good argument at its command. As owner and publisher of the Herald, I have been accused of ulterior motives—

Says Mr. Shutt—

The Miami Daily News—

That is the other great Miami daily newspaper—the Herald's competitor, is owned by ex-Governor James M. Cox, of Ohio, one-time candidate for President on the Democratic ticket. Perhaps he would not be accused of ulterior motives.

Enclosed I hand you clipping of an article which appeared in the March 11 issue of Governor Cox's paper.

It is worthy of and entitled to Senators' prayerful consideration. I am going back to the enclosure in a minute. First, I wish to finish Frank Shutt's letter. This is not my testimony. This is not any external testimony. The one who is speaking is one of the leading citizens of southern Florida from any possible aspect from which one wishes to measure it.

In my judgment, if the Florida cross-State canal is completed within 10 years, probably within your time and mine, the greater part of south Florida may be another great American desert, open only to the winds, a magnificent territory as it now exists—then lost to the world.

That sounds like a very extravagant statement. Perhaps it is. In the past 6 weeks, since it has become known that I was interesting myself in the pursuit of facts in connection with this canal, I desire to say to the Senate that I have received literally thousands of letters from all over central and southern Florida voicing this precise fear. The letters are written obviously in the greatest of good faith and in the most earnest contemplation of what the writers believe to be an irreparable hazard confronting the underground water supply of the State of Florida.

What is the enclosure from Governor Cox's paper to which Mr. Shutt refers in the letter I have just read? The article from Governor Cox's paper says:

Florida Canal imperils water, scientist finds.

The next headline:

Dr. Henry Sharp, Columbia geologist, points out seepage danger.

I read only this one paragraph from the article:

New York, March 11.—Florida's water supply will be jeopardized by construction of the proposed Atlantic-Gulf ship canal, Dr. Henry S. Sharp, geologist of Columbia University, asserts in the current issue of the Independent Journal, university publication.

Dr. Sharp, after a study of the project, prompted by his interest in geomorphology, or geologic changes, believes "all geologists unite in predicting that the canal will cause some damage to the water supply, while a considerable number believe that it will prove to be a textbook example of the large-scale destruction of water resources by artificial interference with underground flow."

That may or may not be true. I am no geologist. I do not presume to say what value should be attached to the testimony. But it is one more of those things, Mr. President, which indicate the iniquity of the process we pursue when we try to solve a problem of this nature on the floor of the Senate, instead of by the traditional routine which brings us conclusive expert recommendation to which we can turn and upon which we can rely.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Admitting entirely the force of the argument made by this geologist, still the Senator ought to read, if the editorial will bear out such construction, enough of the editorial from Governor Cox's paper to justify the comment made by the editor and publisher of the other paper. Governor Cox would not be at all blamable so far as the Senator has offered evidence yet, because there is no editorial comment or opinion, but it is a matter of news entirely, under a New York date line. I simply suggest in passing that if the editorial bears out the statement made about the proposal in the other newspaper it ought to be read to the Senate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It bears it out in great detail. I have not brought with me this afternoon all the geologic exhibits which are available in this connection because, frankly, I did not care to invade this particular field other than to indicate its existence. I do not know which side is right or wrong in connection with the argument respecting Florida's geology. All those in central and southern Florida produce their experts to say that it is to be ruined by the infiltration of saline water into its fresh water supply and through the lowering and depletion of the water supply upon which its citrus industry depends. All those in northern Florida who believe in the canal produce their geologists or experts to say this will not happen. The Senator can choose his own experts. As usual, they are available upon both sides. However, that is not the point which I am stressing.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the point I tried to make. I admit all the Senator says about the experts. I do not know who is right. I am like the Senator in that respect. However, the Senator has read from one newspaper a statement in which it was said that Governor Cox editorially had opposed this proposal. I submit the Senator has not read anything from Governor Cox to show that he has editorially opposed it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator is in error. The letter from Mr. Shutts said that he, Mr. Shutts, had editorially opposed it, and that he was enclosing an article from the opposition paper bearing upon the same proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and he said further certainly they would not make any charges against him as opposing the New Deal. I submit again that all the Senator read from the other paper is no statement whatever as to the attitude of the owner or publisher or editor of that newspaper on this question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will have to leave the Senator to whatever consolation he can get out of that situation. I have not the remainder of the exhibits with me. In my view the point raised does not bear the slightest upon the real proposition which is involved. Let us see what the United States Geological Survey has said. Never mind Mr. Shutts and Governor Cox, let us see what the United States Geological Survey has said:

There appears to be no reasonable doubt that serious adverse effects will be produced upon the important underground water supplies of the Ocala limestone in a wide zone extending outward from the canal line by the construction of a sea-level canal along route 13-B.

That is the route now being followed by this amazing undertaking. Not only may we rely upon the United States Geological Survey but upon the State geologist, Mr. Herman Gunter, who arrives at precisely the same conclusion.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will not construe from my remarks that I am questioning these authorities. I am not by any means. I only wanted to call attention to what seemed to me ought to be rectified in the RECORD. It is said by one paper that Governor Cox's paper is opposing the canal. If it is not, it is probably an injustice to him to let that assertion stand uncontradicted. I do not pretend to know. I have no knowledge about it. I am saying that as a matter of fairness to Governor Cox.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I repeat to the Senator that the letter said nothing of the sort. The letter said Mr. Shutts had editorially opposed the canal, and then he referred to Governor Cox only as follows:

Perhaps he would not be accused of ulterior motives. Enclosed I hand you clipping of an article which appeared in the March 11 issue of Governor Cox's paper. It presents in powerful form one and only one of the arguments against the canal. It is worthy of and entitled to your prayerful consideration.

That still refers to Governor Cox.

Mr. NORRIS. The article enclosed under a New York date line said that the geologists had claimed that the canal would be damaging to the water supply. That is a matter of news, I suppose, and whether a man were in favor of or against the canal, if he wanted to be at all fair he would print it in the newspaper as a matter of news.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I am totally at a loss to understand the point the Senator is trying to make.

Mr. NORRIS. I am sorry. I probably should not have interrupted the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me totally inconsequential in respect to the main show.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit it is a side show, but the Senator himself brought it in. There is an implication there that Governor Cox's paper is opposing the canal. In order to prove that, a news item out of Governor Cox's paper is produced from New York quoting a geologist, entirely as a matter of news, to the effect that in the opinion of the geologist there would be damage. I simply wanted to prevent, and I supposed the Senator would join with me, any insinuation that the other newspaper at Miami, Governor Cox's paper, was opposing the canal.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the other newspaper is or is not opposing the canal, let the fact be established. I have not said it was or was not. Mr. Shutts has not said it was or was not.

Mr. NORRIS. I submit Mr. Shutts said it was.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. Shutts said he is opposing the canal and considers it utterly fatal to the welfare of Florida, and he submitted from Governor Cox's paper a clipping quoting a great geologist as supporting that conclusion. It does not make any difference to me whether or not Governor Cox is for the canal or whether or not Shutts is for the canal.

Mr. NORRIS. Nor to me.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The important thing to my mind is to demonstrate the division of opinion upon the proposition in Florida solely for this purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption at that point?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. Miami is 365 miles south of the proposed canal. The canal would no more affect the water supply of Miami than the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, between Washington and Harpers Ferry, affects the water supply of Washington. I do not believe Mr. Shutts really believes the statement made in the letter, but, at any rate, I think we might understand that Miami is somewhat concerned because of the apprehension that Miami commerce and trade might be adversely affected by the construction of the canal. I do not think that would happen at all. I think it would help Miami commerce and trade rather than otherwise, but I think that apprehension is at the bottom of the opposition of Mr. Shutts.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am glad to have the Senator's testimony. He may put whatever construction he pleases upon the opposition of Miami and his other constituents in southern Florida. Eighty chambers of commerce and other civic bodies of Florida have petitioned the President of the United States within the past 6 weeks to stop this thing lest it ruin them. They may be 300 miles away from the canal, as the Senator says Miami is, and yet they may still be tremendously concerned about the potential ruin of the great citrus-fruit industry of Florida, upon which, after all, the great cities of the State rely for at least a portion of their prosperity and commerce.

If I had known that this phase of the matter was to be pursued in this particular fashion—and I am yet so dumb that I fail to understand what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is trying to inject into the debate—I would have brought innumerable exhibits from the State of Florida to demonstrate the very definite reality of fear respecting what may happen to two-thirds of the peninsula if, as, and when this thing is done.

That, however, is not the point I make. The point I make is that here is a situation where we have experts upon one side who say, "Yes; this canal is going to ruin central and southern Florida"; and we have experts upon the other side whom, I freely concede, my able friend the senior Senator from Florida can quote for hours, saying, "No; the canal will not ruin central and southern Florida." Unfortunately, however, we cannot find out whether the canal will ruin central and southern Florida until the canal is completed and in operation, and the ruin has occurred, if it should occur. If it should occur, and it should happen that the gentlemen in the north of Florida guessed wrong instead of right, I wonder if the Senate can contemplate the extent of the damages which central and southern Florida would be asking the Government of the United States to pay to compensate the State for the Government's wanton trespass upon the State's fundamental natural resources.

When we went to Florida to kill the Mediterranean fruit fly we were welcomed with our millions to kill the fly; and when we had the fly killed—although I understand there never actually was one—we were asked to pay for all the fruit we destroyed while we were killing the fly. [Laughter.] Mr. President, what do you suppose will happen if it develops that this canal does do to central and southern Florida the horrible thing which so many of its citizens believe it will do? Inevitably we will confront a climaxing damage charge besides which $200,000,000 is mere chicken feed.

What is there about this project which justifies taking any such chance as that? It has not any justification on the basis of economics. It has not any justification on the basis of ship operators who say they expect to use it if it is built. It has not any justification on the basis of the value that ought to accrue to an investment of $200,000,000 of the public money. It has not any justification on the basis of conclusive reports from the Board of Rivers and Harbors engineers, because there has not been any conclusive report; and this is the first time in 100 years that it has been proposed to launch a project of this sort without a conclusive report from the Board of Rivers and Harbors engineers. It has not a leg on earth to stand on, except that it was launched as a $5,000,000 work-relief project.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, this is the one and only and last time that the Senate may say whether it desires to have this canal built. If we vote to appropriate this little installment of the cost, we certainly shall be morally committed to the appropriation of the entire balance during the next 6, 8, or 10 years before the work is completed. So far as I am concerned, I should infinitely rather give Florida another $5,000,000 by executive decree to fill up what has already been dug than to waste another $190,000,000 by proceeding to conclude the undertaking.

At a time when the public credit is at low ebb, at a time when the Government already is spending $2 for every dollar we take in, at a time when Congress is about to be confronted with a demand from the President for a new tax revenue of a billion dollars, I submit that there is not one scintilla of justification on the face of the living earth for a responsible Senate of the United States to commit our people to any such enterprise as this.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an interrogatory?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to inquire if there is any record of any committee where the facts which have been discussed by the Senator from Michigan, and similar facts, may be found?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, unfortunately, there is no complete record. I can only refer the Senator, first, to the printed hearings of the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce taking testimony upon my resolution to investigate the canal. There is a partial summation of the case in that document. I can then refer the Senator to the printed hearings upon the War Department appropriation bill, in which the able senior Senator from Florida and I debated the problem for an hour before the committee. Beyond that, I can refer the Senator to nothing official under the Senate's mark, because, unfortunately, this thing never has had the formal, traditional consideration which projects of this sort usually do have.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the Senate owes an expression of gratitude to the Senator from Michigan for bringing these facts to our attention at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, with regard to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont, I wish to call his attention to the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, and ask him to read the hearings. They are not very extensive; but the Senator will get a history and a correct record of this whole matter if he will read the testimony of Mr. H. H. Buckman in the hearings. By doing so he can save a great deal of time, and obtain the information he desires.

I will send the Senator a copy of the hearings if he likes, and especially call his attention to the testimony of Mr. Buckman, which reviews the whole history of the question, and the records in the case.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if it is agreeable to our leader, I suggest that we let this matter go over until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well, Mr. President. I understand the Senator from Florida would like to have that course taken.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is immaterial to me, but I am agreeable to anything.

W. W. COOK—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO 187)

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, S. 1837 (74th Cong., 2d sess.), entitled "An act for the relief of W. W. Cook."

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. W. Cook, of Pella, Iowa, the sum of $30, in full settlement of his claim against the United States for the refund due him on two broker's special tax stamps, no liability to such special tax having been incurred by him. The bill would authorize and direct the payment notwithstanding the fact that a claim for the refund of such tax was filed after the expiration of the period of limitations provided by law for the filing of such claims.

On several occasions there have been submitted to me other bills which proposed to except certain taxpayers from the operation of the statutes of limitations pertaining to the revenue laws by extending the time for the refunding of certain taxes to such taxpayers. On those occasions I expressed my accord with the enacted policy of Congress that it is sound to include in all revenue acts statutes of limitations, by the operation of which, after a fixed period of time, it becomes impossible for the Government to collect additional taxes or for the taxpayer to obtain a refund of an overpayment of taxes. I pointed out in each instance that such legislation selects a small class of taxpayers for special treatment by excepting them from that policy, thus discriminating against the whole body of Federal taxpayers, and establishing a precedent which would open the door to relief in all cases in which the statute operates to the prejudice of a particular taxpayer, while leaving the door closed to the Government in those cases in which the statute operates to the disadvantage of the Government.

In this regard the instant measure, S. 1837, does not differ in principle from the bills which were under consideration on those prior occasions. I know of no circumstances which would justify the exception made by S. 1837 to the long-continued policy of Congress. Again I must express my belief that the field of special legislation should not be opened to relieve special classes of taxpayers from the consequences of their failure to protect their claims for the refund of taxes within the period fixed by law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 16, 1936.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, MARCH 16, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who hast brought us again fresh to the morning light and revealed Thyself as a loving Father, we praise Thee that we are not cast down because of our imperfections. We pray that we may rise into the blessedness of hope and cheer, looking for the things that are excellent in one another. Enable us to be, our Father, always considerate and kind, reflecting Thy loving nature, and thereby dignifying our associations. May we so take heart in this quiet moment that we shall be faithful and thoughtful all the day through. Add to our souls a finer spiritual beauty; if our thoughts be dark, clarify them with the spirit of disinterested love. Above all, may we not forget that living is giving; may our desire for rest or gain keep us from no helpful act. Thus let the day close, blessed Lord, on hours well spent. Through Christ. Amen.

IS PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S TAX PROGRAM CONSTRUCTIVE?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein some remarks I made over the radio last evening.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I delivered yesterday over the radio:

Ladies and gentlemen, the subject selected for discussion this evening results from the special message sent to Congress by President Roosevelt 12 days ago, in which he suggested the necessity for legislation to levy taxes to meet current expenses. The necessity for most of these taxes grew out of two occurrences which have happened since the President sent his Budget message to Congress at the beginning of the present session of Congress: One was the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States holding the Agricultural Adjustment Act unconstitutional. That decision necessitates the raising of about $1,000,000,000 in some other way than originally proposed. The other event was the enactment into law by Congress, over the President's veto, of the bill to pay, immediately, the adjusted-service-compensation certificates, popularly known as the bonus, instead of payment being made in 1945, as provided in the original act. To meet that payment now, one hundred and twenty million additional revenue will be necessary this year.

To procure this additional revenue, the President suggested, for the consideration of Congress, the levying of taxes on the earned-income surpluses of corporations.

In passing, it might not be amiss for all of us to recall that, while taxes of all kinds are exceedingly unpopular, our Government has no other source of revenue to meet its expenses. Many other governments procure a great part of their needed revenue from the government engaging in business; in fact, having a monopoly on certain businesses, such as tea, coffee, liquor, matches, and the like. In our Government every cent spent must be provided by taxes, such as the personal-income taxes, corporation-income taxes, liquor taxes, tobacco taxes, excise taxes, custom taxes, estate and gift taxes, and others.

Of course, taxing corporations is not new. They are paying at the present time about $1,000,000,000 by way of a tax on their net earnings. This is only 8 cents of every dollar spent by the Government. Incidentally, it is worthy to note, in view of the widespread complaint against personal-income taxes, that only 7 cents of each dollar spent is paid by the few million of income-tax payers. The proposal to levy a special or new form of tax on the surplus incomes of corporations is neither new nor novel. It has been discussed for years in Congress and elsewhere. In three Congresses I have introduced such a proposal. Naturally, I believe the President's tax program is constructive, and I am not so sure but what the National Association of Manufacturers, my opponent on this evening's broadcast, will yet endorse it.

Immediately upon the President's message going to the country, discussion became widespread as to the wisdom and effect of such a proposal. Sides were taken immediately on the question, long before the proposal was even partly digested. The stock market reacted; chambers of commerce again "resolved"; and editors approved or lamented the proposal, often in accordance with their political leanings. Since then the news is carried extensively daily as to the progress being made or not being made by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in its consideration of the matter. Although I am not a member of that great committee, I feel I can say that it is proceeding carefully in the matter, as it always does, and that no report as to its present attitude toward any proposal or any part of any feature of such proposal is authentic. Thoughtful citizens will suspend judgment until the President's proposal assumes definite shape in the form of a bill. There will be plenty of time then for all persons interested to register any protest.

The proposal to tax the surplus incomes of corporations is supported on the following grounds:

Income taxation promotes prosperity. It is not a burden on industry nor does it increase the cost of doing business. If there is no profit, there is no tax. Such taxes tend to promote and stabilize prosperity. As against the argument that such a tax would interfere with the expansion of business, the fact is, that the tax would put a brake on the over-expansion of production facilities. It would keep money in circulation. It would enlarge the buying power of the general public by reason of dividend distributions.

The further fact is, that today individuals are taxed at a very much higher rate than corporations with an equal amount of income. Because of this, large holders of stock in corporations see to it that corporate earnings are not distributed in dividends to themselves, or other stockholders, for the humanly selfish reason that on such a distribution they might have to pay to their Government as much as 50 percent, or even more, of such earnings, whereas the corporation pays, at most, 15 percent.

Under such a bill as proposed, the Government would probably not derive its revenue directly from the corporations. The tax, whether it be 33½ percent, or greater or less, would, in all probability, not be paid by the corporations. What would undoubtedly happen would be that the corporations would distribute their earnings to their stockholders who would pay the taxes to the Government.

It is notorious that some large corporations, which are closely controlled have for years unjustly withheld their earnings from their stockholders, so that the large stockholders, who do not need the money, would not be obliged to pay high surtaxes on their own dividend distributions. While beneficial to these comparatively few individuals, it has worked an injustice to the small stockholders, who have needed the money and who would immediately put it into circulation, and thus increase our purchasing power.
